John Law (a gambler, who had been forced to flee from Scotland for dueling and who had been expelled from two continental cities as an "undesirable") came to Paris and suggested to Philip a scheme for wiping out France's national debt and putting the country, financially, on its feet. The idea, roughly, was this:

To establish a state bank that should handle all public funds and to run it in connection with a company for exploiting Louisiana and the rest of the Mississippi region. (New Orleans was named in honor of Philip.) The shores of the Mississippi were supposed to be lined with rich gold and silver mines.

The boom began. Shares that were issued at $100 ran up to $4,000. Law promised annual dividends of 120 per cent. on the stock. France went money-mad. People clamored for a chance to invest in the wonderful scheme. Law paid the dividends in treasury notes, which may or may not have had some genuine value. But whatever value they had was at once ruined by Philip, who proceeded to print paper money in huge quantities for his own use and for other purposes, without bothering about the fact that there was not nearly enough real money in the bank to justify it.

Everybody had money (made of paper.) Beggars bought mansions Servants drove in gilded coaches. Poverty seemed abolished. And as paper money flooded the country the price of everything from soup to diamonds rose with it. Calico, for instance, cost as much as had silk. But no one cared. For everybody seemed to have plenty of paper currency.

A few wise people tried to "cash in" their paper notes for gold and silver. Philip quickly stopped this by declaring it illegal for any one to possess more than a certain amount of genuine money and by punishing those who tried to get rid of their paper notes.

Then, all at once the scheme fell flat. The "Mississippi Bubble" burst. Panic raged. Thousands were impoverished. John Law fled the country.

Philip alone escaped and lived on in dissolute comfort. He died in 1723, aged 49, his health prematurely shattered by the wild life he had led.

Force of Lightning

The amount of light given by a single lightning flash is enough, an electrician calculates, to illuminate an area of two square miles. The bolt itself would be visible several miles further off, but the remotest part of the region mentioned would have as much light as would be given by a candle—quite enough to read by.

To produce such a light it would be necessary to expend 12,000 horse-power for a second. These figures appear large, but the time is short. The flash might be for only 1-1,000 part of a second, but the impression on the eye would continue for a tenth of a second anyway. Reckoned down to an exact hour, this moment of force would mean only about four horse-power.

The question of how the static electricity gets into the clouds is difficult to answer. One theory is that it is [illegible] and are there readily collected by particles of moisture. When the particles of moisture condense they form heavy thunder clouds, and this formation of raindrops causes the lightning flashes as explained.

ONLY THING IS TO FIND HER

Every Man Has an Affinity Somewhere on the Earth, Is a Law of Nature.

Every man has a best girl waiting for him somewhere in the world. The moment that he is born, the catalogue clerk in Time's great factory assigns him to a best girl or else puts him on the waiting list.

There is no escaping your best girl. No matter where she may be born or how far apart from her you were when you started, the inevitable attraction will work your destiny, and when you meet you will both know it.

All that is lacking is the material realization, and inasmuch as all ideas eventually find their way to the surface, yours is bound to come.

Sometimes a man's best girl is homely; sometimes her mouth is not a cupid's bow, and her features are irregular; that makes no difference; he will love her just the same when he meets her.

Also, she may be another man's wife. Such things have been known.

Here's hoping that it will not happen to you.—Life.

WHITE PIMPLES ON HEAD

Ransom, Ill.—"The trouble started on our baby when he was only about two weeks old. Started like little white pimples, looked like an old scab of blood and matter. His whole head was covered for a few months, then it went to his ear, shoulders, and his whole body. It seemed to come out thick and sticky on his head, while on the other parts of his body it was more like water coming out of the skin. He would scratch until the eruption would be all covered with blood and gradually spread. The least little stir or rub would cause the sores to bleed, spread and itch. Never had a full night's sleep, restless all night.

"The sores were horrid to look at. It lasted until he was about two and a half years old. Then we saw an eczema advertisement in the paper to use ———, but it did no good. Then we used Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. We put the Cuticura Ointment on thick at bed time and put a tight hood on so he could not scratch the sores. Then we washed it clean with Cuticura Soap and warm water twice a day, and he was completely cured." (Signed) Mrs. E. F. Sulzberger, Dec. 30, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."

Time for Patriotism.

The organist was not lacking in patriotism, yet he rebelled when requested to play "The Star-Spangled Banner" at a wedding.

"It is not appropriate," said he.

"Ain't it?" said the bride's father. "For this wedding it is the most appropriate thing you can play. Cut all the rest of the program, if you like, but stick to that. I had the hardest kind of a fight to keep Bell's mother from marrying her off to a foreigner. Between Belle and me we won out for an American and if this isn't the time for the 'Star-Spangled Banner,' I'd like to know what is."

RECORD OF A GREAT MEDICINE

Doctors Could Not Help Mrs. Templeton—Regained Health through Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Hooper, Nebraska.—"I am very glad to tell how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me. For five years I suffered from female troubles so I was scarcely able to do my work. I took doctors' medicines and used local treatments but was not helped. I had such awful bearing down pains and my back was so weak I could hardly walk and could not ride. I often had to sit up nights to sleep and my friends thought I could not live long. At my request my husband got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I commenced to take it. By the time I had taken the seventh bottle my health had returned and I began doing my washing and was a well woman. At one time for three weeks I did all the work for eighteen boarders with no signs of my old trouble returning. Many have taken your medicine after seeing what it did for me. I would not take $1000 and be where I was. You have my permission to use my name if it will aid anyone."—Mrs. SUSIE TEMPLETON, Hooper, Nebraska.

The Pinkham record is a proud and peerless one. It is a record of constant victory over the obstinate ills of woman—ills that deal out despair. It is an established fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored health to thousands of such suffering women. Why don't you try it if you need such a medicine?

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientific for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng. and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. Fougera Co., 90 Beekman St., New York.

VETO AGAIN IGNORED

THE HOUSE PUTS STEEL BILL THROUGH TWO HOURS AFTER TAFT HAD SENT IT BACK.

PASS COTTON MEASURE

Senate Passes Democratic Bill—Senator LaFollette's Substitute Voted Down 46 to 16.

Washington, D. C. — Repeating its action of Tuesday, when it passed the wool tariff bill over President Taft's veto, the house repassed the steel and iron tariff bill, within two hours after it had been returned from the white house with the president's veto message. The vote was 173 to 83, a margin of only two votes over the two-thirds necessary to over-ride the president. The senate at almost the same time was engaged in passing the democratic cotton tariff bill, sent them a week ago by the house. Senator La Follette's substitute, which represented the views of the tariff board, was voted down, 46 to 16, and Mr. La Follette and eight other progressive republicans later joined the democrats and passed the cotton bill, 36 to 19.

Reciprocity Repealed.

An amendment was attached repealing all but the pulp and paper section of the Canadian reciprocity law. The repassed steel bill was sent immediately to the senate and reposed with the wool bill among the papers technically on the desk of the president of the senate. Both measures will be called upon at once by Senator Simmons and an attempt will be made to repass them. But the democratic leaders have little hope that they can obtain the necessary two-thirds vote in the senate as they did in the house.

Insurgent forces in both the house and senate contributed to the success of the democratic tariff program. In the house the 16 insurgents who voted with the democrats Tuesday again joined them in over-riding the president's veto, while nine insurgents in the senate joined them in the passage of the democratic cotton bill.

Republicans who voted with the democrats in the house were:

Republicans Who Voted.

Aiken of New York; Davis, Lindbergh and Steenerson of Minnesota; Haugen and Woods of Iowa; Kent of California; Kinkaid, Norris and Sloan of Nebraska; Lafferty of Oregon; La Follette of Washington; Reese, Jackson and Young of Kansas, and Morse of Wisconsin.

The insurgents who joined the democrats in the senate on the cotton bill were:

Borah of Idoha; Bourne of Oregon; Briston of Kansas; Clapp of Minnesota; Cummins and Kenyon of Iowa; La Follette of Wisconsin; Poindexter of Washington, and Works of California.

CLAIMS 34 STATES

Hilles Includes Minnesota in List Issued.

Chicago, Ill. — Charles D. Hilles, chairman of the Republican National committee, has issued a statement claiming 34 states with a total electoral vote of 384, for the republican ticket and conceding 10 states to the democratic party, and listing four states, with an electoral vote of 34, as doubtful.

Chairman Hilles concedes no state to the progressive party.

Northwest states are claimed for Taft as follows: Iowa, 13; Minnesota, 12; Montana, 4; North Dakota, 5; South Dakota, 5; Wisconsin, 13.

Steers Bring Record Prices.

Chicago, Illinois.—Steers reached the highest price ever paid on the Chicago exchange when a load of Indiana fed heifers, Herefords, sold at $10.50 a hundredweight. A number of steers were sold for $10 or better.

Clash Over Administration.

Cleveland, Ohio.—The annual convention of the International Typographical union was featured by strenuous opposition to an administration measure to amend the by-laws to make the terms of the international officers four years. C. A. Burton of Fort Worth, Texas, declared that the measure was an attempt to perpetuate the national officers in office. The anti-administrationists forced a vote and the measure was defeated. Nashville and New York seek the 1913 convention.

OLD MARSHALL HOMESTEAD

House in North Manchester, Ind., Where Democratic Candidate for Vice-President Was Born.

North Manchester, Ind.—Though it has withstood the storms of more than sixty years, and two bouts with the house movers, the little house in which Thomas R. Marshall, governor of Indiana, and Democratic candidate for vice-president, was born, stands today well to the north end of Walnut street, in North Manchester, Indiana, in a better state of preservation than many houses of half its age and experience.

In 1854 the house stood on the lot fronting on Main street, that is now occupied by the Lawrence National bank, and was occupied by Dr. Daniel Marshall, who, besides doctoring the sick, was also a merchant of considerable importance, being connected with his brothers in managing the biggest store of this locality at that time. As time went on they disposed of this store, and after the war broke out the doctor moved with his family to Pierceton, when the future governor was slightly over six years of age. Men who have grown gray remember Thomas Marshall as a boy, but he was too young when his folks left for him to build a new home to take the place

Birthplace of Thomas R. Marshall.

The building in which he was born was moved from its first location to give room to a business building, and was occupied for several years by John H. Shively, but when he wanted to build a new homo to take the place of the old building, it passed into new hands, being sold to Bart Krisher, son of D. W. Krisher. He moved it to its present location, made a few repairs, put on some fresh paint and the house is as neat and attractive in looks today as many of the newer buildings around it.

PRISONER, FREE, COMES BACK

Workhouse Trusty Returns After Trip to Town for Supplies.

St. Louis, Mo.—Alexander Hunter, who still had sixteen months of a workhouse sentence to serve, is pursuing a plan of behavior which will win for him probably an early parole.

When the city authorities decided to turn Chesley island into a farm where inebriates could be kept, its superintendent, Calvin J. White, decided to send Hunter to the farm as a trusty to supervise the work.

Hunter cheerfully accepted the task and began to build a fence. The posts having been put down, he found himself in need of a wire stretcher.

Taking a boat, he rowed alone and unwatched down the river to Kimmswick, but could not find what he wanted there. He then took a train, came to St. Louis, bought the wire stretcher and returned.

"How in the world did you get here?" Superintendent White asked when he stepped off the car and went to the workhouse. "Came up on the train," Hunter answered.

"What do you want?" White asked. Hunter explained and was returned the money he had spent for car fare. He went back to the island and now reports that he has most of the wire around the new stockade put up.

Hunter was sentenced to a two years' term in the workhouse on four charges of larceny, six months on each count.

CORSET COVER AS A NOOSE

Woman Makes a Strange Rope With Which to Hang Herself in Newark.

Asbury Park, N. J.—Making a noose of her coret cover, Annie Spellman, thirty years old, hanged herself in her room in the Ocean Grove home of J. F. Slattery of 50 Shanley street, Newark. She had come from Ireland less than a year ago.

The muslin rope broke after she had been hanging for some time, and when her body fell to the floor the sound alarmed Mrs. Slattery, who ran to the room and found the woman dead.

Brief Mention of What Is Transpiring in Various Sections of Our Own and Foreign Countries.

Congress.

President Taft sent in a veto message of the wool bill

The general deficiency appropriation bill passed the house.

Congress may adjourn August 17, or it may hold one week longer.

The Oldfield bill to revise the patent laws was favorably reported in the house.

The house served notice on the senate that the Bristow-Lodge sugar bill would not be accepted.

The senate refused to take up several special bills and cleaned the way for appropriation measures.

Senator Kenyon's bill to compel jail sentences for anti-trust law violators was placed upon the calendar.

The Military committee of the house favorably reported the bill appropriating $100,000 for relief of refugees from Mexico.

The senate agreed to the house amendments to the proposed law to regulate wireless telegraph. The bill now goes to President Taft.

The house rules committee received a memorial from Mrs. M. W. Littleton urging congressional action on the purchase of "Monticello."

The senate judiciary committee agreed to hear Senator Pomerene's resolution directing the attorney general to prosecute officials of the Standard Oil and American Tobacco companies.

The senate adopted the amendment to the Panama bill admitting to American registry American owned foreign built ships engaged exclusively in foreign trade, providing lower tolls for ships in ballast and free tolls to American owned foreign built ships.

The Panama canal administration bill providing free passage to American ships, prohibiting railroad owned vessels from using the waterway and authorizing the establishment of a one-man government, when the canal is completed, was passed by the senate by a vote of 47 to 15.

General.

The progressive convention opened in a harmonious manner.

An American food famine is the prediction of agricultural exports.

No action will be taken by the senate at this session on the omnibus claims bills.

At Reno, Nev., Mrs. Edna G. Hull filed complaint against Henry Hull, the illustrator, charging simple desertion at New York since 1910. They were married in New York in 1903.

Mrs. Mary Harsh of Creston, Ia., who died at Hopkins, Mo., was believed to have been Iowa's oldest woman. She was 102 years of age and had lived in the state fifty-two years.

Formal announcement was made by Governor Wilson that he would not resign the governorship of New Jersey during his campaign for the presidency.

The battleship Nebraska limped into Boston badly disabled as a result of running into an uncharted shoal four miles west by south of Point Judith light house.

Twenty socialists, including nine young women, jailed in Pittsburg for street speaking without a police permit, kept the other prisoners awake all night with cell oratory.

Though Harry S. Wade of Iowa had his eyes blown out and was made deaf by an explosion on a western irrigation project, it being claimed that the accident was due to the government's negligence, the house decided that $2,500 was sufficient to compensate him for his injuries.

Ousting of Senator Lorimer cost the senate nearly $125,000, according to a tentative estimate. The heavy expenses will necessitate a special appropriation. It was stated that Attorneys Healey and Marble, who were counsel for the committee, would each receive $10,000. No allowance will be made to Lorimer.

By a vote of 30 to 19 the senate agreed to the conference report on the so-called "budget bill," containing the provision abolishing the commerce court, distributing the judges now on that bench to various circuit courts and the amendment of the civil service law to make it cover only seven-year periods.

W. J. Morrill of the United States forest service, stationed at Washington, has been appointed to the position of professor of forestry at the University of Nebraska, according to an announcement made through the chancellor's office.

A record price for cattle was established at Chicago when a carload of steers from Tuscola, Ill., sold for $10.10 a hundred.

Marines from Panama have been ordered to Nicaragua to supplement the force of bluejackets now in Managua, guarding Americans and their property.

When his wife refused to miss her "beauty sleep" Dr. B. B. Ownen, owner of 900 acres of land near Hartshorne, Okla., turned the hose on her. A quarrel ensued and Ownen picked up a big revolver and shot himself three times, dying in a few minutes.

Negro contesting delegates were not allowed to sit in the progressive national convention.

Colonel Roosevelt wants a week of rest, and promises then that something will be doing.

Woodrow Wilson explained that omissions in his speech of acceptance did not mean opposition.

Representative Gardner says the way to solve the trust problem is to make the big combines behave.

Bishop Peter Trimble Roue of Alaska, who has just declined to accept election as coadjutor bishop of Ohio, arrived in Seattle from Alaska.

Secretary Fisher has a plan to allot government coal lands to cities.

United States Judge Cushman in Seattle denied citizenship to John M. Manos, a Greek, who has lived in the United States twelve years and who refused to bring his wife and daughter to this country.

Near Watertown, N. Y., Mrs. Gordon Priest, 32, wife of a farmer, was found murdered with a hatchet. Her head and neck were gashed, and a sleeping baby, lying beside the body unhurt, was spattered with blood.

Nine boy scouts were drowned by the capsizing of a cutter off Shippy Island. A large party of boy scouts was proceeding at the time to their summer camp on the island. Several other holiday fatalities were reported.

The agricultural appropriation bill more than a month overdue in taking effect, was signed by President Taft and released for field work a small army of employes held up during the delay on the measure in congress.

Francis Vernon Willay of Bradford, England, son of Francis Willey, formerly lord mayor of that city, was arrested in Boston on a charge of conspiring to bring English operatives into this country in violation of the contract labor law.

President Taft told several callers that he expected to sign the Panama canal bill passed by the senate carrying provisions against the use of the canal by railroad owned ships and granting free tolls to American vessels.

With the declaration that they would have a clear majority of 100 in the next house, the managers of the democratic congressional campaign committee announced that they would open headquarters at once in Chicago.

Announcement was made at the University of California of the resignation of Prof. Henry Morse Stephens as director of university extension and the selection of Prof. Ira W. Howorth of the University of Chicago as his successor.

About 1,500,000 acres of Indian lands in the former Shoshone, Uintah, Wyoming and Montana are to be sold at public auction at minimum prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50 per acre, in accordance with an order signed by President Taft.

A. D. Wolf of Chicago, son of a millionaire shoe manufacturer, has sued for reinstatement in the Illinois Athletic club. Wolf alleges that he was expelled on account of his remarks about club officers. His attorneys said he was thrown out because he is a Jew.

Charles Hilles, republican national chairman, has challenged Governor Wilson to state his position on the leading political issues. Hilles declared that the fight was between the reupblican and democratic principles, and not between Taft and Wilson.

Three young men are in the regimental hospital at Springfield, Ill., and a Sangamen county agriculturist is in the guard house as a result of the war game played by the Fifth infantry, Illinois National Guards. Officers of the regiment refuse to give names or details.

JAIL TWO DETECTIVES

Fullerton Investigates Charges of "Strong-Arm" Methods.

Grand Rapids.—Sam Fullerton of the state fire department is in Grand Rapids looking into the charge of "strong-arm" tactics for which two men in the employ of the department have been arrested.

The detectives of the department, John Gallagher and William Morrisey, were sent to Bovey to investigate a fire which destroyed the contents of the Weinstein clothing store.

Sam Kauney, the man in charge of the branch store which is also run at Bovey by Weinstein, says the men threatened him with physical violence unless he confessed his complicity in burning the store and that they drew a gun on him. He ran out on the street when he escaped from their hold.

Kauney swore out a warrant on a charge of assault and the two men were arrested at Gunn station. They are in jail awaiting a hearing which has been set for Saturday. The men say they did not lay hands on Kauney, but were endeavoring to get a confession by telling him that his partner had confessed and had implicated him. It is said the detectives had been drinking.

Mr. Fullerton says emphatically that the department discourages the methods imputed to Gallagher and Morrisey. "Mr. Keller disapproves of such tactics," said Mr. Fullerton, in discussing the case. "The department will certainly not countenance any third-degree methods, and we will simply see that the men are given a fair trial and then drop them from the service."

The Weinstein store is one of a string in which Wolf Simons of Duluth is interested. These stores are at Duluth, Superior, International Falls and Bovey, and there have been eleven fires in the last few years in them. In consequence the department believes the fires were set purposely and is securing evidence. Suits for insurance money are pending in the courts.

It is contended by the state fire department that the contents of the store at Bovey were saturated with kerosene and that there was every reason for believing the fire was started with the object of securing a large insurance on a stock of cheap clothing.

ELKS CHANGE DATES

Advance Time of Beginning Session to Avoid Conflict.

Fergus Falls.—It has been decided to change the dates for the state Elks' convention, which is to be held in this city, from Aug. 21, 22 and 23, to Aug. 20, 21 and 22. The convention is to be held a day earlier because the Sells-Floto circus is to appear on Aug. 23, and it was felt that it would be impossible to entertain the visitors properly with a circus in town.

The Twin City Elks are coming by automobile and will stop over night in St. Cloud, where they will be entertained by the St. Cloud lodge. The St. Cloud Elks will join them in automobiles and come on to this city with them. The program for the convention has been arranged as follows:

Tuesday, Aug. 20.—Registration, afternoon reception of visitors and informal dance at Elks' club.

Wednesday, Aug. 21.—Auto rides to points of interest. Business session and ladies' reception. Baseball game for blood. Social session in the evening.

Thursday, Aug. 22.—A day at beautiful Swan Lake—picnic, lunch, boating, fishing, water sports, swimming contests, etc. Evening, dance at Elks' clubrooms until train goes.

MILL 155 YEARS OLD.

Historic Plant to Be Removed to Wheat Fields.

Philadelphia, Penn. — The wheat fields and fame of Minnesota has driven historic Millbourne Mills, which for 155 years has occupied the same site on Cobb's creek, at Sixty-third and Market streets, this city, out of existence. The old plant is now being dismanteled and will be sent to Hastings, Minn.

Fined $50 for Killing Moose.

Duluth. — F. J. Wilkie, a well-known attorney of Hibbing, was convicted of having illegally killed a moose, and he was fined $50 by a Coleraine justice. It is said that he will appeal the case.

Farmer Is Killed.

Chanhassan.—Hurled from the railway tracks by a locomotive on the Milwaukee railroad, William Jarabek, aged 25, a farmer, was killed near here. When Jarabek and two friends who were walking along the track on their way home heard a train approaching from the rear they stepped from the rails, but Jarabek slipped and fell back toward the locomotive, which struck him and hurled him [illegible]

ROBBERS OPERATING.

Homes of St. Charles Men Entered.

Rochester.—A lawless band of robbers seems to be infesting this section. The home of Mr. Murphy, in St. Charles, was entered and later the Goodrich home in the same place was the scene of an attempted burglary. Then the Anderson residence was visited. Two nights ago Robert Fenske, living east of this city, had two valuable horses stolen. The sheriff and deputies were soon on the trail and the pursuit was evidently becoming too hot, for the thieves placed the stolen animals in a farmer's barn west of the city and then made good their escape.

On the Fifth street bridge was found a purse, badly torn and soaked in blood. The contents were missing except two checks.

The Kealey home in North Rochester was visited by intruders. The men were frightened away before anything of value had been taken.

TWO BOYS ARRESTED.

Son of Aviator De Haven and Wisconsin Youth.

Preston.—Roy Ritchie, a Wisconsin boy, and Cleo De Haven, son of Aeronaut De Haven of Chatfield, were arrested at Eyota, Olmsted county, Minn., by the marshal of Eyota while driving through that place. In their buggy were found about ten suits of clothes and six suit cases, together with a great amount of men's furnishings, goods of all kinds which they are charged with having stolen in Lauvell's clothing store at Chatfield Monday night.

The boys, who are 18 years old, were taken to Chatfield. They waived examination, pleaded guilty and were brought to Preston and lodged in jail last evening, less than twenty hours after the burglary.

They told Sheriff Blexrud, upon arrival at the jail, that they were ready to receive their sentence at the reform school at once if arrangements could be made.

PREACHER DIES ABROAD

Rector of St. Paul's Church, Winona, Expires at Coventry, England.

Winona. — The Reverend Edward Borncamp, 45 years old, for eight years rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church of Winona, and one of the best known clergymen in the diocese of Minnesota, died while attending the morning services at Coventry, England. A cablegram brought news of the death to parishioners. No details were given except that death came suddenly.

Rev. Borncamp left Winona on June 26 on a trip abroad, a gift from the wardens and vestrymen of the church. His health had not been good for the last year. He had visited in France, Holland, Germany tnd England and expected to sail from Glasgow August 17 for home. He was graduated from Carleton college, Minnesota university, and completed his theological course at Harvard.

SECOND ATTEMPT TO DIE

Chloroform and Hanging Routes Fail; Carnival Man Is Arrested.

Winona.—John Bade, an employe of a carnival company which showed here last week has twice within three days failed in attempts upon his own life. At the carnival grounds he was discovered at one of the concessions endeavoring to chloroform himself. He was arrested and pleaded guilty to disorderly conduct, receiving a ten days sentence. At the county jail, Sheriff Parr found him with a wire noose around his neck and fastened to the overhead bars. He was cut down before he was seriously injured and will be examined in probate court.

ARSON SUSPECTS

State May Make Arrests in Wilson Case Soon.

Bemidji.—More evidence has been found in the Wilton arson case which Deputy Fire Marshal Sam F. Fullerton is investigating. Last week Mr. Fullerton traced, by means of a woman's shoe, a suspicious character from the burned store to a farmer's home three miles away. It now develops that when the Rogers store, valued at $13,000, with but $4,000 insurance, burned June 28, that the suspected woman and her husband were seen near the store. Arrests may be made before the September term of court.

Tramps Fell Conductor.

Winona. — Just after Conductor Homer B. Kelly on a Northwestern freight train gave the signal to the engineer to start at Marshland, Wis., across the river from Winona, two men attempted to steal a ride. The conductor ordered them off and a struggle ensued on the rear platform of the caboose. After they were dis[illegible]

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Red Wing.—D. M. Neill, of this place has filed for the Republican nomination for lieutenant governor.

Anoka.—Harry Groat, 23 years old, a son of Hannibal Groat, was drowned in the river here. He fell off a log on which he was riding.

St. Cloud.—Twenty-three cars, carrying over 100 people, went on the first sociability run held under the auspices of the St. Cloud Auto club.

Little Falls.—Fifty local business men did volunteer road work on the highway leading west of this city. The road was the one to be taken by the "St. Paul-to-Winnipeg" tour on Thursday, and the road was put in excellent shape for the tourists.

Fergus Falls.—A terrific rain storm occurred here Monday night, accompanied by some hail. The hail did not do much damage, but grain, especially oats, was badly lodged by the rain and wind, and there are some fields than can scarcely be cut.

Rochester. — Rev. L. E. Spicer of Webster City, Iowa, has accepted the pastorate of the Universalist church of this city, and will begin his work September 1. He takes the place made vacant by the resignation of Rev. R. D. Van Tassel, who has gone to Sioux City Iowa.

Duluth.—Patrolmen Harding and Nyberg, of Duluth, saved a former policeman, Nicholas Nason, a dock watchman, from drowning. Nason fell off the dock as the result of taking a misstep. The policemen heard the splash when Nason went into the water, and hurried to his assistance.

Bemidji.—At the coroner's inquest which was held here over the body of the railroad laborer who last evening shot and killed Deputy Sheriff Norman Helmer and was himself killed by Helmer, it developed that the dead man probably was W. Wayne, of Escanaba, Mich. A note containing this address was found on the dead man's clothes.

Winona.—A punctured tire brought about the arrest here of two boys, Charles Perkins and Forest Jackson of Chicago, charged with the theft of an automobile from the garage of Thomas Fraser of Rochester, republican candidate for state attorney general. They admit the crime and say they were headed for Chicago. The Rochester officials have been notified.

Virginia.—Oscar Groeller, former cashier of the Virginia Brewing Company, is in jail here charged with embezzling $1,122 from his employer. He was at Winnipeg when arrested but returned without extradition proceedings. The embezzlement is alleged to have occurred last September. Groeller denies his guilt and says he will be able to prove his innocence.

Minneapolis.—What seems the fulfillment of a desire, said to have been long cherished by the family to do something to promote the charitable institutions of Minneapolis, the Lyman home at Eighteenth street and Chicago avenue, one of the historic residences of the city, which the adjoining property, has been offered to the city to be used as a hospital for sick babies and little children.

Brainerd.—The fourth annual convention of the Luther League of Young People's Societies of the Swedish Luther Church of the Mississippi district elected Rev. Elof Carlson, Brainerd, president; Rev. C. L. Dagner, Milaca, vice president; Eben Ostergren, St. Cloud, secretary; Miss Ida Ryberg, Upsala, treasurer. The next district convention will be held the latter part of June, 1913, in Upsala.

Cloquet.—Mrs. Frank Santerre was instantly killed by a bolt of lightning that struck the Santerre home. Mrs. Santerre and her daughter, Miss Ida Santerre, had gotten up to close the window. A bolt of lightning striking the chimney came down the stairway and Mrs. Santerre was directly in its path. A lamp exploded and set fire to the room, but the house was saved. Mrs. Santerre was 46 years old. She leaves a husband and seven children.

Owatonna.—Mrs. W. C. Zamboni, wife of a well known Owatonna merchant, was thrown from an automobile and badly bruised when the party, composed of Mr. and Mrs. Zamboni and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Brown, collided with a motorcycle on which the rider carried a second passenger. Both motorcyclists were knocked insensible and the rider was taken to the hospital. Internal injuries are feared. It required the efforts of four men to extricate him.

Stillwater.—A telegram from Spokane states that Otis Staples of Cranbrook, B. C., for many years one of the leading lumbermen of this state, is critically ill and that his death may occur at any moment. While fishing some days ago near Cranbrook he whipped a hook into his eye. Blood poison set in and there is no hope for his recovery. Mr. Staples was for several years government estimator of timber in this state and has a wide acquaintance.

Preston. — L. J. Lupman, assistant cashier of the Farmers and Merchants State bank, of Preston, drove his Rambler touring car to Chatfield and on his way back about ten miles north of Preston his car did not work just right and while he was examining it, it suddenly burst into flames and burned up completely.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 49 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

There is a candidate for county office on nearly every quarter section. Who says nothing doing?

An address to be delivered by James J. Hill will be one of the good features of the Red Lake County Fair. Andrew Rubertus, secretary of the Red Lake County Agricultural society, received a letter from Mr. Hill yesterday accepting the invitation to attend the county fair and deliver an address. Mr. Hill's address will be delivered on the last day of the fair, Sept. 14.—Gazette.

Between the so-called corrupt practices act, and the determination of Uncle Sam to have the country press lop off non-paying subscribers, the average Minnesota newspaper man realizes what it means to "be between the devil and the deep sea." There was a time when we might take to the tall timber. But the tall timber is now all cut off. Surely it looks as though we were up the stump.—Mankato Journal.

P. M. Ringdahl has filed as a candidate for the democratic nomination for governor. He says he has been practically pushed into this by his friends, and puts it up to them to do the active campaigning. If the republicans and democrats nominate Gordon and Ringdal respectively both parties will be taking a long step towards establishing clean politics in the state, and we should have a refreshingly clean campaign and a good governor, no matter who is elected.

Senator Knute Nelson has at last announced that he is a candidate for re-election to the United States Senate. Thus one of the last relics of standpatism in the west has thrown his hat in the ring—or left it in—and there is a mighty good chance that Minnesota will elect a democratic senator. Nelson's republican opponents have been baited until their patience is exhausted, and there is no chance that they will withdraw. This means a split.—Ortonville Herald-Star.

Information was given out by the attorney general in the opinion of that office that no man may, under the provisions of the present corrupt practices act, buy cigars for the purpose or with the hope of influencing a vote or anyone voting thereby. The law does not purport to prevent the giving of a cigar to a friend if there is no hope of influencing a person's vote is a question for a jury in case of a trial of a person for a breach of the law relating to political campaigns. The fact is that under the law, candidates are prohibited from spending any money, except for a few legitimate purposes. This is well, and is a good thing for the candidate.—Norman County Herald.

Rural School Notes

The annual school meetings have been held. From the gleaning of the reports, it may be said that the financial status of the districts is fairly good and the means of the districts well distributed.

Quite a number of schools have changed from a five or six months school to seven months, or class C, school.

I desire to compliment a number of school clerks for sending in annual reports promptly.

School officers will kindly remember to qualify at the earliest opportunity so that the school treasurer's bond and tax list can be sent at once to the auditor, and the annual report to the clerk.

Quite a number of these reports are yet out. A large number of schools will open the the first Monday of September. Have you hired the teachers for your respective schools? Now is the accepted time to give this matter your earnest attention.

May I ask the school boards to see that everything is in order for the beginning of next term.

School census is now to be taken and the report is due Sept. 1. May we not have all reports in time? Your superintendent has his work to do in unorganized school territory and will be absent from the office except on Saturdays for next two weeks. We all hope for a successful new school year.

Respectfully submitted,
E. A. MOSTUE.

Must Pay for Papers Taken

During the last term of the circuit court at Atchison county Missouri, the case of H. F. Staple vs. Charles Traub was tried. The suit was brought on a long-standing account and among other items was 16 years subscription for the Atchison Conty Mail, claiming he did not take the paper; and that he had refused to take the paper from the post office and mail box a number of times. The plaintiff proved by post masters, deputy post masters and others that Mr. Traub did take the paper during all the 16 years. In the case it was shown that according to law, even if a subscriber does occasionally order a newspaper discontinued or refuse to accept it, he cannot get out of paying what he owes for the paper, and the subscriber must pay the arrearage before stopping the paper.

The jury in this case was out only a short time and brought in a verdict for the entire account, including the subscription for the Mail—16 years at $1.50 a year, or $24. The costs in the justice court and the circuit court amounted to about $100 besides the attorney fees

A similar case has been decided by the court of appeals and it was held in that case that any one taking a newspaper must pay for it as long as they take it from the post office.—Publishers Auxiliary.

Sold Interest in Townsite

Last evening Harry Ives, clerk of court of Pennington county, closed a deal with Auditor Law of the Crookston Lumber Co., for the sale of his stock in the St. Hilaire Townsite Co., of which he has been president for 15 years, thus closing his interest at St. Hilaire with the exception of the Spectator. Mr. Ives owned half the stock and the lumber company the other half. The consideration was not made public.—Crookston Times.

Try It.

When too much trouble comes your way
And you feel down and out,
Don't coax along your sorrow
And in a corner pout;
Get up and go right to it!
Put on the gloves of will!
You'll be a one-round winner,
Of success you'll have your fill.
And if you lack the spirit
To back hard luck a bit,
No doubt it's just because you lack.
The true "git up and git."
To put you in the winning,
And drive away weak fears,
Begin a steady diet of

The Hunting Good

With the opening of the hunting season but a few weeks ahead, indications for great sport in the north woods are most favorable, according to H. A. Rider, of St. Paul executive agent of the state game and fish commission. In a statement signed by Mr Rider, appearing in the July issue of the North Woods, the publication issued by the state forestry bureau, the state official says:

"Conditions were never better than at the present time and the outlook for game of all kinds is very favorable. The deputy game wardens report that partridges and quail are very numerous and of good size for this time of the year. Prairie chickens are plentiful, Deer and moose are seen in large numbers and also are in splendid condition. The commission, in years gone by, has had some trouble in enforcing the game and fish laws, partly caused by the lack of funds. The commission also has had trouble with people who seem to ignore the law. I am glad to say however, that the people are coming to realize that unless game and fish are conserved, it will be a question of only a few short years when there will be none left.

"In the six months past, there have been 180 arrests made for various offences, all in the northern part of the state. Of these, 165 resulted in convictions and 15 in dismissal of defendants. There also have been 111 seizures made and the property declared contraband. On the whole, conditions are improving, owing to the efficient work done by the local game wardens."

Notice of Special Election

The citizens of the village of St. Hilaire in the county of Pennington and state of Minnesota who are qualified to vote at general elections are hereby notified that a special election for said village will be held at the village hall in said village on Friday, the 30th day of August, 1912, between the hours of 10 o clock in the forenoon and 4 o'clock in the afternoon of the same day, for the following purposes:

To vote on the question of issuing bonds in the sum of $4,000 to refund floating indebtedness; same to be issued under section 1, chapter 123, general laws of 1905; also to vote on the question of issuing bonds in the sum of $1,000 for the purpose of a permanent improvement revolving fund, and to do any other business proper to be done at said election when convened.

Dated at St. Hilaire this 16th day of August, 1912. DR. C. SWANSON, Recorder.

How a Bull Moose is Born.

The first regularly organized lodge of the Cantankerous Order of Bull Mooses held a meeting Monday night. The following is an extract from the secret work of the order and is vouched for by a member who had taken the degree and afterwards been expelled for behaving himself during lodge:

FIRST DEGREE LECTURE.

Q.—Are you a Bull Moose?

A.—I am, try me.

Q.—How will you be tried?

A.—By the horns.

Q.—Why by the horns?

A.—Because they are an emblem of fight and the working tools of my profession.

Q.—What is your profession?

A.—An angle of 90 degrees temperature and the 4th of a demijohn.

Q.—How do you know yourself to be a Bull Moose?

A.—By having been kicked and willing to be kicked again.

Q.—How shall I know you to be a Bull Moose?

A.—By certain signs, cuss words, more cuss words, and a token.

Q.—What are signs?

A.—Loud noises, facial contortions, and the stomach ache.

Q.—What is a token?

A.—A certain jolt under the ear that one friend gives another in the dark but seldom uses in the light.

Q.—Where were you prepared to be made a Bull Moose?

A.—In a room adjacent to a republican convention.

Q.—How were you prepared?

A.—By being divested of all my senses; hoodwinked by T. R., and led before the populace to make a show of myself.

Q.—What was then done with you?

A.—I was made a Bull Moose in fine form.

Q.—What was that form?

A.—Raising h—l in every convention and being kicked out of same.

Q.—What makes you a Bull Moose?

A.—My proclamation.

Q.—Repeat it.

A.—I, B. S. Shouter, do hereby, hereon, and hereafter, most sincerely promise and swear that I will always follow the commands of Bwano Tumbo through Erly, Irip, Orip, Europe and Stirip and I furthermore promise and swear that I will ignore standpatters, make friends with democrats and promise anything that will bring our glorious order into power, postoffices and patronage.

Q.—After the obligation what happened?

A.—I was kicked three times in the ribs by a brother who said I wanted his job, after which I was presented with the balance of the working tools of my profession and taught their uses.

Q.—What were they?

A.—A hammer for perpetual use and a 224 pound sledge to be used at picnics and conventions.

Q.—What followed?

A.—The Senior Wizard hit the Worshipful Mogul a bat in the eye for not entertaining a motion to adjourn and after calling each other thieves, knaves and rascals the lodge subsided into Friendship, Mortality and Truth and went home vowing to kill each other at the next regular meeting.

Q.—When is the next regular meeting?

A.—At the next republican convention.—Castana Times.

Captain's Remarkable Action Designed "to Avoid Scandal."

"On the slow and cheap ships," said a purser, "the souvenir thief does no harm; but on a famous liner like the Ruritania, where records are broken and tip-top prices abound, the amount of stuff that disappears is shocking.

"Only things with the boat's name on go—champagne glasses, inkwells, curling tongs, buttonhooks and so forth. And what are we to do about it?

"We had an American peeress aboard last voyage. The day we reached New York a stewardess came to me and said:

"'Oh, Mr. Meet, I just seen Lady Blank's cabin trunk, and she's taken two of our finest silver inkwells.'

"Here was a quandary, eh? The captain was called in, and he settled the matter in the unsatisfactory way such things are usually settled.

"'We must teach Lady Blank a lesson,' he growled. 'At the same time scandal must be avoided.' He thought a moment, then said to the stewardness: 'Take one of the inkwells and leave the other. That'll show her!'"

County Auditor

Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912

I wish hereby to announce to the voters of Pennington county, that I am a candidate for the the republican nomination for the office of county auditor, at the September 17, 1912, primaries. Since my appointment to this office, at the time of the organization of Pennington county, I have given the office my whole time and my very best efforts. Should I be favored with the nomination and election, I believe with the experience gained, I will be still better prepared to serve you the coming term.

If our services have met with your approval I earnestly solicit your consideration and support.

Very truly yours,
A. H. FASEL.

Clerk of Court

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I will be a candidate for the republican nomination for clerk of the district court for Pennington county, subject to the decision of the voters at the republican primary, September 17, 1912.

I have occupied the position since the organization of Pennington county and have tried to the best of my ability to be strictly impartial and as efficient as my ability would allow. I will be pleased to have the votes and support of all citizens who believe that I have filled the position in an honest and efficient manner.

If nominated and elected I hereby promise to give the office my personal attention and my best efforts to honestly administer the affairs of the office in a strictly impartial and efficient manner.

HARRY E. IVES.
Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Andrew Trovaten.)

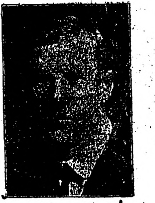
For County Treasurer

I wish to announce that I am a candidate for county treasurer, subject to the ratification of the republican voters at the primaries, September 17, 1912. Being that political parties have always regarded it as important to have their members elected to all offices, it must be for aid in promoting party politics, for so far as the work in the county offices is concerned, it can make no difference whatever, what the officer's political affiliations are, so the idea must be that he is expected to talk and work, and use the advantage of his public position, in aiding the party to which he belongs. I believe that it is of the utmost importance to have the republican party control at least one branch of congress, in order to maintain the average of prices. While the price-level does not prove that times are good, theoretically, yet we know that with the enormous debt of the country, it will be harder to pay it with low prices than with high, steady prices. I believe that because one cannot support the whole republican ticket, it is no reason at all to quit supporting candidates for congress and the legislature, which is by far more important than the office of president, so far as party politics is concerned. These are my ideas, and I shall use my influence to help along on those lines, no matter whether I am nominated or not.

Sincerely for the success of the party,
ANDREW TROVATEN,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Wilhelm Michelet.)

Judge of Probate



I hereby announce that I am a non-partisan candidate for re-election to the office of judge of probate in and for Pennington county, Minnesota. I respectfully solicit your vote and support at the primary election to be held on Tuesday Sept. 17, 1912.

WILHELM MICHELET,
Judge of Probate,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

County Superintendent

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election for the office of superintendent of schools for Pennington county subject to the ratification of the voters at the primary to be held Tuesday, Sept. 17, 1912.

Your vote and support are respectfully solicited.

County Superintendent

St. Hilaire, Minn., August 5, 1912.

I wish hereby to announce to readers of the Spectator that I am a candidate for superintendent of schools of Pennington county, and hope you will give me your votes and support next fall.

I am not running on any particular party ticket as the new primary law requires that all candidates for superintendent of schools run on a non-partisan ballot, on their merits.

Clerk of Court

According to the present laws, that we as a citizen are sworn to abide by, it is necessary that we file application for candidacy for the office of clerk of court, and publish notice of our desire.

I am perfectly willing to abide by the decision of my friends and aquaintances as to my qualifications to clerically and economically fulfill the duties of this office.

I have been a citizen of this county for twenty-nine years. I will most surely appreciate any favors that the voters of Pennington county feel disposed to confer upon myself at the primary election to be held September 17, 1912.

Yours truly, O. F. POST.

Carlyle's Curious Study.

Thomas Carlyle, the noted English philosopher and historian, had a curious study. It comprised the entire third floor of his narrow brick house at Chelsea, a London suburb. The walls of the study were of double thickness, to prevent street noises from annoying the master while at his work, and a skylight afforded the light. Just how fresh air was furnished the room was not apparent to the visitor. There is nothing about the room to suggest comfort, only a close, thick-walled, skylighted long apartment where the great dyspeptic worked and worked ceaselessly, and from where he hurried to the kitchen, in the basement of the house, as soon as his day's labor was done. In the kitchen he received his most intimate friends, and there they smoked their pipes together.

The Malacca Wildcats.

In the forests of Malacca and other islands in the Indian ocean may still be found the animal known as a wildcat. The upper parts of it are generally of a clear yellow color, with black spots; the lower parts are white with black spots also. On the back the spots lengthen almost into lines or stings, black on yellow.

The average length of the animal, excluding the tail, is almost two feet; the tail averages nine inches. Its height when standing erect is about 12 inches at the shoulder and 15 inches at the hindquarters. Its temper is mild and gentle; it plays almost like a domestic cat, or rather kitten, chasing its tail and amusing itself with anything that it can roll with its paws.

Had Given It Away.

Lucille's mother had taken her for an outing. Now that the hour for luncheon had arrived, she called to the little girl:

"Lucille, we will now have a little roll and some chocolate, and you shall pay with the two sous I gave you but a short time since."

"Oh, mamma," cried Lucille, "I have already given the two sous away to an old woman!"

"I am so glad you have disposed of the money in such a charitable way. How did you happen to present it to the old woman?" asked the mother.

"Well, you see, I gave it to her in payment for two nice apples," confessed Lucille.

Good for Hungry Folks.

George William Sellers, the western cricketer, described in Chicago this attempt to teach cricket to the men on his Indiana estate.

"Cricket is, of course, a more leisurely game than baseball," said Mr. Sellers. "We played it on my place in the proper leisurely manner, and all my men seemed pleased. Our first match was with Concord.

"One of my men—his name is John—seemed particularly pleased. John did full justice, before the match, to the lunch served in the marquee on the lawn. He enjoyed, too, the meat tea that pleasantly interrupted the afternoon's play. At each inning he was on hand when the drinks and cigars and sandwiches were passed about.

"During the open-air dinner that wound up the first day's play, I turned to John and said:

"'Well, old man, what do you think of cricket?'

"'Mr. Sellers,' said he, 'it would be a grand game if it wasn't for all this here [illegible]

LOMBARD PIANOS
The Pianos With The Sweetest Tone

Praised by Press and Pulpit

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.
In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientist for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng. and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. Fougera Co., 90 Beekman St., New York.

Hot Weather Drink.

Philip Hale, one of Boston's latter-day philosophers, recommends barley water as a more sensible drink for hot weather than "ice-cold" blends of waters, sirups, acids, gulped at the marble fountains. Mr. Hale's recipe for his favorite tipple is as follows:

"For three pints of water you will require a teacupful and a half of well washed pearl barley, four lumps of sugar and the thin rind and juice of one lemon. Pour boiling water over it, cover with a saucer and let it stand till cold; then strain again and again till clear, and pour into a jug."

A buttermilk fan adds:

"Then set the jug in a cool place and forget it."

In the Meantime.

There had been a row at recess time, and Miss Martin had called in all of the pupils, and had a sort of a school court, which lasted until time for school to be dismissed. The trouble had started with some of the older boys in a misunderstanding over a game. After hearing both sides of the question, she decided proper punishment for the combatants, and told them to remain in their seats after the others had gone home. She remembered something she wanted to say to a little boy who did not take part in the affray; so she turned to him and said:

"Now, in the meantime, Guy—"

"I wasn't in it, Miss Martin," Guy interrupted hastily.

"Wasn't in what?" asked Miss Martin.

"Why, in the meantime," said the eight-year-old. — Mack's National Monthly.

Historic Blackguards

By ALBERT PAYSON TERHUNE

Lord Byron, Scoundrel and Genius

LORD BYRON

"I WAS accused of every monstrous vice. My name was tainted. I felt that if what was whispered and muttered and rumored was true, I was unfit for England. If false, England was unfit for me. I withdrew."

So wrote a first-class genius and third-class scoundrel, Lord Byron. He was a very pitiable sort of blackguard at best. Not one-tenth as bad as he tried to make people think. Yet bad enough in a cheap, sordid way to deserve decent men's contempt. He was tremendously vain. Not so vain of his poetry, which was great, as of the petty, melodramatic feats that roused more laughter than applause.

Byron had been lame from birth. Part of the time his mother overwhelmed him with caresses and love words. At other times she would scream at him, curse him for "a lame brat" and hurl books at his head. It was a bitter childhood for the sensitive, afflicted youngster. He never forgot it. Nor did he forgive the mother who made him so miserable. He hated her to the day of his death.

Byron began writing poetry while he was a mere schoolboy. It was an artificial, morbid era in English literature, and Byron was just the sort of writer to catch the public's fancy. He found that people were interested in gloomy, mysterious heroes. So, both in life and in poems, he proceeded to become mysterious and gloomy. He hinted at black secrets that clouded his life and talked vaguely of fearful crimes he had committed.

This attitude, combined with his good looks, made him the School Girl Idol. Maidens clamored for locks of his hair and wrote him wildly romantic letters. All this delighted Byron. By this time he had plunged into the grossest dissipation of London life. He halted for a brief time in his career of vice to marry a Miss Milbanke.

They were wretchedly unhappy together and parted in less than a year. The true reason for their separation was not made public at the time, though the fault was admittedly Byron's. He proceeded to write a touching "farewell" to his wife. It was a poem that sought to draw all public sympathy from Lady Byron and to make himself appear more or less a martyr. In spite of this rascally effort popular opinion was against Byron, and he left England in a huff, never to return.

He wandered around Switzerland, Italy and Greece, leading a vile life and writing marvelous poetry. His jaded brain was seeking new sensations of every sort. For instance, he swam the Hellespont, watched the cremation of the poet Shelley and at last decided to become a military hero.

Greece was fighting for independence against her Turkish oppressors. Byron hurried to Missolonghi and placed his sword and life at the service of the Greeks. It seemed to him a fine thing for a poet to draw blade in defense of the Ancient Land of Poetry. The idea struck Byron as a bit of genuine inspiration. He is even said to have had vague hopes of becoming king of Greece.

But he found that drilling, marching, collecting provisions and studying maps was not as poetic a pastime as he expected. It bored him. He preferred to loaf at Missolonghi, taking long swims, writing poetic verse and flirting with dark-eyed Greek girls. And thus he spent much of his time when he might have been fighting for independence.

He also had a new ambition, namely, to reduce his flesh. He tried to do this by drinking vinegar and taking long rides. The result was not what he had hoped. In fact he fell ill.

"Don't grill me as you did poor Shelley!" he begged his friends.

There, after a brief sickness, he died, on April 19, 1824. Byron was only thirty-six at the time of his death. Gifted beyond ordinary mortals, he had wilfully thrown away the respect of his friends and of the world at large.

Duke of Marlborough, Prince of Time Servers

DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH

THIS is the story of a man who started life without money or position, and who won vast measure of both. He won them because of his good looks, his utter lack of conscience and his military genius. It would be hard to say which of these three qualities did most for him.

John Churchill—"Handsome Jack," as he was nicknamed—came of an old, impoverished family. He was born in 1650, had almost no early education and became a page to the duke of York (afterward James II.). Charles II., the duke of York's brother, was king of England and ruled a dissolute court, where wit and beauty brought far higher rewards than did mere merit.

He soon worked his way into the duke of York's favor and received from him a commission in the army. As a soldier he showed both valor and martial skill. But it is doubtful if he would have risen as rapidly as he did were it not for the very shady means he employed for his own advancement. His good looks and his unscrupulous conduct brought him money and swift promotion. He strengthened his position by marrying Sarah Jennings, a woman much of his own sort, and even more ambitious.

James II. came to the throne in 1685, and his favorite courtier, Churchill, was made a general and a baron. "Handsome Jack" owed everything to James. Yet, when the latter was attacked by William Prince of Orange, who claimed the English crown, Churchill quickly saw that William would be the victor, and decided to throw his fortunes with him. So, when James Churchill calmly went over to the enemy and took the army with him, James deserted, fled to France and the Prince of Orange became king William III. of England. Churchill gained new honors by this bit of treachery.

William's reign was not wholly popular. It looked at one time as if James might possibly regain his lost crown. Churchill, in order to make certain of being on the winning side, served with William openly and kept up a secret correspondence with James. William learned of this and had Churchill thrown into prison. For a less lucky, less shifty man, this exposure to treason would have meant political ruin. But Churchill managed to secure his freedom and even to win back some of his besmirched reputation.

William died childless, and at his death the English crown went to James' youngest daughter, Anne. Churchill had foreseen this, and had made his plans accordingly. He had managed to install his clever wife as Anne's chief lady-in-waiting and to win for himself the new queen's trust and admiration. Anne—stupid, weak, good natured—was the willing and meek slave of the imperious Lady Churchill, obeying her every wish, heaping honors on her tricky husband; ever enriching the couple.

Churchill was made commander-in-chief of England's forces in the continental war. Here he showed brilliant genius. He won battle after battle, campaign after campaign; amazing the world with his military skill. He also gained himself a name for humanity, during these wars, in spite of the fact that he burned more than 300 towns, villages and castles in Germany alone.

For years he and his wife practically ruled England, through the weak old queen. But for the duchess of Marlborough's bad temper they might perhaps have continued so until the end. But the duchess at last, in 1711, lost her temper once too often with the patient Anne. She is even rumored to have slapped her majesty's face. There was a terrible scene, and the Marlboroughs fell into disgrace. The duke was stripped of his offices and found it convenient to leave England.

Later, in George I.'s reign, he was partially restored to power. But his old greatness was gone. He was no longer fully trusted. Life turned bitter to him. His only son was dead. A stroke of apoplexy thickened his speech and made him feeble. "Handsome Jack" was an old, old man; broken and a wreck of his former self. He died in 1722 in his seventy-third year.

Shakespeare Died at Fifty-three Great Poet Passed Away at Age When Most Men Are at Their Mental Best.

In the midst of recent tragedies one may pause to think what a tragedy was enacted on April 23, 1616, when Shakespeare died. The exact date of his birth is not known. Two chronicles of the eighteenth century gave it as April 23, 1564, and as the parish record shows he was baptized on April 16 of that year, he may have been born on the 23d. That has been accepted by many as the correct date, and the Shakespeare library founded at Birmingham, England, in 1864, as a tercentenary memorial was formally opened for public use on April 23, 1868, thus giving local sanction to that as his birth date. This library is the only one of its kind in the world devoted exclusively to the works of Shakespeare and those of editors, commentators, authors and translators, about him and his works [illegible] is no doubt that it was just at the beginning of his fifty-third year. Many men are in their prime at that age, but the world does not know whether Shakespeare was well preserved or was beginning to fail. There is reason to believe that he had been sick for a few weeks or had some premonition of death, for he made his will on the 25th of March, 1616, a month before his death, and the original copy shows some marks of hasty execution. The body of the will and its codicils or additions bear three of his signatures, and they are almost the only ones known to be in existence. A single page of any one of his plays in his handwriting and with his signature attached would now fetch at auction many times as much as the value of all the property disposed of by his will.

DISORDERED DIGESTION

If Neglected May Develop into a Severe Form of Stomach Trouble.

The Best Safeguard Is to Keep the Stomach Toned Up and the Treatment Should Be Begun When the First Symptom Is Noted.

"A few years ago," says Mrs. George Fallu, of Finlayson, Minn., "I began to suffer from stomach trouble. It came on me gradually and I do not know what caused it. I gave little heed to it at the time, thinking that it was merely a slight attack of indigestion. It finally developed into a severe form of stomach trouble and I suffered terribly for months.

"At the beginning of my sickness I had fainting spells and became unconscious. There was gas on my stomach, my appetite was very poor and what little I ate did not seem to be digested. I was sick at my stomach a great deal and had severe dizzy attacks. I had hot flashes when it would seem as though I was burning up. I could not sleep night or day during these spells unless I took something to ease the pain. I was very weak and was in this condition for six months. I could not do any work and was confined to bed for two or three days at a time.

"A doctor at Duluth said I had gastric fever. He did not give me much help so I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills upon my mother's advice. I gave the pills a thorough trial and unlike the doctor's medicine, they agreed with me. I took several boxes of the pills and was entirely cured. I think so much of the pills that I always keep them in the house."

The tonic treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills by building up the blood so that it can nourish and strengthen the weakened digestive system has made hundreds of cures in the most severe stomach disorders. This record of cures should merit a trial for the remedy which is guaranteed free from opiates.

A new edition of the booklet, "What to Eat and How to Eat," is free on request. Send a postal for it today and begin to cure yourself by following the directions it contains.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are on sale at all druggists, or they will be sent to any address by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y

What He Bought.

A Syracuse business man living in one of the suburbs decided to give up his spacious back yards to the raising of currants as a profitable side issue. So, wishing to absorb all the information he could acquire on the subject of the currant industry, he went down town one Saturday afternoon recently and returned with his arms full of books.

"Well, Teddy," inquired his enthusiastic spouse, as he dumped the volumes on the table, "did you succeed in getting what you wanted?"

"Sure, I did!" he replied, proudly pointing to the books. "I bought a whole year's edition of a standard work on current literature."—Exchange.

Show Devotion to Queen.

Queen Alexandra was very much touched by the devotion of the women of every station of life who sold flowers on Alexandra day for one of her pet charities, the hospitals of London. More than $150,000 was collected, and next year it is said that all of England will celebrate the queen mother's day in the same way.

Fail to Select Food Nature Demands to Ward Off Ailments?

A Ky. lady, speaking about food, says: "I was accustomed to eating all kinds of ordinary food until, for some reason, indigestion and nervous prostration set in.

"After I had run down seriously my attention was called to the necessity of some change in my diet, and I discontinued my ordinary breakfast and began using Grape-Nuts with a good quantity of rich cream.

"In a few days my condition changed in a remarkable way, and I began to have a strength that I had never been possessed of before, a vigor of body and a poise of mind that amazed me. It was entirely new in my experience.

"My former attacks of indigestion had been accompanied by heat flashes, and many times my condition was distressing with blind spells of dizziness, rush of blood to the head and neuralgic pains in the chest.

"Since using Grape-Nuts alone for breakfast I have been free from these troubles, except at times when I have indulged in rich, greasy foods in quantity, then I would be warned by a pain under the left shoulder blade, and unless I heeded the warning the old trouble would come back, but when I finally got to know where these troubles originated I returned to my Grape-Nuts and cream and the pain and disturbance left very quickly.

NEW SPHINX FOUND

Student of British Museum Discovers It in Egypt.

Cairo, Egypt. — Another sphinx, weighing ninety tons, and carved from a single block of alabaster, has been unearthed at a point between the world-famed Colossi, on the water-logged plains of Memphis, in Egypt. For hundreds of years it has lain in a recumbent position buried beneath the sands on the road to Sakkareh. Today it is half-exposed to view, and next year it is to be raised to a vertical position above the water-line.

This newly found sphinx was betrayed in its hiding place by its tail, which Mr. Mackay, one of the students of the British School in Egypt, discovered about a year ago. This year, when the water on the plain subsided, the complete figure was excavated, and was found to measure some fourteen feet in height and twenty-six feet in length. Alabaster being a rock foreign to the neighborhood, the new sphinx ranks as the largest that has ever been transported. The figure bears no inscription, but is considered by Prof. Flinders Petrie, the director of the British School in Egypt, to have been carved about 1800 B. C. Many other remarkable discoveries, taking the mind back as far as 5500 B. C., and lifting the veil of centuries from Egypt's romantic story, have also been made by the same school, and, with the exception of a red granite group of Rameses II and the god Ptah, which will be sent direct to the Ny Carlsberg Museum at Copenhagen, and a few other details, are now on exhibition at University College, Gower street. They include many objects quite new to Egyptologists.

Among these are coffins made of basket work, reeds or withes, sandal trays, an axe handle, in which the grip is composed of delicately knotted string, a pot of unburnt incense for a fire-offering of 4000 B. C., and numerous pieces of timber, showing by their formation the principles of building construction that were in vogue nearly 6000 years B. C.

Coffin of Basket Work.

The graves of the early Egyptians were always well provided with such necessaries as were thought essential for the spirit of the departed when it again materialized. Consequently, the relics from Tarkhan include headrests (some of them carved out of trees trained specially into peculiar shapes), sandals, large jars of food, and various vessels of gypsum and semi-transparent alabastar. Some of the vases bear the name of Mena, the earliest known Egyptian king. They are considered by some experts to be a tribute corresponding to the modern floral wreath.

Evidence is also provided of the lack of historical sentiment in the Roman occupants of Egypt by numerous examples of inscribed Egyptian tablets that have been used as hearth stones, door lintels, and mill stones. There is also ample evidence of the belief that sacrilege among the tombs was more common in the earlier periods of Egyptian history than in later periods.

BAIT TEMPTING BUT WEAK

French Curator Resists American's Attempts to Buy MS. of Town's Museum.

Paris, France.—Apropos of the Doucet sale, a Paris contemporary relates the adventures of a rich American collector. He had heard of a twelfth century MS. preserved in the museum of a little town in the north of France.

The collector hied to the town to purchase the treasure at any price. Shown the MS., which he admired, he addressed the curator:

"To whom does it belong?"

"To the town, monsieur."

"And do you know its value?"

"The value cannot be fixed, possibly 5,000 francs, but it is unique."

"I will buy it. I will give you 100,000 francs."

"But it is not for sale."

"I will give you 150,000 francs. It will be a good thing for the town. You will never get such an offer again."

The offer was declined, but the collector was not yet disheartened.

"Now," said the latter, thinking to clinch the bargain, "I will give you, in addition, 10,000 francs, so that you may be able to get a copy made for the town."

Despite the collector's generosity, no contract was entered into.

HER LITTLE HAND IN HIS

Mr. Pecke's Explanation as to Reason Somewhat Dispelled the Odor of Romance.

Henne and Pecke were two henpecked married men. The other day they met, and, after a few casual remarks concerning the weather, the subject of women and unfortunate husbands was—perhaps naturally—discussed. To Henne, however, suddenly came thoughts of years ago, when he was a happy bachelor, and (unconsciously of what Fate had in store for him) was "walking out" a girl who was, later on, destined to bring him sorrow and misery.

Pecke, seeing a "far-away" look in his companion's eyes, inquired the meaning. Henne retorted dramatically, "I was just then thinking, old fellow, of those happy days long ago—when I used to hold that girl's hand in mine for hours—when—"

But the equally unfortunate Pecke suddenly cut his companion short by exclaiming: "Why, that's nothing! Cheer up! Do you know, only yesterday I held my wife's hand for three solid hours."

"What?" said the startled Henne.

"Yes, it's a fact," resumed Pecke, sorrowfully; "and I declare if I'd let loose she'd have killed me."—London Tit-Bits.

RED, ROUGH HANDS MADE SOFT AND WHITE

For red, rough, chapped and bleeding hands, dry, fissured, itching, burning palms, and painful finger-ends, with shapeless nails, a one-night Cuticura treatment works wonders. Directions: Soak the hands, on retiring, in hot water and Cuticura Soap. Dry, anoint with Cuticura Ointment, and wear soft bandages or old, loose gloves during the night. These pure, sweet and gentle emollients preserve the hands, prevent redness, roughness and chapping, and impart in a single night that velvety softness and whiteness so much desired by women. For those whose occupations tend to injure the hands, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment are wonderful.

GEN. BOOTH IS DEAD

FOUNDER OF THE SALVATION ARMY SUCCUMBS TO ILLNESS DUE TO OPERATION.

AT HOME IN ENGLAND

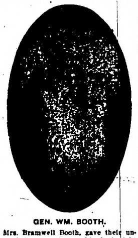
Relatives and Close Friends at Bedside—Son, Bramwell, May Succeed Him—Question of His Burial.

London, England. — Rev. William Booth, general and commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army, is dead. He was born at Nottingham in 1829.

The veteran Salvation Army leader was unconscious for 48 hours previous to his death. The medical bulletins had not revealed the seriousness of the general's condition, which for a week past, it is now admitted was hopeless.

Twelve weeks ago General Booth underwent an operation for the removal of a cataract in his left eye. For two days after the operation indications justified the hope of the general's recovery. Then, however, septic poisoning set in and from that time, with the exception of occasional rallies, the patient's health steadily declined. The general recognized that the end was near and often spoke of his work as being finished.

Throughout the commander-in-chief's illness his son, Bramwell Booth, chief of staff of the army, and Mrs. Bramwell Booth, gave their unremitting attentions to him both night and day.



GEN. WM. BOOTH.

The aged evangelist died at his residence, The Rookstone, Hadleywood, some eight miles from London, where he had been confined to his bed ever since the operation. Present at the bedside when the end came were Mr. and Mrs. Bramwell Booth and their daughter and son, Adjutant Catherine Booth and Sergeant Booth; the general's youngest daughter, Commissioner Mrs. Booth Helberd, and Commissioner Howard, Colonel Kitching and Dr. Wardlaw Milne.

Public interest now centers in the question of a successor to the late commander. Under the constitution of the Salvation Army, the general nominates his successor. That General Booth did several years ago, placing the name in a sealed envelope, which was deposited with the Salvation Army's lawyers, with instructions that it should not be opened until after his death. While nobody knows what name the envelope encloses, the general belief among the Salvation Army is that it will prove to be that of Bramwell Booth, who for 30 years has been its chief of staff.

Where General Booth will be buried has not yet been decided. While every English member of the Salvation Army is convinced that no man was more worthy of interment in Westminster Abbey, it is not expected this honor will be awarded to General Booth by the abbey authorities. It is the general belief that the commander-in-chief's last resting place will be alongside that of his wife, who 21 years ago, was buried in Abney Park, Stoke Newington.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

New Ulm. — All of the plans for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the Indian massacres of 1862 have been completed, the city is gayly decorated and many visitors have arrived.

Minneapolis. — Ex-Pres. Theodore Roosevelt will be in the twin cities, Thursday, Sept. 5, and will deliver an address in front of the grandstand at the state fair grounds on the afternoon of that day.

Wood Lake. — The Commercial club has made arrangements for the holding of an industrial contest here during the first week in September. Prizes will be offered for the best agricultural exhibits.

Red Wing.—The saloon of Olson & Carlson and the William Remshardt wagon factory were burglarized. The thieves secured but $7.75 for their work. The police believe it was the work of local parties.

Winona. — The Trempealeau bottoms, for years considered the best hunting grounds in this district, will be drained in the reclamation project now being carried out. West Newton will be the only resource of Winona hunters.

Wood Lake. — The saloon owned by J. W. Manecke was entered and the cash register rifled. The robbers gained entrance through the back door by breaking in the glass door. They secured $9.60 in money and stamps and made good their escape.

Winona.—A protest is made by steamboat owners and others interested in the navigation of the upper Mississippi against the closing of the river to transportation on September 15, as proposed by the contractors of the big power dam at Keokuk, Iowa.

Benson.—The "Benson Times" has mailed its last issue. The paper has been sold to a publisher of Holloway, Minn., and will be issued from that town as the "Holloway Herald." The "Times" was the first paper established in Benson, thirty-seven years ago.

Brainerd.—An authoritative statement was issued here regarding the secret vote taken by the federations of the railway shop employes of the roads west of Chicago. There will be no strike called in sympathy with the Harriman line employes. The vote for a general strike of the Federation of Federations was lost by 451 votes.

St. Paul.—Nels Nelson, sixty-six years old, employed by the St. Paul Gas Light company, was struck by an automobile last evening at Cherokee and Annapolis streets, and died a few minutes after reaching St. Joseph's hospital. The machine was driven by George Whitcher, 19 years old, son of E. T. Whitcher, farmer, living near Farmington.

Albert Lea.—The Young People's League of the United Lutheran church held a three-day session here, the first meeting being held in the United Lutheran church. Many prominent clergymen of the United Church of the United States were in attendance, including Prof. C. M. Weswig, president of the Young People's League of America. There were a large number of delegates and visitors and Thursday all were given a launch ride on Fountain lake.

Grand Rapids.—The search for the bandits who robbed the Cohasset State bank of $1,600 and made their escape into the woods that skirt the town, has been without success. Deputy Sheriff Gunderson, who spent a night at the head of a posse which scoured the surrounding country, returned and reported absolutely no clues to the whereabouts of the robbers. Charles D. Brown, manager of the protective department of the Minnesota Bankers' association, arrived in Cohasset and conferred with Sheriff Riley.

Duluth.—A meeting of the house of delegates at the Spalding was preliminary to the opening of the annual state convention of the Minnesota State Medical society. A resolution was adopted by the house of delegates requested the governor to select members of the state board from a list of men recommended by the county medical societies. Another resolution adopted calls for the drafting of a bill governing expert witnesses. It was decided to continue the Journal-Lancet, the official organ of the society, under the same management.

Red Wing.—Boys and girls of the rural schools of Goodhue county will have an industrial contest in connection with the county fair in Zumbrota September 19 and 20. It will be under the management of Superintendent Swain. The sum of $250 will be divided in prizes among the school children for the best work in many different departments. Any child who attended a rural school in Goodhue county last year is entitled to take part in the contest. All entries must be made before 6 P. M. September 18. September 20 will be a special rural school day. Dean Woods and others state educators will be present.

Duluth. — The stockholders of the Chemung Copper company at a special meeting, decided without at a special meeting, decided without division to accept the proposition of Phelps, Dodge & Co., of Boston, to purchase the company's holdings for the sum of $1,250,000 cash.

PENROSE'S CHARGES

SENATOR REPLIES TO CHARGES REGARDING $25,000 GIVEN HIM BY ARCHBOLD.

SAYS ROOSEVELT KNEW

Declares Colonel Was Advised of $125,000 Contribution—Alleges Flinn Offered Million for Support.

Washington, D. C.—In a speech in the senate Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania replied to the charges made regarding a certificate of deposit for $25,000 sent to him by John D. Archbold of the Standard Oil company in 1904.

Senator Penrose admitted receiving that sum from Mr. Archbold, but asserted that it was part of a contribution of $125,000 made by Archbold to the Republican national campaign fund, $100,000 of which amount, he said went to the Republican national committee and $25,000 to himself for use in Pennsylvania.

"President Roosevelt had been advised of the contribution," Senator Penrose declared. He said that later Cornelius N. Bliss, then treasurer of the national committee, asked for another contribution of $150,000, from Archbold and his associates, "interested in the Standard Oil company."

Wm. Flinn Scored.

"The demand was urgent, insistent —I may say imperative and it was represented it came direct from President Roosevelt—declared Senator Penrase forcefully.

Wm. Flinn, Roosevelt leader in Pennsylvania was scored by Penrose. The senator charged that in 1904 Flinn offered him and Israel W. Durham $1,000,000 or even $2,000,000 if they would favor his candidacy to the senate to succeed Senator Quay. Senator Penrose read what purported to be telegrams to show Flinn asked John D. Archbold to assist him in securing the election.

Senator Penrose also attacked E. A. Van Valkenburg, editor of the Philadelphia North American and referred to the "effrontery, hypocrisy and mendacity of the Van Valkenburg-Flinn combination."

At the conclusion of his speech the senator promised further disclosures.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 22.—An attack on Senator Penrose was made by Colonel Roosevelt after he had read the senator's statement in the senate. The ex-president quoted from letters and telegrams which he sent to George B. Cortelyou, chairman of the Republican national committee in 1904, to prove that no contributions had been accepted from the Standard Oil company.

"Mr. Penrose and his allies and the entire crowd of crooked politicians and crooked financiers who have attempted to make these attacks upon me," said Colonel Roosevelt, "have made them, and are making them, not only knowing that they are false, but because they are false and because that they know that the forces behind me, which I, at this time represent, are the only forces which the crooked politicians have really to fear."

Colonel Roosevelt then read from copies of letters which he said he had sent to Mr. Cortelyou in the latter part of October, 1904. In these letters he said he had been informed that the Standard Oil people had contributed $100,000 to the campaign and he told Mr. Cortelyou that if it was true that such a contribution had been made, the money should be returned at once.

2,000 Troops to Nicaragua.

Washington, D. C.—Complete arrangements to throw a force of 2,000 blue jackets and marines into Nicaragua within ten days to protect foreign lives and property and keep railroad communication open from the American legation in Managua to the Pacific coast, were made by the navy department.

Legislative-executive-judiciary bill, with commerce court, and seven-year tenure civil service provisions eliminated, was reintroduced in the house.

The conference report on the Panama canal bill was approved in the senate by a vote of 48 to 18 after a fight against it led by Chairman Brandegee.

The house repassed the legislative-executive-judicial bill with provision for abolishing commerce court, but without seven-year tenure civil service provision.

Senator Lafollete, during discussion of the postoffice bill, charged postoffice officials with rifling his mail, a charge which postal officials declared "absurd."

Representative Theron E. Catlin, republican, of Missouri, was unseated by a vote of 121 to 70 and Patrick F. Gill, democrat, contestant, seated by a vote of 104 to 79.

The Bourne-Bristow parcels post provision in the postoffice appropriation bill was substituted by system of Representative Moon and bill returned to conference.

The financial operations of the republican congressional campaign committee were reviewed before campaign funds investigating committee by Chairman McKinley.

Majority Leader Underwood of the house appointed committee to investigate speeches, attacking public officials, inserted in Record by Representative Akin under "leave to print."

The house voted down, 150 to 79, proposal for provision for two battleships in naval appropriation bill and sent bill back to conference with instructions for acceptance of senate's compromise for one vessel.

GYPSIES GIVE UP LOOT.

Rural Officers Overtake Band and Recover Farmer's $35.

Winona.—Knute Knutson, a retired farmer living in the outskirts of the village of Arcadia, Wis., near here, was robbed of $35 by a band of gypsies and his empty pocketbook returned before he was aware that his pocket had been picked.

The gypsies, who had been ordered out of Winona, reached Arcadia about noon, but were kept on the move by the village marshal. As they were leaving the village Knutson was accosted by one of the women in the band and asked for a match. He is aged and the woman reached in his pocket. A few moments later she came for another match and repeated the "dipping" performance.

The band had disappeared over the hill when Knutson discovered his empty pocketbook and notified the marshal and the deputy sheriff, who began pursuit in an automobile. They overtook the gypsies two miles out of town, recovered the loot and forced the nomads to pay their expenses and the cost of the auto hire.

TOURISTS END TRIP.

Automobile Endurance Run of 1,100 Miles is Accomplished.

Minneapolis.—Very much browned by their hard journey under sun-kissed skies, and each probably carrying a concealed skin preparation, although but few would admit it, the Winnipeg tourists reached Minneapolis after one of the hardest contests that has ever been undertaken by automobile organizations in the Northwest.

Tired but happy, the tourists disembarked from the good road ships in which they had traveled more than 1,100 miles, and departed for their homes. The roads over which the contest was run, while good toward the last, furnished a more severe test for the automobiles than those of other years. All cars that finished, whether penalized or not, were accorded high praise by experts who understood conditions.

With a clean score, the winning Marmon permanently won for its owner, the Fawkes Auto company, clear title to have and to hold the Journal trophy offered as first prize in the touring class.

PEEPER INVADES HOMES.

Unknown Nocturnal Visitor in Half-Attire Alarms Housewives.

Rochester. — Rochester housewives lock their doors and bar their windows after sundown and the police are completely mystified because a "Pete the Peeper" is abroad in the city.

Unlike Wisconsin's famous "Jack the Hugger," the nocturnal visitor has proved nothing more than an unwelcome visitor. Mrs. A. G. Rich suddenly awoke after midnight to gaze into the white face of a coatless individual, who, with staring eyes, stood beside her bed.

The sleeping tent of the Misses Gilberts, daughters of the manager of the Botsford Lumber Company, was invaded on the same evening by a half-dressed stranger, who crept silently to their bedside in his bare feet.

In both cases the peeper disappeared quickly after the screams of the women alarmed the neighborhood.

8-Room House Stolen.

Minneapolis. — Sizzling red hot stoves have been stolen from Minneapolis homes and thieves have moved out all or most of the furniture. But all such crimes became trifling by comparison when Frank N. Edmonds, real estate man, finished making a report to Fred T. Williams, secretary to the mayor. The burden of the plaint was that some busy thief had taken advantage of the catnap of the policeman on the beat and stolen Mrs. Edmonds' eight-room house from its site at Fourth avenue north and Fourth street.

Old Soldiers Going Fast.

Minneapolis. — The mortality records for the Soldiers' Home presented to the board of trustees gave an alarming death rate that caused members of the board to wonder how long it could continue. Seventy-seven persons living at the home died in the year. When it is known that the average number at the home for that period was slightly in excess of 400, it can be seen that the percentage of deaths is exceptionally high. No fault is attached to the management for the high death rate. Deaths were due to old age largely.

BANKS FACE CRISIS

Institutions Hope to Move Record Crop on 6 Per Cent Basis.

Minneapolis.—To furnish half a billion dollars to pay for the northwest crop, to keep the money moving and so distributed that every farmer desiring it may get spot cash for all the grain he wants to sell, to meet the demand for money that is just beginning to be felt and will increase from now on and finance the great crop on a basis of moderate interest rates to borrowers is the financial labor Minneapolis bankers are facing. Everything is going to go smoothly, they say, notwithstanding the great crop and big money requirements.

This is what the bankers must do:

Provide $450,000,000 to $500,000,000 for the crops in Minneapolis territory.

Keep cash going into the country at a rate that may mean shipments as heavy as $1,000,000 daily by October.

Keep grain trade firms provided with money to finance their purchases and at the same time take ample care of jobbing and manufacturing and other merchandizing borrowers.

Keep interest rates down to reasonable figures.

This is how the bankers propose to do it:

Make the cash dollar go out into the country and come back again in the shortest possible time. Every man may help in the crop movement by paying his bills the day he gets the money, thus sending the dollar on its way to do more work.

Make the credit dollar begin work, as early as possible in the season.

Try to get part of the extra $100,000,000 to $150,000,000 that crops of Minnesota and the Dakotas alone will call for this year, through making the money do more work.

Maintain the fluidity of the "in and out" flow of money as the railroads maintain the flow of grain.

Make liberal long time agreements with firms expecting to need much money during the season, at reasonable rates.

If the railroads can prevent the packing up of grain and consequent congestion on their lines that link the terminal markets with the wheat fields, and if money can be loosened up and put to new use after it has performed duty in one instance, the bankers of the northwest will this year perform the financial feat of moving the greatest crop the northwest ever grew on a 6 per cent basis.

STATE DOCTORS ELECT

Dr. R. J. Hill of Minneapolis Succeeds St. Paul Practitioner.

Duluth. — At an important business meeting of the Minnesota State Medical association here, Dr. R. J. Hill, of Minneapolis, was elected president to succeed Dr. Haldor Sneve, of St. Paul. Minneapolis was selected as the next meeting place, some time in October, 1913.

Dr. H. C. Cooney, of Princeton, was elected vice-president, and Dr. S. H. Boyer, of Duluth, was chosen second vice-president. Dr. Thomas McDavitt, of St. Paul, was re-elected secretary and Dr. Earl Hare, of Minneapolis, was elected treasurer. Doctors Thomas McDavitt, of St. Paul; Leo M. Krafts, of Minneapolis, and J. W. Andrews, of Mankato, were selected as delegates to attend the annual convention of the American Medical association, which will be held at Minneapolis in October.

A "bang-up" good sign that the people are determined to rule the country in the future is seen in the lack of respect or love of party. A few years ago it was only necessary to "crack the party whip" to carry a precinct, a county or a nation; now everybody seems to have a political opinion of his own and takes pride in exhibiting it. Some of our political philosophers (?) bewail the condition but it looks as if the day of the boss in politics had come to an end.—Cass Lake Times.

"In Old Kentucky"

It is not difficult to understand why such a play as "In Old Kentucky," announced for presentation at the auditorium Thief River Falls on Saturday evening August 31, 1912, enjoys practically the same popularity today as it did twenty years ago, when it made its first bow for public approval. It stands in the same relation to the South as "Shore Acres" and "The Old Homestead" to New England, and "Arizona" to the Southwest, a sample of the varied fabric of our national life, giving permanent dramatic form to that interesting and romantic period which the conflict between the states brought to an abrupt termination. Life was less complex in those days, hence the simplicity and directness of thought and action. The feeling one derives from witnessing its presentation is as soothing and restful as the open fields and broad mountain vistas of the Blue Grass state itself. The rough poetry of the mountaineers rings true, and the ethical sense is satisfied in that even-handed justice is meted out to all. "In Old Kentucky" is a worthy example of the survival of the fittest. Today, it is as strong a favorite with theatre goers as ever, its fame is perennial and its appeal is lasting. It continues year after year to represent all that is sweetest and best in life lived in the open and near to nature's heart in God's acre. The story of the brave little mountain girl "Madge Brierly," and her unselfish devotion to the call of duty has touched a responsive chord in the hearts of playgoers throughout the entire United States, Canada, and wherever the Anglo-Saxon tongue prevails. There are features of unusual interest, such as the pickaninnies, the exciting race scene, the mountaineer's feud, the thrilling leap of the brave heroine across the mountain abyss, and the plantation scene, that have never lost their power to please patrons of this spirited drama. Miss Mildred Johnson in the leading role, her fourth season with the play, will have the assistance of an unusually capable cast.

The Thief River Falls management guarantees that this is the "big" city production of "In Old Kentucky" owned and managed by the original producers Tell and Dingwell and not a so called imitation.

Out of town patrons may secure reservations by addressing J. P. Curtis on or before 10 o'clock a. m., August 29. Prices $1,00 and $1,50.

State Boosts Orchards

Demonstration orchards are to be cared for by the Minnesota agricultural college. Orchardists are to turn over their orchards to the care of the college experts, who will supervise them, watched by the farmer. Not only in spraying and frost furnacing, but the packing will be attended to, canneries will be established, apple butter boilers, cider mills, the cost of the plants to be borne pro rata by farmers. Proper marketing plans and boxing will be a part of the instructions. By this method the state where the famous golden grain belt beers are produced, may take the lead also in apple and fruit production. Alex Thompson Crookston, agent.

ALL IN THE GOLDEN FUTURE.

Beautiful Picture of What Life on the Farm Is to Be Like.

The future farmer will subirrigate his land, and defy drought as well as floods. He will become a scientific forester, and every farm will produce wood and lumber as well as wheat and apples. A single acre will produce what ten acres yield now. Women will work out doors as heartily as men; in fact, they will be the horticulturists and the truck gardeners. There will be closer relation between the producer and the consumer ignoring a horde of middlemen who frequently waste more than is destroyed by ignorant help and insect foes combined. Under the alliance with the school the farm will be valued not only for its gross weight of products, but for its poems and its education. As our schools become places for applying as well as acquiring knowledge, our farm homes will become integral parts of the garden school and the school farm. The alliance between the home and the school will become very close. A valley full of farms is already the nearest to paradise that we have, but the future will tenfold its wealth and hundredfold its delights.—Independent.

AS EXPLAINED BY THE GUIDE.

Garrulous Old Woman Found Out What Caused Streak on Water.

The garrulous old woman in the stern of the boat had pestered the guide with her comments and questions ever since they had started. Her meek little husband, who was hunched toad-like in the bow, fished in silence. The old woman had seemingly exhausted every possible point in fish and animal life, woodcraft and personal history when she suddenly espied one of those curious paths of oily, unbroken water frequently seen on small lakes which are ruffled by a light breeze.

"Oh, guide, guide," she exclaimed, "what makes that funny streak in the water—No, there—Right over there!"

The guide was busy rebaiting the old gentleman's hook and merely mumbled "U-m-mm."

"Guide," repeated the old woman in tones that were not to be denied, "look right over where I'm pointing and tell me what makes that funny streak in the water."

The guide looked up from his baiting with a sigh.

"That? Oh, that's where the road went across the ice last winter."—Everybody's Magazine.

Work and Life.

I was much impressed by what the head of a large and prosperous bourgeois French family said to an American friend: "During the day we are all busy with our various avocations. The evenings are devoted to more serious things—reading, music, conversation, society." This is surely the normal point of view of a civilized man living in a civilized society.

In Italy, where social life, as in France, is taken somewhat more seriously than with us, it is usual for the women prominent in society to receive in the evening. One evening a week (sometimes two, in a few cases every evening) is set apart for receiving the friends and habitues of the house. In Rome, where society is more crystallized, where the social game is better played than in any community I know, one or two of the great houses are open to visitors on every evening of the week.—Maud Howe, in Harper's Bazar.

Causes of Blindness.

The dangers to which the modern eye is exposed fall into two great classes—disease and overuse from near work. Here another great consoling fact faces us, and that is that while overwork and consequent eye strain are by far the commonest troubles that befall the modern eye, discomfort and inefficiency are as far as they go in 99 cases out of 100. It is a fact that 99 9-10 per cent. of all blindness is due to disease and not to overwork.

More significant yet, seven-tenths of the diseases which produce blindness are the acute infections, against which civilization wages an unceasing and victorious conflict.—Woman's Home Companion.

What It Reminded Him Of.

When Gen. Schenck, whose greatest fame rests upon his having introduced the game of poker into England, first arrived in London as American minister to the court of St. James he took a little of his spare time to visit the sights of the British capital. Among other places he visited Mme. Tussaud's wax works.

"And what do you think of our great wax work exhibition?" asked a friend.

"Well," replied the general, "it struck me as being very like the ordinary English evening party."

For County Attorney

I am a candidate for county attorney for Pennington county on the republican ticket on the first primaries to be held in the county. I have never held a county office although I have been in the practice of law for twenty-two years, but would consider it an honor to be the first nominee of the party for county attorney in the county. I will be delighted to receive your vote and support.

J. M. BISHOP.

County Auditor

Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912

I wish hereby to announce to the voters of Pennington county, that I am a candidate for the the republican nomination for the office of county auditor, at the September 17, 1912, primaries. Since my appointment to this office, at the time of the organization of Pennington county, I have given the office my whole time and my very best efforts. Should I be favored with the nomination and election, I believe with the experience gained, I will be still better prepared to serve you the coming term.

If our services have met with your approval I earnestly solicit your consideration and support.

Very truly yours,

A. H. FASEL

Clerk of Court

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I will be a candidate for the republican nomination for clerk of the district court for Pennington county, subject to the decision of the voters at the republican primary, September 17, 1912.

I have occupied the position since the organization of Pennington county and have tried to the best of my ability to be strictly impartial and as efficient as my ability would allow. I will be pleased to have the votes and support of all citizens who believe that I have filled the position in an honest and efficient manner.

If nominated and elected I hereby promise to give the office my personal attention and my best efforts to honestly administer the affairs of the office in a strictly impartial and efficient manner.

HARRY E. IVES.

Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Andrew Trovaton.)

For County Treasurer

I wish to announce that I am a candidate for county treasurer, subject to the ratification of the republican voters at the primaries, September 17, 1912. Being that political parties have always regarded it as important to have their members elected to all offices, it must be for aid in promoting party politics, for so far as the work in the county offices is concerned, it can make no difference whatever; what the officer's political affiliations are, so the idea must be that he is expected to talk and work; and use the advantage of his public position, in aiding the party to which he belongs. I believe that it is of the utmost importance to have the republican party control at least one branch of congress, in order to maintain the average of prices. While the price-level does not prove that times are good, theoretically, yet we know that with the enormous debt of the country, it will be harder to pay it with low prices than with high, steady prices. I believe that, because one cannot support the whole republican ticket, it is no reason at all to quit supporting candidates for congress and the legislature, which is by far more important than the office of president, so far as party politics is concerned. These are my ideas, and I shall use my influence to help along on those lines, no matter whether I am nominated or not.

Sincerely for the success of the party,

ANDREW TROVATON.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by C. H. Martz)

County Surveyor

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I am a candidate for the republican nomination for the office of county surveyor at the primaries September 17, 1912.

Your support will be appreciated.

C. H. MARTZ.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Wilhelm Michelet.

Judge of Probate

I hereby announce that I am a non-partisan candidate for re-election to the office of judge of probate in and for Pennington county, Minnesota. I respectfully solicit your vote and support at the primary election to be held on Tuesday Sept. 17, 1912.

WILHELM MICHELET,

Judge of Probate,

Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by E. Mostue,).

County Superintendent

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election for the office of superintendent of schools for Pennington county subject to the ratification of the voters at the primary to be held Tuesday, Sept, 17, 1912.

Your vote and support are respectfully solicited.

E. A. MOSTUE.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by George L. Netteland.)

County Superintendent

St. Hilaire, Minn., August 5, 1912.

I wish hereby to announce to readers of the Spectator that I am a candidate for superintendent of schools of Pennington county, and hope you will give me your votes and support next fall.

I am not running on any particular party ticket as the new primary law requires that all candidates for superintendent of schools run on a non-partisan ballot, on their merits.

Yours very truly,

GEORGE L. NETTELAND.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by O. F. Post.)

Clerk of Court

According to the present laws, that we as a citizen are sworn to abide by, it is necessary that we file application for candidacy for the office of clerk of court, and publish notice of our desire.

I am perfectly willing to abide by the decision of my friends and aquaintances as to my qualifications to clerically and economically fulfill the duties of this office.

I have been a citizen of this county for twenty-nine years. I will most surely appreciate any favors that the voters of Pennington county feel disposed to confer upon myself at the primary election to be held September 17, 1912.

Yours truly, O. F. POST.

I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairny County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

PARK TREES PERILED

Fine Elms in New York Endangered by Caterpillars.

More Spraying Is Needed but There Is Not Enough City Money to do This Thoroughly, Says Commissioner Storer.

New York.—Visitors to Central park within the last few days, and those who walk along the Fifth avenue side of the park, have been appalled at the destruction done to the fine elm trees by thousands of caterpillars, remarks a writer in the New York Tribune. They are the tussock moths, long known among landscape gardeners as one of the most persistent and destructive insects with which they have to deal. Within the limits of Central park they seem to have sprung into life in unusually large numbers this year. Charles Downing Lay, the landscape architect of the park, said recently that in a recent trip through the parks of Brooklyn and the Bronx he saw comparatively few of them.

E. S. Avery, who lives at the Metropolitan club, and several other lovers of New York's fine trees, have called attention to this unfortunate state of affairs, and have not hesitated to say that unless the deadly moth situation is taken in hand quickly and forcibly Central park and other sections of Manhattan island which possess handsome trees will see many of the best specimens degenerated to decaying stumps before the approach of another spring.

Landscape architects and authorities on trees who were asked yesterday if it were too late in the season to do anything to counteract the destructive effects of these pests said on the contrary that this was the time to get to work. As soon as the caterpillars emerge from their cocoons, which they are now doing by the thousands, they start upward for the green leaves, upon which they feed, and then return to the trunk to lay their eggs within the bark. If the trees are well sprayed with arsenate of lead mixture they will die before denuding the tree partially of the leaves.

"This spraying is the second means of eradicating the moths," said William J. Zartmann yesterday. For ten years he was superintendent of parks in Brooklyn. "My method of fighting the tussock moth has been to have workmen clean off the trunk and branches thoroughly in the winter with wire brushes. The small cocoons are swept out of their hiding places, and, being caught on pieces of canvas under the tree, are then burned. This is a laborious job, for with large trees the men must get up to the top and scrape all the branches and one man cannot do much more than three trees a day.

Type of Trees That Suffer.

"The spraying comes when the moths first appear—anywhere from the end of June to the middle of July. If thoroughly applied by power spraying machines to every part of the tree one good spraying ought to be sufficient."

Mr. Zartmann figured out the approximate cost of this work at about $1.30 a tree. The spraying is the most costly. A crew of five men and a modern power spraying machine, he said, ought to clean about sixty trees a day.

"One or two years' work is not enough," added Mr. Zartmann. "It must be faithfully followed out year after year, and then, while we cannot prevent the appearanec of these insects entirely, they will be less in number and less destructive to the future beauty of the trees."

Park Commissioner Stover, when asked what was being done to kill off the moths and prevent their future propagation, said that he believed everything that could be done with the means at hand was being accomplished, and he added that spraying machines were at work in several parts of the park.

Besides the caterpillars the remaining elms show indications of other diseases noticeable by the dead branches protruding in a most unpicturesque way from the sides and tops.

"An English family, for instance, exchanges children for a couple of years with a German family. References are first exchanged and all that sort of thing."

"I see."

"Thus both sets of children get a chance to learn another language and get acquainted with another country. It's quite a scheme."

Natica—Yes, to be sure. But why jeopardize it?

Carrying It Too Far.

"Scientific management, like any other good thing, may be carried to excess."

The speaker was R. Marriott Thompson, the San Francisco scientific management expert. He continued, says the New York Tribune:

"We scientific managers musn't go as far as Hussler went.

"Hussler was the proprietor of a tremendous factory where scientific management had reduced the motions of every hand from 800 to 17. Hussler attended a very fashionable wedding one day, a wedding where the ceremony was performed by a bishop, assisted by a dean and a canon, and in the most impressive part of the writ Hussler, overcome by his scientific management ideas, rushed up to the altar and pushed the bishop and canon rudely back.

"'Here, boys,' he said, 'one's quite enough for a little job like this.'"

Got His Answer.

When Oscar Wilde came to the United States to lecture on aesthetics in his highly aesthetic velvet costume—and incidentally to prepare the public mind for the proper appreciation of Gilbert and Sullivan's "Patience," in which the aesthetic movement was held up to ridicule—he used to complain that America was very uninteresting since it had "no antiquities and no curiosities." But he ventured on this disparagement once too often, for in the course of his travels he uttered it to the American Girl, and she replied with the demure depravity of candid innocence that this was not quite a fair reproach, since "we shall have the antiquities in time, and we are already importing the curiosities."

Moving Pictures Popular.

In a recent number of the Daily Consular Reports are collected memoranda from cities and towns in various distant parts of the world showing the universal quality of the popular interest which the moving pictures excite. England, Japan, Turkey, Mexico, India, Australia and the islands of the sea all have the same story to tell; wherever the cinematograph goes it finds an instant and sustained welcome.

Autocratic Assertions.

"Are you a servant of the people?" asked the constituent.

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum. "Only it should be observed that, a really first-class servant may come pretty nearly being a boss."

WELL PEOPLE TOO

Wise Doctor Gives Postum to Convalescents.

A wise doctor tries to give nature its best chance by saving the little strength of the already exhausted patient, and building up wasted energy with simple but powerful nourishment.

"Five years ago," writes a doctor "I commenced to use Postum in my own family instead of coffee." (It's a well-known fact that tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) "I was so well pleased with the results that I had two grocers place it in stock, guaranteeing its sale.

"I then commenced to recommend it to my patients in place of coffee, as a nutritious beverage. The consequence is, every store in town is now selling it, as it has become a household necessity in many homes.

"I'm sure I prescribe Postum as often as any one remedy in the Materia Medica—in almost every case of indigestion and nervousness I treat, and with the best results.

"When I once introduce it into a family, it is quite sure to remain. I shall continue to use it and prescribe it in families where I practice.

"In convalescence from pneumonia, typhoid fever and other cases I give it as a liquid, easily absorbed diet. You may use my letter as a reference any way you see fit." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

LITTLE NATION OF ANDORRA

Republic Is a Veritable Rip Van Winkle Land Hidden High Among the Pyrenees.

Paris, France.—There is nothing else in the world quite like the little "protected republic" of Andorra, a veritable Rip Van Winkle land, hardly yet stirring from its thousand years' slumber, and in its dreams it still hears echoing the march of the valiant paladins of Charlemagne, by whose help it came into being. But it is likely to waken soon and be made to realize that it, too, belongs to the 20th century. For a railroad is being built across the Pyrenees just east of Andorra, and then will be sure to come a wagon road—the valley can be entered now only by a bridle path—from the railroad into its midst.

Perched up among the Pyrenees, on the border between France and Spain and on the ridge of the watershed between the Atlantic and the Mediterranean, the flag of this proud little nation flutters over a region that is almost as much the land of the free and quite as much the home of the brave as is that of the Stars and Stripes, although it includes but 175 square miles and contains a population of only 6,000 souls.

Old Stronghold in Andorra.

For over 700 years Andorra has thrived under a modified double protectorate, the rule of France on the north and of the Bishop of Ungel on the south. A representative of each lives in the valley, administers justice and receives a small biennial tribute. Otherwise Andorra is an independent and self-governing state. Its relations to these two "over-lords" are a quaint survival of medieval feudalism.

FINDS HIS LONG-LOST RING

Man Gets Wedding Sand Buried in Sand Three Years at King's Beach in Massachusetts.

Boston, Mass.—Three years ago this summer J. Franklin Brown, now head bookkeeper in a shoe factory at Chelsea, lost a wedding ring while in bathing on King's Beach, Swampscott. Today he has the ring, and behind its restoration is a story of a bit of detective work.

Two weeks ago Arthur Getchell, mail clerk in the Lynn postoffice, was rolling around on the beach in a bathing suit when the sandy recess in which the ring had lain hidden for three years was exposed. The only clue to the identity of the owner was an inscription on the inside which read, "From Flossie to Frank, Oct. 11, 1905."

How to find the owner on such a meagre clue, when thousands bathe on the beach every summer, was the problem. For a week Getchell searched every place that he could think of. Then, remembering the old adage about two heads being better than one, he consulted a friend, George F. Alley, and, out of their conferences, a bright thought popped forth: "Why not look up the marriage records on that date."

That settled it. They found a Frank and a Flossie were married and Frank lived then at 53 Essex street, Lynn, from where he was traced. Flossie, before she became Mrs. Brown, was Miss Lauckner of 41 Porter street, Lynn.

FINDS GREAT STORE OF LOOT

Stocks of Silks and Satins Valued at $25,000 Is Discovered by Alert Policeman.

New York.—A policeman passing a tall loft building on Tenth avenue heard men's voices coming from an upper floor, and broke in to investigate. In a closet on the fourth floor he found a muscular young man who jumped at him so quickly that they both rolled down three flights of stairs together. The young man was underneath at the foot of the stairs, and was promptly handcuffed. A search of the lofts revealed a great stack of silks and satins, valued at $25,000, packed up ready to be taken away. The prisoner told the police later that three other men escaped while he was struggling on the stairs. They had an automobile outside the building to use in carrying off their loot, he said.

REPORTED BY THE GROUCH

Here the Original Hiram J. Tells of His Attendance at Country "Function."

"Having nothing else to do," remarked the old codger, "I attended a function while I was over at Torpidville the other day. The affair was held in a dispirited grove at the end of a road in which every time a horse popped down his foot the dust shot up in the air like a skyrocket. A band was playing without the slightest remorse. A statesman, with a neck as wrinkled as a pickle, droned forth redundant nonenities without end. A sad and rickety merry-go-wabble wound 'round and 'round to the sound of its own plaintive peedle-deedle. In a tipsy pavilion a hoarse person was endeavoring to sell, in brazen defiance of the pure food and drug act, what looked alarmingly like horned toads fried in axle-grease. A gentleman in a striped tent nearby hoarsely stated that he preferred to eat snakes at ten cents per serpent. There was the usual balloon which seemed perfectly willing to do anything but go up. Scattered around through the festal scene were a few old soldiers, grumbling; a smattering of farmers, also grumbling; sundry honest voters, likewise grumbling; and various other folks, nothing about whom is worth mentioning except that they, too, were grumbling. It may have been a reunion, a fair, a rally, a picnic, or what-not; but whatever they chanced to call it, 'twas an excellent example of one of our most cherished institutions."—Kansas City Star.

CHILD'S FACE ALL RED SPOTS

632 N. 5th St., Terre Haute, Ind.—"My little nephew, a boy of four years, had a breaking out on his face. It was little red spots at first, then he would rub and scratch and water blisters would form, and wherever the water would run another would come until his face was covered with them. He would cry and fret. His mother got some medicine, but it did not do any good. He would scream and cry and say it hurt. We hardly knew him, his litle face was all red spots and blisters. So I begged him to let me put some Cuticura Ointment on them. The next morning I made a strong soap suds with Cuticura Soap and washed his face in the warm suds. The little blisters burst by pressing the cloth on them. After I had his face washed, I put the Cuticura Ointment on and in a short time his little face was all red and dry. I kept using the Cuticura Soap and putting on the Cuticura Ointment and his face got as well and it did not leave a scar. He was entirely cured in about one week and a half." Child's Fear of the Dark.

If mothers notice that the brains of their little ones conjure up uncanny sights and thoughts from the shadows of a room more or less dark, let the light burn brightly. To force a child to become accustomed to the darkness is a grave error, if its nervous system is so organized that this forcing is productive of a fright.

The nervous system of a child is a very susceptible organization and the deleterious impressions made upon it will often make their influence felt throughout its whole after life. If the child asks for a light under such circumstances do not refuse it.

John Burroughs is well known as one of the foremost of nature writers in this country. Some time ago he visited his brother, Eden Burroughs, who lives in the Catskills, at a place called Hobart. The two brothers went fox hunting together. The honor of the hunt came to Eden, who shot the only fox. It so happened that foxskins were worth five dollars at that time, and the successful Nimrod took much pride in telling how he got the better of the sage of Slabsides. Later in boasting to a few friends about it in the presence of his brother, John, he was interrupted by, "You have bragged about that fox hunt long enough. You shot the fox, sold the skin and got five dollars. I wrote a little account of the hunt, and got $75 from the magazine which published it. So there you are!"

One of the New York representatives in congress tells of a social function in an asembly district political club on the East side, whereat the chairman of the entertainment committee acted as master of ceremonies.

The chairman was very busy introducing the newly-arrived members of the club to the guests, who included a number of municipal officers. The representative mentioned was presented in a way to halve his official honors with his wife, as "The Honorable and Mrs. Congressman Blank." Next came a couple who were not known to the master of ceremonies, but, after receiving the correct name in a whisper, he announced:

POPULAR SYMBOL OF VALUE

Young Man Evidently Was Lacking in His Appreciation of the Country's Statesmen.

There is plenty of food for cynical thoughts in the national capital, as is shown by the following incident which happened on a Washington street car:

A worldly young man, prone to criticise, was gazing at the advertisements which decorate the interior of the car. One advertised a new kind of collar for men. The dome of the capitol was represented encircled by one of the collars, and on the senate and house wings of the building were placards giving prices and sizes. The placard on the senate end of the capitol read, "Quarter size," and that on the other end said, "Two for a quarter."

The worldly cynical young man turned to his companion.

"That," he remarked, "just about expresses my opinion of some of these here congressmen."—Judge.

FUNERAL SERVICES FOR SALVATIONIST HELD IN LONDON ARE IMPRESSIVE.

FORTY BANDS OF MUSIC.

Music and Banks of Flowers Are Features—Body, in Pine Coffin, Saluted by His Followers in Uniform.

London, England.—Funeral services for the founder of the Salvation army, General William Booth, were held at the Olympia. In keeping with the traditions of the organization they were carried out with fervor and impressiveness. Thirty-four thousand persons participated in the function. Nearly half of them were blue coats and red jerseys or bonnets with red ribbon, so familiar on the streets of the cities of the world where the army is established.

The body of the late general, in a plain pine coffin, rested high upon a white catafalque in front of the big platform across the end of the hall where all the chief officers of the organizations were seated and where 40 bands of music were massed.

The flag of the army "of fire and blood," which the general unfurled on Mount Calvary, was planted above the coffin. A bank of flowers, composed of the tributes sent by members of royalty and many societies, were behind it. Flags of various nations, in which the commander-in-chief had carried on campaigns, and the standards of the older divisions of the army, were arranged on the platform.

The front rows of chairs before the coffin were filled with representatives of various bodies, and also the equerry for the king, several mayors in their robes and chaines of office, a delegation from the stock exchange, ministers and clergymen of all the Protestant churches and Jewish rabbis, and many notable personages were seated throughout the house. The rank and file of the audience was composed mainly of plain people.

The service itself was not only a memorial, but a mammoth meeting of prayer and praise. The most solemn moments of the long meeting were when the coffin was borne along the center of the hall to the sonorous music of the "Death March of Saul." A small procession, representing many branches of the army's activities, carrying the flags of their respective countries, preceded it. Immediately before the body a brigadier bore aloft the crimson flag which the general raised at Jerusalem and under which he died at Hadley Wood, and behind which marched the officers from foreign countries. Then came Bramwell Booth with his wife, both wearing uniforms of commissioners, and members of the Booth families.

His Bible and Cap.

Every seat on the floor and in the galleries was taken when this service was begun and several thousand were banked around the outskirts of the hall, half of whom could not see over the shoulders of those in front. When the bands began with the very well known army hymn, "The Better World," the ocean of voices took up the strain and sung three stanzas of it.

The most impressive feature of the solemnities was when all the soldiers of the army rose and recited the covenant of fidelity, pledging themselves to be faithful soldiers of the Lord.

NEW U. S. PALACE IN ROME

Thomas J. O'Brien, Ambassador to Italy, Has at Last Found Suitable Residence.

Rome.—Thomas J. O'Brien, the American ambassador, has at last solved in a most suitable way the question of his residence as the representative of a power like the United States.

In Rome the ambassador of a great country can hardly live, without losing some prestige, in a modern house or villa. The residence which the French ambassador occupies, the Palazzo Farnese, is a national monument in itself. The Austrian ambassador lives in the Palazzo Venezia, a stronghold, so-called, because it belonged to the Republic of Doges.

Corner of the Garden Wall.

The ambassador of Spain has the Palazzo di Spagna, which for centuries housed the grandees of that country. The German ambassador is housed in the Palazzo Chaffarelli, which from the heights of the capitol frowns over the Eternal City below. The Japanese ambassador lives in the historic Palazzo Altiere, erected in 1670.

Ambassador O'Brien understood this situation and set to work to find a proper residence, which for a time seemed impossible. He signed a contract to occupy a gorgeous apartment in the Palazzo Barberini, a most imposing structure of the Renaissance, begun in 1624, and finished by the ubiquitous Bernini, whose works confront one at every turn in Rome.

FORGET "HONOR THY FATHER"

So Says Kansas Hospital Chief in His Report of Young People of That State.

Topeka, Kan.—"Honor thy father and thy mother," is a forgotten doctrine in Kansas, declared Dr. T. C. Biddle, superintendent of the Topeka hospital for the insane, in his biennial report to the state board of control. Dr. Biddle caustically arraigns the young people of the state for their indifference toward the old. After reporting a marked increase of senile dementia since his last report, Dr. Biddle says:

"It appears that among Kansas young people 'honor thy father and thy mother' has become an antiquated dogma."

Dr. Biddle declares most of the cases of senile dementia are turned over to the state because children do not care to look after their afflicted parents. They are willing to pay the state for keeping them, but will not do the work themselves. The people are harmless, simply having a breakdown because of age.

Permit to Wed Issued to Minnesota Man Over the Long-Distance Wire by Clerk.

Minneapolis, Minn.—It lacked only one hour until Dr. W. O. Fryberger and Miss Mary Hughes, both of Minneapolis, were to be wed at Miss Hughes' summer home, near Buffalo, Minn., when the clerk of the district court refused a license to Dr. Fryberger on the ground that the parties did not reside in the county.

In that hour Dr. Fryberger called the clerk of the district court in Minneapolis, made an affidavit over the long-distance telephone and received a permission to wed by the same way, the clerk of the court at Buffalo taking the fee for the Hennepin county office.

It is said to be the first case in Hennepin county of a license being issued over the telephone.

When Labor Slept by Harry Irving Green

It chanced that once upon a time remote,
The weary giant, known as Labor, smote
His thigh a sounding whack and cried, "I'm blest,
But I have toiled enough and now I'll rest.
I'll let the world wag onward as it may,
While I go home and have my holiday."
So, Labor laid aside his tools and crept
Deep in his cavern, where he promptly slept.

An hour went by, an hour without a sound,
The shops were stilled, no more their wheels went 'round,
The mills were fastened close with bolt and lock,
The steamship idly rubbed against her dock,
The engine moveless slept, the anvil stood
As silent as a gravestone in a wood.
While Mankind, startled by the awful still,
Together whispered, awed, "Is Labor ill?"

And as the moments passed o'er town and farm,
And all was still, there 'rose a great alarm,
Went forth the giant Commerce, loud to shout,
Deep into Labor's cavern, "Friend, come out,
You're needed by us—needed in a trice.
Please come at once! We'll pay you any price.
You've slept an hour already—all your fill.
Come forth at once. The world is standing still."

And Labor, wakened by the other's cries,
Stretched forth his brawny arms and rubbed his eyes,
And mused a bit, then with good-natured smile,
Said, "Yes, I'll come, but make it worth my while.
One day each year you'll give me privilege free,
One day each year you'll consecrate to me,
While one day I will consecrate to play,
And (chuckling, said), we'll call it Labor Day."

[redacted]

EQUAL OPPORTUNITY

The ultimate aim of the labor movement is to establish a condition of society, first, that will insure to each head of a family equal and ample opportunity to secure a livelihood, which will be sufficient to provide his family with the same necessities and luxuries of life enjoyed by any other citizen; second, that will enable him to give his children an education in whatever direction they may decide to follow, equal to that received by the children of every other member of society.

To enlarge the opportunity to secure employment, the trade unions are advocating and establishing a shorter workday for its members. To insure equal education, the trade unions are endeavoring to secure the enactment of compulsory education laws and child labor laws in every state, territory and province in America, thus withdrawing the children from the factories, mines and workshops.

The trade unions assert that all benefits accruing from the inauguration of labor-saving devices or cheap forms of distribution should be enjoyed equally by all the people, instead of being diverted to the benefit of the few.

The labor movement holds that all people are entitled to partake equally of the joy of living; that a condition that permits part of our people to live in affluence, while another part is compelled to work long hours for meager wages, should be abolished; that a condition that furnishes work to only a fraction of the people and leaves another fraction without employment, and helpless for long periods, should be eliminated from our civilization.

Many claim that efforts along that direction are an iridescent dream and cannot be realized for years to come. In my opinion it will come. It is now approaching. It will come with the full awakening of the consciousness of our people; a consciousness which is rapidly growing in strength and power, and is now in abeyance, awaiting the psychological moment when the great vibrating will of all the people has been crystallized into an active and intelligent force that will sweep aside all obstacles that resist its purpose to mete out justice to all mankind and establish among all the peoples of the earth—the Brotherhood of Man.

A Trophy of Victory.

The annual holiday of labor is not a bit of driftwood picked up by accident. It is one of the trophies of battle and victory. Its message is of labor's rights and struggles and triumphs, not of labor's play spells or of gifts received from any source.

LESSON OF LABOR DAY

An Annual Holiday That Is More Than Just a Play Time

The first Monday in September brings an annual reminder of the fact that one of the holidays which are now practically nation-wide is so new and so vital that it is growing visibly and rapidly in prestige and usefulness. Labor day was an experiment so recently that men still young remember its beginnings; now it is one of the firmly established and much-valued rest and recreation days of the year.

But the day is more than that. It is a holiday which is not a mere play day. Nor is it only a celebration of some great event of the past. It looks ahead quite as much as it looks backward. It is filled with the spirit of advancing, confident, buoyant life. It is even a militant day, with a strong suggestion of willingness and ability to battle for rights denied or principles assailed.

It is well for the country that Labor day is so thoroughly alive. It is a good thing for American people that such a holiday comes around every fall to remind all classes and conditions of men and women of the vital and fundamental part which the labor of the hands plays and must always play in the progress of the world and the very existence of mankind. It is too easy to forget, at times, that everything rests on hard physical toil and that without it all of the boasted flowering of civilization would be impossible.

Labor day is broad enough, in its name and in the break which it makes in the regular grind of trade and industry and in all of the productive activities of the country to cover all kinds of work, but it is the especial property of manual labor and more particularly of manual labor so organized, so awake and so strong that it can speak as a vast body of men trained to act together and work for the same ends.

That is to say, the annual holiday of labor is taken as a right, not as a gift. It is a demonstration of strength ready for use, not a day of recreation and fun without a serious thought.

But the stronger labor becomes the less danger there is of needless and destructive labor wars. With power comes responsibility, and the more there is that has been won the more there is, also, to hazard in strife. The labor organizations which are most thoroughly developed and united are the ones which get along best with employers and are most reasonable and businesslike in the negotiations which they carry on. The strong and successful do not lightly risk the fruits of their past triumphs, and the same qualities that made them succeed keep them safe and sound.

Labor day is filled with such lessons. It is [illegible]

WAITS RIDGELY NEWS

Man Who Beat Back Sioux Confined to Bed.

St. Paul.—Colonel Timothy J. Sheehan, who fifty years ago with only 100 men of the Fifth Minnesota and eighty citizens, held Fort Ridgely against 1,200 Sioux Indians, beating back constant attacks for nine days and saving the lives of 400 women and children, eagerly awaited news of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the event which took place Thursday at the fort.

Weak from the weight of 78 years and the after-effects of seven wounds received in the service of his country, Colonel Sheehan has been unable to leave his bed for sixteen months at his home, 831 Ashland avenue.

"Do they still remember Fort Ridgely?" he asked the newspaper man, who was taken to his bedside, "it's a long time ago."

Modestly the old colonel responded to the questions put to him.

"I was at Yellow Medicine when the massacre occurred and started back for the fort," he said. "I had with me 100 men of the Fifth and about eighty citizens, thirty of whom were practically unarmed.

"Yes, it was a hard, quick march, we made back to the fort past scenes of horror and desolation left by the Indians. My men stood it nobly. There were from 300 to 400 women in the fort and they had to be saved.

"The Sioux, about 1,200 strong were at the fort when we arrived. We were nine days in the fort before General Sibley arrived.

"We were fighting most of the time. We had three battles and a number of skirmishes. Little Crow was in command of the Indians. The women helped make bullets. That was all they could do. They were very helpful and brave."

"How old were you then, colonel?" he was asked.

"Twenty-eight," he answered, and the memory of the intervening years seemed to overcome him and he fell into a revery and did not seem inclined to answer more questions.

State Democratic Organization.

St. Paul.—F. A. Pike of St. Paul, who was recently appointed president of the Federation of Democratic Precincts clubs for Minnesota by the national organization of democratic clubs has made up his state organization, and announced its officers and committees as follows: Vice president, Guy A. Thomas, Minneapolis; treasurer, Bryon J. Mosier, Stillwater; advisory committee, J. R. Bennett, Jr., St. Cloud; T. J. Meighen, Preston; T. J. Knox, Jackson; H. H. Bonniwell, Hutchinson; Otto Bremer, St. Paul; Z. H. Austin, Minneapolis; D. H. Evans, Tracy; M. L. Fay, Duluth; Harry M. Wheelock, Fergus Falls; executive committee, H. L. Buck, Winona; W. L. Comstock, Mankato; E. J. Lynch, St. Paul; Harry B. Swenson, Minneapolis; L. M. Davis, Long Prairie; T. H. Maguire, Morris; Alfred Jaques, Duluth and Martin O'Brien, Crookston.

River Man Is Missing.

Wabasha.—Bert Edwards, who has been employed on the rafting steamer Tabor, has mysteriously disappeared and the circumstances lead to the conclusion that he was accidentally drowned. He was last seen, Monday night, when the Tabor was coming up river and tied up near Crate Island on account of a fog. He went to sleep on the ropes in the bow. Later on he was missed and nothing has been found of him except his hat, which was left on the boat. A search is being made for him between here and Fountain City.

Rye Receipts Set Record.

Minneapolis.—All of the precedents for big receipts of rye on the Minneapolis markets were smashed when 90 carloads of that grain rolled into the city and were recorded at the Chamber of Commerce. John Marfield, president of the chamber, declared this figure established the high record at the chamber. One year ago only 28 cars of rye were received. Oats and barley receipts also were big. There were 70 cars of oats and 170 of barley. The big receipts on other grains cut down the wheat receipts.

Wheat Shipping Rates Soar.

Duluth.—Charters for over one million bushels of wheat to be shipped down the lakes have been closed in the last 24 hours at a rate of two cents a bushel, the highest this year. Indications are that the rate will go higher before the October contracts. Options on some vessels to carry flax have been closed at from 3½ to 4 cents.

MISSING MAN LOCATED

Tangle of Affairs Will Be Straightened Out.

Fairmont.—George Wohlhuter, the business man who disappeared two months ago, has been located by A. L. Ward, at Kansas City, where he is working for a commission firm on the board of trade, under an assumed name.

Mr. Ward has just returned from there, and has brought back a trust deed of all Mr. Wohlhuter's property and hopes to untangle his affairs in such a way as to leave a substantial balance for Wohlhuter and his family. Mr. Ward remained with his former business associate two days, and went over every detail of Mr. Wohlhuter's business affairs, and as a result comes back empowered to settle with all creditors and take entire charge of Wohlhuter's affairs. There will be property enough to pay every dollar of indebtedness, besides leaving a neat sum.

Wohlhuter went away believing that bankruptcy and the loss of all of his property stared him in the face. When his affairs looked better, he would not consent to return, in view of his having left so abruptly. His elevator line was recently sold at sheriff's sale. He says his trouble is due to too expensive a house and speculation.

JAMES N. HILL MARRIES

Eldest Son of Railroad Magnate Weds in London.

London, Eng.—James Hill, said to be a son of James J. Hill, the railroad magnate, was married here very unostentatiously to Mrs. Margaret Fahnestock. The ceremony was performed at the Savoy chapel royal.

Minneapolis.—Miss Clara Hill, sister of James N. Hill, confirmed the report of her brother's marriage. James N. Hill is the eldest son of James J. Hill.

Car Crashes Into Buggy.

Minneapolis.—More than two hundred persons leaving the Calhoun bath saw an inbound St. Louis Park car, coming down an incline, strike a buggy occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Louis P. Larson, St. Louis Park, and dragged Mrs. Larson nearly 60 feet. While the crowd stood by and the victim's cries were heard, the motorman brought the car to a standstill, and it is alleged, reversed the power, backed, and then started the car again. The woman's collar bone and three ribs on the left side were broken. Mr. Larson escaped with slight injuries.

In Full Progress.

Faribault.—Threshing is in full progress in this section of the state. The grain is good, although wheat is not yielding what was first thought, but in many places it is going twenty bushels to the acre. Oats is the banner crop. In one instance [illegible]

Important Happenings of the Week Briefly Told.

Duluth.—John J. Jenswold, of Duluth, a prominent attorney, has decided to run for congress in this district.

Minneapolis.—The Hennepin county grand jury has refused to indict Mrs. Clara Rood Royce Akeley of Long Branch, Cal., widow of H. C. Akeley, the Minneapolis lumberman.

Dresbach.—Playing bear in their grandmother's yard, Donald Moore, aged 6 years, was shot by Rupert Baker, aged 12, a cousin, and died two hours later. The boys had been playing with a shotgun without realizing it was loaded.

Fergus Falls.—It was announced here that State Senator O. O. Sageng has decided to serve out his term as senator before seeking other honors. He has been mentioned as a probable candidate for congressman-at-large, and also for congress in this district.

Wabasha.—The tobacco crop on the west side is so far advanced that harvest will be begun this week. There are fifteen acres of as fine a stand of Minnesota Hybrid and Spanish as can be grown on any soil. It stands five feet and over and is very stout.

Hibbing.—George Hecinobich has started suit against the White Star line for $10,000 damages for the death of his brother Joseph, who was a third class passenger on the Titanic and lost his life. The deceased was the support of his parents in Austria and was coming here to work in the mines.

Hibbing, Minn., Aug. 26.—George Hecinobich has started suit against the White Star Line for $10,000 damages for the death of his brother Joseph, who was a third-class passenger on the Titanic. The deceased was the supporter of his parents in Austria and was coming here to work in the mines.

Little Fall.—Seven young men in two canoes coming down the Mississippi passed through this city Monday on their way to Minneapolis. They are on a vacation trip and started from a head waters of the river on Aug. 5. They expected to reach their destination on Aug. 29. The distance is about 800 miles.

St. Paul.—Wednesday evening, September 18, Governor Eberhart and Dr. C. O. Merica of the Red Wing Training school will give addresses before the State Federation of Women's clubs and on Thursday evening there will be a musical under the direction of Mrs. Wilma Anderson Gilman of Minneapolis as chairman.

Red Wing.—The controlling interest in the Red Wing Printing company, publishers of the morning, evening and weekly Republican, has been purchased by Jens K. Grondahl, who has been general manager and editor for many years, from Tams Bixby, who is now residing in Oklahoma. There will be no material change in the policy of the paper.

St. Paul.—The Associated Fraternities of America in session for the last three days at the St. Paul hotel, adjourned after having elected officers. W. A. Fraser, of Dallas, Texas, was chosen president; J. J. Taake, Des Moines, vice president, and R. W. Donovan, Detroit, secretary and treasurer. The executive committee is composed of these offices and A. H. is composed of these officers: A. H. place for 1913 was not selected.

New Ulm, Minn., Aug. ;—German day, celebrated in this city Sunday, proved a fitting climax to a week's celebration commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Indian massacre. This date was set apart many months ago and the affair was given under the auspices of the German-American Central society of Minnesota and the Junior Pioneers of New Ulm. Early in the morning thousands of people began pouring into the city from neighboring towns with teams and autos, there being over 1,000 of the latter.

Hibbing.—Minnie Jackikuva's thrift led to her wedding to Joseph Sczenich, Thursday night, being broken up by a fight which the police had to stop. At Austrian weddings here it is customary for the bride to put a plate on the floor. The guests toss a coin at the plate until it is broken and the bride gets the money. Minnie put down a plate and the coins rained on it, but it did not break. When $150 had been thrown, somebody examined the plate and found it was made of iron and painted to resemble china. Then the trouble began. There were no arrests.

Cass Lake.—That northern Minnesota is gradually working to the point where it will be a mecca for landseekers seems assured. Several sales a week is the order in Cass Lake. Iowa and Montana men were representented among the purchasers among the purchasers here last week James H. Meyers, a Montana man, looked over Cass Lake and vicinity the early part of the week, and then went to various other points, but returned and purchased a tract one and one-half miles west of town which he expects to develop into a truck farm.

Faribault.—Mr. and Mrs. Rodney A. Mott, both early pioneer settlers of Faribault, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary here. They were married in Joliet, Ill., in 1852. They came to Minnesota in 1855 and settled in this city, which has since been their home. Mr. Mott made the trip to California [illegible]

Senator Penrose tries to make the public believe that Archbold, of Standard Oil, sent him that $25,000 in 1904 to aid him in carrying Pennsylvania for Roosevelt. Penrose should know the public better than to try to gull it with as cheap a play as that, and if he does not he is not competent to hold the job of ward boss. Why, bless you, Teddy's majority in Pennsylvania that year was only something like half a million!—Warren Register.

Knute Nelson has held office almost continually since 1868. He was a member of the legislature and county attorney in Wisconsin before coming to Minnesota; and since he has been a resident of Minnesota, which began in 1871, he has been in office almost without intermission, first as county attorney of Douglas county, state senator for several years, congressman for four terms, governor and United States senator for eighteen years. He should have a rest.—Litchfield Independent.

If the attorney general or any of his assistants has ruled that petitions nominating Roosevelt electors cannot be signed by persons who voted at the primaries, he should read the law again. It certainly says nothing to warrant such a construction. What it does say is that "No person who has voted at a primary shall be eligible as a petitioner for any nomination to an office for which nominees were voted upon at such primary." That cannot apply to electors, as electors are not voted for at the primary election.

The Smith-Eberhart machine in this state is trying its best to persuade the republicans not to exercise the second choice when they vote at the primaries. The failure of the people to record their second choice is the only thing that can give Eberhart a renomination. Had the progressive field been left entirely to Gordon and Lee the chances are that, through the second choice, one or the other would have been nominated. But with still other candidates in the race we fear the vote may be so divided as to possibly result in Eberhart's nomination. The thing for all progressives to do is to keep harping at the people to vote both their first and second choices. If anything like all of the republicans do this "the man of destiny is doomed." In the meantime it behooves the democrats to nominate the best man they have.—Luverne Journal.

Red Lake County Fair

Excellent progress is being made with the work of improving the new Red Lake county fair grounds. The new race track was completed some time ago and it is a fine speedway. With a little more work so that the surface may become a little harder the track will be in excellent condition for the fast race events of the county fair.

The new exhibit hall is nearly completed and the fences, grand stand and barns have been moved from the old location to the new grounds and have been erected. The work of fencing the track has been completed and men are now at work enlarging the grand stand and putting up new fencing.

The work will be completed so that the grounds will be ready for the opening day of the fair, Thursday, Sept. 14. The new grounds are most advantageously situated and the substantial manner in which they are being improved is gratifying to the supporters of the fair.

Names of Socialist Candidates to go on Ballot

Messrs. Naplin, Jacobson, Salachek, and Quist were down from the county seat last Saturday soliciting signers to a petition requesting that the names of the candidates of the socialist or public ownership party be placed on the primary ballot. The filing of the petition was no doubt caused by the ambiguity of the law, which seems to provide that a county orginization must have been maintained for a period of years. County Attorney Stanton has, however, received an opinion from the attorney general to the effect that [illegible]

Life and Accident Insurance

Henry Olson spent his vacation in selling life and accident insurance. He has a plan of insurance which he finds to appeal to the young farmers, and he has done a good stroke of business in the past two weeks.

He has held the agency for the Merchants Life and Casualty Company of Minneapolis, and has successfully worked it in northern Minnesota for the past three years. This company insures against death in case of accident only, but pays monthly benefits for any sickness as well as accident, including surgical operations and quarantine against contagious diseases.

The cost of this insurance is $300 for is $5.00 for the policy and $1.00 per month thereafter. The fifth year of insurance is free—that is, the monthly payments are remitted that year, as also the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth years. Taken altogether, this may be said to be the best and cheapest insurance on the market.

Part Played by Heredity

Heredity plays an important part not only in tuberculosis and cancerous affections but likewise in diabetes, rheumatism, gout and many other diseases. We do not inherit tuberculosis, but we do inherit a lessened vitality, or a tendency to contract tuberculosis infection. Underweights are usually people who have inherited such a lessened vitality, and they run the further risk of infection from their underweight brothers or sisters who are apt to be infected. To guard against weakened vitality, provide the system regularly with the food, with the proper supply of phosphates, albumen, malts and hops found in perfection in golden grain belt beers. Alex Thompson, Crookston agent.

Velvet Chaff Wheat Recognised

Velvet Chaff wheat, that prolific producer, after being tossed about by the grain exchanges, has this year been raised as No. 1 Northern. At the time it was first developed it was not thought to have sufficiently good milling qualities to entitle it to high rank. The Minnesota board of grain appeals has been making steady tests of its qualities and found constant improvement. Last year it was raised to No. 2 Northern. The new ruling went into effect August 7.

Steenerson's Announcement

In announcing my candidacy for reelection as representative in congress, I desire first of all to thank the people of the district for the honor bestowed upon me in the past and to assure them that, if it shall please them to continue me in their service, I shall in the future, as I have in the past, put forth every effort to serve them faithfully to the best of my ability.

I am a republican—a progressive republican—and have supported all progressive legislation for the more complete government regulation and control of railroads and interstate commerce, the policy of conservation of water powers and other natural resources in the interest of the people, and the development of unsettled lands on liberal terms to actual settlers.

While I voted against the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and Canadian reciprocity because, in my judgement, they were against the best interests of my constituents, I am a protectionist and favor a tariff high enough to preserve the home market to American industries, but not so high as to make it a shield for exorbitant prices.

I voted for the amendments to the constitution recently passed by congress providing for election of senators by the people, and an income tax, which now await ratification by the states.

I aided in the elimination of railroad and ship subsides from postal expenditures, and the improvement and extension of postal service, including parcel post and rural free delivery, and am trying to get improved laws to prevent using the mails to promote fraudulent schemes.

I favor strict government regulation of interstate comerce, as well as transportation; supervision of corporations on capitalization, and, if necessary, even limitation of prices; and workmens' compensation for the benefit of victims of industrial accidents, and all legislation in favor of temperance and morality.

Liberal pensions in their declining years is due from a grateful nation to its gallant defenders, the veterans of the civil war, as a matter of right and justice. While I believe in due military preparation on the part of the leading civilized powers of the world, I believe the time has come when there should be renewed efforts to substitute international arbitration for war in the settlement of disputes among nations, and to limit armaments, thus saving immense sums for more useful purposes in the service of humanity.

TO SEND COIN BY U. S. MAIL.

Express Companies Rudely Jarred by Discovery of New Clause.

Washington.—The treasury officials have recently discovered a highly interesting fact in regard to the appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the government, which escaped general attention at the time it was enacted.

It pertains to the shipment of fractional silver coin from the several subtreasuries of the United States to banks in various parts of the country.

It now appears that in the rush attending the passage of the sundry civil bill, James Wesley Gaines of Tennessee caused to be inserted in the measure a provision that one-half of the $60,000 appropriation for the transportation of coin shall be expended for registered mail. Heretofore shipments of currency have uniformly been made by express, and the express companies have been obliged to make good any loss by theft or other accident in transportation.

The express companies are greatly concerned over the new order of things, especially as Mr. Daskam, chief of the bureau of public moneys in the treasury department, has ruled that the law means that $30,000 should be expended by registered mail before any part of the appropriation is expended for express charges. It is believed at the treasury department that, as the charges for registering a package is only eight cents, $30,000 will be sufficient to pay the entire apparent cost of transporting coins under this system for a year, and the express companies will therefore get none of the business.

The Malacca Wildcats.

In the forests of Malacca and other islands in the Indian ocean may still be found the animal known as a wildcat. The upper parts of it are generally of a clear yellow color, with black spots; the lower parts are white with black spots also. On the back the spots lengthen almost into lines or rings, black on yellow.

The average length of the animal, excluding the tail, is almost two feet; the tail averages nine inches. Its height when standing erect is about 12 inches at the shoulder and 15 inches at the hindquarters. Its temper is mild and gentle; it plays almost like a domestic cat, or rather kitten, chasing its tail and amusing itself with anything that it can roll with its paws.

Carlyle's Curious Study.

Thomas Carlyle, the noted English philosopher and historian, had a curious study. It comprised the entire third floor of his narrow brick house at Chelsea, a London suburb. The walls of the study were of double thickness, to prevent street noises from annoying the master while at his work, and a skylight afforded the light. Just how fresh air was furnished the room was not apparent to the visitor. There is nothing about the room to suggest comfort, only a close, thick-walled, skylighted, long apartment where the great dyspeptic worked and worked ceaselessly and from where he hurried to the kitchen in the basement of the house as soon as his day's labor was done [illegible]

Clerk of Court

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I will be a candidate for the republican nomination for clerk of the district court for Pennington county, subject to the decision of the voters at the republican primary, September 17, 1912.

I have occupied the position since the organization of Pennington county and have tried to the best of my ability to be strictly impartial and as efficient as my ability would allow. I will be pleased to have the votes and support of all citizens who believe that I have filled the position in an honest and efficient manner.

If nominated and elected I hereby promise to give the office my personal attention and my best efforts to honestly administer the affairs of the office in a strictly impartial and efficient manner.

HARRY E. IVES.
Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Andrew Trovaten.)

For County Treasurer

I wish to announce that I am a candidate for county treasurer, subject to the ratification of the republican voters at the primaries, September 17, 1912. Being that political parties have always regarded it as important to have their members elected to all offices, it must be for aid in promoting party politics, for so far as the work in the county offices is concerned, it can make no difference whatever, what the officer's political affiliations are, so the idea must be that he is expected to talk and work, and use the advantage of his public position, in aiding the party to which he belongs. I believe that it is of the utmost importance to have the republican party control at least one branch of congress in order to maintain the average of prices. While the price-level does not prove that times are good, theoretically, yet we know that with the enormous debt of the country, it will be harder to pay it with low prices than with high, steady prices. I believe that because one cannot support the whole republican ticket it is no reason at all to quit supporting candidates for congress and the legislature which is by far more important than the office of president, so far as party politics is concerned. These are [illegible]

County Surveyor

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I am a candidate for the republican nomination for the office of county surveyor at the primaries September 17, 1912.

Your support will be appreciated.

C. H. MARTZ.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Wilhelm Michelet.)

Judge of Probate

I hereby announce that I am a non-partisan candidate for re-election to the office of judge of probate in and for Pennington county, Minnesota. I respectfully solicit your vote and support at the primary election to be held on Tuesday Sept. 17, 1912.

WILHELM MICHELET,
Judge of Probate,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by E. Mostue.)

County Superintendent

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election for the office of superintendent of schools for Pennington county subject to the ratification of the voters at the primary to be held Tuesday, Sept, 17, 1912.

Your vote and support are respectfully solicited.

E. A. MOSTUE.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by George L. Netteland.)

County Superintendent

St. Hilaire, Minn., August 5, 1912.

I wish hereby to announce to readers of the Spectator that I am a candidate for superintendent of schools of Pennington county, and hope you will give me your votes and support next fall.

I am not running on any particular party ticket as the new primary law requires that all candidates for superintendent of schools run on a non-partisan ballot, on their merits.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE L. NETTELAND.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by O. F. Post.)

Clerk of Court

According to the present laws, that we as a citizen are sworn to abide by, it is necessary that we file application for candidacy for the office of clerk of court, and publish notice of our desire.

I am perfectly willing to abide by the decision of my friends and aquaintances as to my qualifications to clerically and economically fulfill the duties of this office.

I have been a citizen of this county for twenty-nine years. I will most surely appreciate any favors that the voters of Pennington county feel disposed to confer upon myself at the primary election to be held September 17, 1912.

Yours truly,
O. F. POST.

Bonds Carried

There was very little interest manifested in the bond election yesterday, there being but 33 votes cast, but both propositions carried. On the $4,000.00 issue the vote was 30 in favor to 3 against; and on the $1,000.00 issue the vote was 29 to 2.

Recorder Swanson has received inquiries from two parties asking for information as to these proposed bonds, and no difficulty is expected in disposing of them.

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm.. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

BLUEJAY LIVES IN WOODS

Hawks, Owls and Other Birds Are Teased and Tormented by These Noisy Birds.

The bluejay likes best to live in thick woods, but it often comes into open fields, orchards and near dwellings in search of food. When it discovers you it assumes a proud and angry air of conceit and defiance.

The bluejay's upper parts are purplish blue. The lower parts are purplish-gray. The wings and tail are bright blue with black bars. The tail feathers are tipped with white. It has a crested head.

The bluejay builds its nest about twenty feet above ground. It is made of twigs and fine roots. From four to six eggs are laid. They are of a greenish drab color flecked with brown.

Doubtless the bluejay helped to name itself, as its common utterance is a long-drawn "jay, jay, jay." This cry, with a bright blue color, has given it its name.

While the jay sings no song it is able to imitate the calls of other birds, by which means it often attracts them. It likes to tease and torment the owl and especially the little sparrow hawk. This is done by imitating the cry of a wounded bird, which draws the hawk near. Then several jays will dart at the hawk squealing and frolicking about in great glee. Sometimes the play ends in a tragedy, for the hawk pounces upon one of them to the dismay of the others. Jays may be caged and tamed like crows and some writers say they can be taught to utter words.—"Bird Studies," by Herman C. De Groat.

HANDS CRACKED AND BLED

St. Clair, Mo.—"My trouble began about fifteen years ago. It was what some claimed eczema. The form the disease worked under was a breaking out with watery blisters on my hands which would then dry and scale, and then would follow the trouble of cracking and bleeding, also itching and hurting. My hands were disfigured at the time, and sore. The trouble was very annoying, and disturbed my sleep. This last February it was ever so much worse than before. I did not do all my work on account of the condition of my hands. I could not put them in water without making them worse. I tried a lot of home remedies, also salves and liniments that claimed to be a cure for the trouble, but I did not obtain a cure.

"At last I saw the advertisement for Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I sent for a sample. I thought they would cure, so I sent for a fifty-cent box of Cuticura Ointment and some Cuticura Soap. A doctor advised me to keep ahead with the Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they cured me completely. No trace of the trouble remains." (Signed) Mrs. Mary Taylor, Mar. 29, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."

Sparrow Sets House Ablaze.

An English sparrow was the cause of three houses catching fire at Lawrenceburg, Ind., recently, and had it not been for the prompt work of the neighbors and friends all would have been destroyed. The sparrow was building a nest under the eaves of the home of Mrs. Mary Webber, and it picked up a long cotton string from a pile of rubbish that had just been burned. With the burning string in its beak, the sparrow flew to the roof of Mrs. Sophia Shafer's house, then to Otto McCright's house and then to the roof of Emanuel Wuest's home, where it dropped the burning string. A fire started in the shingles of each building. Each was extinguished by neighbors before much damage was done.

Barber Shops in China.

Since the Chinese revolution a great many Chinese have had their cues cut off, and this has led to the opening of a large number of barber shops throughout the far east wherever Chinese are located, says an exchange. Several progressive business men of Singapore, anticipating this, imported a large number of American barber chairs, and they are now unable to get supplies quickly enough. It has also been learned that the Chinese insist on having American hair clippers, and refuse all other makes offered them.

It would seem that American manufacturers of barbers' supplies should experience a large increase in their Oriental trade.

Caligula, the "Crazy" Emperor

CALIGULA

"I WISH!" shouted Caligula, in one of his maniac rages, "that the Roman people had but one neck, so that I might sever it at a single blow!"

The man who voiced this gentle wish was the third emperor of Rome, a probable lunatic who filled his short reign with comic opera absurdities and with unspeakable horrors. His real name was Caius Caesar Augustus eGrmanicus. His habit of wearing "caligae," or military boots, led the soldiers among whom he spent his boyhood to nick name him "Caligula."

Julius Caesar had made Rome ruler of the world. His nephew, Augustus, had been its first emperor. Augustus was succeeded by Tiberius, a miser and tyrant. After the murder of Tiberius in 37 A. D. young Caligula (great grandson of Augustus) became emperor. He is generally believed to have caused Tiberius' death in order to clear his own way to the throne.

The beginning of Coliqula's reign was all that could be desired. He gave promise of being an ideal emperor. He lightened the people's burdens, forgave political enemies, set prisoners free and governed the country so wisely and mercifully that, when at last he fell dangerously ill, all Rome went into mourning.

Unluckily he recovered from the illness. But he came back to health a wholly different man. The sickness is supposed to have crazed him.

That is the kindest judgment possible. The gentle, liberal emperor had changed into a demon. His first step was to begin a wholesale slaughter of his former friends. When there were no criminals to throw to the wild beasts in the arena he ordered dozens of innocent spectators hurled to the lions. He had a set of torture implements placed in his dining hall so that he might enjoy watching prisoners tortured to death while he ate.

During a single year he wasted all of Tiberius' carefully hoarded fortune—more than $25,000,000—and then overtaxed the people to gain new money for extravagances. One of his favorite methods of getting wealth was to force his rich courtiers to gamble with him for enormous sums. They dared not win, for fear of death.

He professed to be a direct descendant of the gods, and he once attempted to fight a duel with the mythical deity, Jupiter, by throwing stones at the sky during a thunderstorm. One nobleman was executed for being better dressed than the emperor; another for being better looking.

Caligula had a horse he loved. He kept it in an ivory stall and fed it on gilded oats from a manger of marble and gold. In an outburst of insanity he even bestowed on this horse the ran kof "high priest" and "concul."

Seeking military glory, Caligula once hurried an army into Germany. Tiring of this campaign before a battle had been fought, he decided to invade Britain. So he embarked his troops for that island. But scarcely were they aboard the ships when he ordered them all on land again. Then, drawing up his army in line of battle on the beach, he commanded his soldiers to fill their helmets with shells and pebbles. They did so, and he returned to Rome, announcing that he had conquered the ocean. He also dressed a number of his Gaelic subjects in German costumes, then had them publicly executed as "prisoners of war captured in Germany."

The imperial madman ruled the world as might a violent maniac taken from an asylum and given life-and-death control of everything. But his crimes and follies were too great for even the callous Romans. An officer whom Caligula had grossly insulted formed a conspiracy against him.

On January 24, 41 A. D.—in the twenty-ninth year of his age and the fourth year of his vile reign—the conspirators forced an entrance into his palace and slew him.

John Zubly, the American Patriot Who Turned Traitor

JOHN ZUBLY

"A REPUBLIC is little better than a government of devils!" So declared John Joachim Zubly, a man on whom our country had relied, and whom the Revolutionists had trusted. He was a patriot who suddenly turned traitor at a time when America and liberty needed every true man's aid.

The colonies had long groaned under British oppression. When they rose against England, in 1775, it was less with an idea of breaking loose from the mother country than of showing resentment by force of arms where argument and appeal had failed. They simply wished to bring England to her senses and to obtain relief from injustice. Even George Washington in later years confessed: "The idea of independence was at first abhorrent to me."

But soon he and all the rest of the patriots realized that the time for half-way measures had passed. There must be either dumb submission or open defiance. And, should they choose defiance, they must free the colonies wholly from the British yoke and declare our country free and independent.

It was to discuss this that the continental congress met at Philadelphia in 1776.

We are apt to think that congress was a collection of ardent patriots, panting for liberty at any price. This was not wholly true. While the majority of the delegates were firm in their resolve to declare for independence, several of them threatened to balk at so rash a step.

Nor can they be severely blamed for hesitating. They were men of property and importance. They had more to lose than had most Americans. Should the Revolution fail their goods would doubtless be seized by the British government and they themselves would be hanged. As Benjamin Franklin said, in grim jest:

"We must hang together or we'll hang separately!"

But, to their eternal credit, these wary delegates at last yielded to the popular voice. The Declaration of Independence was drawn up, and on July 4, 1776, was adopted (although it was not signed until the next month). The grave step was taken. The congressmen stood committed. The had "crossed the Rubicon" and were ready to take the consequences.

There was one exception to this band of patriots. He was John Joachim Zubxy, a Swiss, who had emigrated to America in early life and had settled in Georgia. Zubly was not only prominent as a scholar and a statesman, but was a preacher as well. He had shown great indignation at the colonists' wrongs and had both written and spoken in protest against tyranny.

So patriotic was he that Georgia chose him as one of its five delegates to congress in 1775. There he worked hard for the people's cause and even drew up a petition to King George III. "upon the present unhappy situation of affairs." Altogether, he was looked upon as an ardent patriot. Indeed, it is hard to understand the sudden and terrible change in the man.

As soon as Zubly found congress was determined to adopt the Declaration, he fought the proposition most bitterly and utterly refused any part in it. He denounced the idea of a republic and did everything in his power to stem the tide of opinion. Had this been all he did no great shame need to have been attached to him. But he was not content with refusing to vote for the Declaration. He actually entered into secret correspondence with the enemy, betraying to the British the patriots' private plans and giving warning that the Declaration was about to be adopted. What further harm he might have done the cause of liberty cannot be guessed, for a fellow congressman (Samuel Chase of Maryland) found reason to suspect him. A treasonable letter from Zubly was intercepted. Chase exposed the man's whole black treachery to congress.

Zubly fled in hot haste from Philaphia to escape punishment. He went at once to Georgia. There, utterly casting away his cloak of patriotism, he sided openly with America's foes. For this he was banished from Georgia and half of his property was declared forfeit. He rushed to the British for protection. After a few years of misery and disgrace he died, in 1781, with the Revolutionary war was still at its height.

The Use of Slang Is Being Overdone

Good to Pin a Thought Fast to Memory, but There Is Often Too Much of It.

Slang has its uses, notwithstanding the adverse denunciation of it by the professor of English in a college in a neighboring state. It has also its abuse, which consists entirely in its being overdone. All slang is used too much. As a condiment to more stable and established forms, it seasons them when aptly applied. Slang pins a thought fast to memory which might otherwise quickly fade. It makes it vivid, but it ought to be new. Old slang hath lost its savor. It is as painful to hear as a hat five years behind the times is to look at.

The weakness of slang in the mouths of youth lies in their too often using nothing else in connection with it. The impression is that they know nothing else [illegible] cream parlor a 'joint' and your girl a 'queen,' but George Ade did a great harm to the English language by writing 'take your queen to an ice-cream joint.'"

Perhaps the professor regards this particular instance too seriously. No objection ought to arise to any young man calling his beloved, his "queen." The use of "joint" in this connection is not so defensible. Taking it by and large, we should say the most important thing is to see that the young woman gets the ice-cream, regardless of the manner in which it is expressed.

"Really?" said his friend. "How did that happen?"

"It was due to my accursed absentmindedness. When, a few days later, I called at her home, I again asked her to marry me."

The gentleman quetioned gazed a moment at the note, assumed an anxious look, made a hasty search of his pockets, and said: "Why, so I did, and I hadn't missed it," holding out an eager hand.

The elderly hunter took the name and address of the loser and, putting the note in his pocket, turned away.

"Well," said the other, "do you want it all as a reward?"

THE WAY OUT

Change of Food Brought Success and Happiness.

An ambitious but delicate girl, after failing to go through school on account of nervousness and hysteria, found in Grape-Nuts the only thing that seemed to build her up and furnish her the peace of health.

"From infancy," she says, "I have not been strong. Being ambitious to learn at any cost I finally got to the High School, but soon had to abandon my studies on account of nervous prostration and hysteria.

"My food did not agree with me, I grew thin and despondent. I could not enjoy the simplest social affair for I suffered constantly from nervousness in spite of all sorts of medicines.

"This wretched condition continued until I was twenty-five, when I became interested in the letters of those who had cases like mine and who were getting well by eating Grape-Nuts.

"I had little faith but procured a box and after the first dish I experienced a peculiar satisfied feeling that I had never gained from any ordinary food. I slept and rested better that night and in a few days began to grow stronger.

"I had a new feeling and peace and restfulness. In a few weeks, to my great joy, the headaches and nervousness left me and life became bright and hopeful. I resumed my studies and later taught ten months with ease —of course using Grape-Nuts every day. It is now four years since I began to use Grape-Nuts, I am the mistress of a happy home, and the old weakness has never returned." Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

FADS AND FANCIES OF FASHION

RETURN TO OLD STYLE

SUN-RAY AND ACCORDION PLAITS BACK IN FASHION.

Whole Skitrs, Panniers, Fichus and Flounces Are Showing This Effect, Which of Late Years Has Been Discarded.

Behold the sun-ray plaiting again in the front place of fashion and convincing in its softness and graceful lines, and the countless opportunities for draping one filmy color over another and obtaining the rainbow effects that are always becoming.

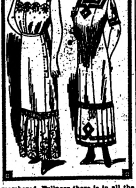
Accordion plaiting is coming with a rush. It is here in a few advanced models of clever makers; but the fashion is too beautiful to be ignored and prediction is here made that the plaited frock is to be a feature of late summer and fall styles.

Can you imagine the grace of a chiffon pannier plaited and held in at the lower edge by a deep band of embroidery? The fichu on this same delectable gown is accordion plaited and the waist defined by a wide girdle of panne velvet. Plaited ruffles edge the sleeves and the bottom of the underskirt.

Silk in plain or changeable colors is plaited for entire costumes that are adaptable for little roundabout frocks or for elaborate afternoon gowns. Here is the fullness in decided form in skirt, sleeve and bodice.

Littel accordion plaited jackets of soft chiffon and mousseline de soie are now threatening to replace the coatees of taffeta that have been such strong features. Evening wraps and lovely negligees are showing plaiting in either entire lengths or as ruffles on the berthas and sleeves.

As a swing of the pendulum of fashion in the opposite direction, no feature of the modes can more clearly exemplify the vagaries than the plaited dresses that are invading the realm of dress. But one thing must be remembered. Fullness there is in all the new frocks, but balloon skirts are not the type to which we have resorted. There is still the straight line of the figure to be adhered to, and it must be admitted that the designers have given fullness in the plaiting without bulkiness, flowing lines without ugliness and a change without the usual shock.



Cashmere in Favor.

Cashmere is well to the fore for inexpensive gowns, and in its silk variety for elaborate dresses.

It may be trimmed with braid, black or colored, or with galloon or passementerie, and sometimes the trimming forms the outline of a coat upon the skirt portion of an all-in-one gown.

One of these is ornamented with pearl buttons and imitation buttonholes, a mode of trimming that looks very smart and is yet quite inexpensive.

To Mend Gloves.

White gloves especially have an annoying habit of tearing "at the lst moment," when you haven't time to darn them.

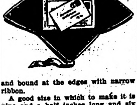
To temporarily mend the rip, place a piece of court plaster upon the under side.

This will neatly close the ripped seam and will wear for a long time.

HOLD MEMENTOES OF TRIP

Case That Will Provide for Inconceivable Accumulation of Picture Post Cards.

Everyone knows how quickly picture postcards accumulate, especially during the holiday season; and this handy little case, in which a good number may be kept, will prove very useful. This is a very quaint and novel case, made somewhat in the shape of a large envelope. It can be carried out equally well in art linen, satin or silk, and lined with soft silk and bound at the edges with narrow ribbon.



A good size in which to make it is nine and a half inches long and six inches in width, and the center portion in which the cards rest should be stiffened with a piece of cardboard of the dimensions shown in between the material and the lining. The four flaps fold over on the cards, the two sides first, and then the upper and lower flaps, the latter being secured together with the ribbon strings, and so securely closing the case.

Initials of the owner can be worked upon the upper flap in the position where a monogram is usually found upon an envelope, and it is important that the flaps should be made sufficiently large to entirely close the case when well filled with cards, so that in cutting allowance must be made for this contingency.

The sketch illustrates the case open, and clearly shows the shape in which the material should be cut out.

MOUSSELINE DE SOIE AGAIN

Quaint Effects That May Be Noticed in Some of the Latest of the French Arrivals.

With the fine weather, warm and sunny, there is a strong movement in favor of printed mousseline de soie, either in the same shade or in white upon dark blue or black.

One dress is in black charmeuse draped ever so lightly with one of these printed muslins in black with large white flowers. The black charmeuse crosses on one side over a chemisette of fine white lace that is seen in the emplecement and the sleeves, the latter finished with a cuff of plain white mousseline de soie.

Mousseline de soie in pure white is very popular in the Robespierre and sailor collars, both very fashionable at present, finished with a wide openwork hem.

Black dresses with black mousseline de soie draperies are being worn over transparent net emplecement and high collar-bands with the Robespierre or the sailor collar in plain white mousseline de soie, as described. But to some of the plain black charmeuse dresses the collar in finely embroidered lawn is more of a relief than the mousseline de soie.

Washing Wool Scarfs.

It is an easy matter to cleanse at home white woollen scarfs and shawls.

Prepare soapsuds by boiling pure white soap in rainwater. Soak the article first in warm, clear water. Dip it in the soapsuds and gently knead with the hands until it appears clean.

Press between the hands without wringing. Wash through fresh soapsuds and place in cold water.

Rinse through several waters and dry it between cloths.

Never hang woollen articles upon the line. To stretch the full length upon a towel and cover with another absorbs the water without stretching the article out of shape.

For the Small Porch.

A useful form of the chaise lounge or porch reclining chair of wicker is in two sections, divided almost in the middle so two chairs may be made when no one wishes to lounge, or when the porch is filled with guests.

Liquid Powder.

It is best applied with one of those pleasant woolen powder puffs, that can be firmly and evenly rubbed on the neck until the powder is smoothly laid. Some people prefer a liquid powder for the neck as being more reliable than the other and capable of resisting the putting on and taking off of scarf and cloak. This liquid powder calls for the help of a maid. It is not possible to spread it properly at the back of the neck oneself. It is applied with a small wad of cotton wool, and dries quickly. Before finishing off with the powder puff, it is wise to pass the hand over the neck to make sure no moisture remains, as the powder would mix with it and form an ugly and durable crust.

A conventional figure that is easily adapted is an oval composed of four rows of dots, the largest on the outside. The size of the dots is proportioned to the size of the oval.

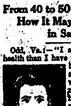
CRITICAL TIME OF WOMAN'S LIFE

From 40 to 50 Years of Age. How It May Be Passed in Safety.



Odd, Va.:—"I am enjoying better health than I have for 20 years, and I believe I can safely say now that I am a well woman. I was reared on a farm and had all kinds of heavy work to do which caused the troubles that came on me later. For five years during the Change of Life I was not able to lift a pail of water. I had hemorrhages which would last for weeks and I was not able to sit up in bed. I suffered a great deal with my back and was so nervous I could scarcely sleep at night, and I did not do any housework for three years.

REPUBLICAN VOTE FALLS OF IN VT.

STRENGTH OF PROGRESSIVES FORCES CHOICE OF GOVERNOR ON LEGISLATURE.

G. O. P. SURE OF VICTORY.

Joint Ballot Will Give Them Contest.—Third Party Leaders Say They Are Pleased With First Showing.

White River Junction, Vt., Sept. 4.—The strength of the new Progressive party in its first line-up against the elder parties and the disappearance of the Republican majority for the first time in 10 years and the first time in the history of the state on a presidential year, were the outstanding features of the state election.

The vote for the five candidates for governor from all of the six cities and from 196 out of 204 towns was: Allen M. Fletcher of Cavendish, Republican, 22,366; Harland B. Howe of St. Johnsbury, Democrat, 11,504; Rev. Fraser Metzger of Randolph, Progressive, 13,630; Clement F. Smith of Morrisville, Prohibition, 1,341; Fred W. Suiter of Barre, Socialist, 976.

Returns indicate that the next legislature will contain 110 Republicans, 26 Democrats and 14 Progressives, members of the lower branch, as well as 30 Republican senators.

It was apparent early in the evening that there had been no election by the people, although a sufficient number of Republican representatives were successful to seem to insure the choice of Allen M. Fletcher of Cavendish by the legislature for governor.

For many years political students have pointed out that any decrease in the Republican majority in Vermont in September below the normal of 25,000 has been followed almost invariably by the party defeat in the presidential fight in November. These majorities which have averaged close to 30,000 in all the state elections in Vermont in presidential years since 1892, were represented by a bare plurality.

G. O. P. Loss Distributed.

The Republican loss apparently went in a great degree to the Progressives and to somewhat lesser extent to the Democrats.

The falling off in the Republican vote began with the first returns, while the Progressives gained all along the line, in some cases carrying towns which had heretofore been regarded as strongly Republican. Yet the disaffection from the Republican ranks did not extend very far beyond the head of the ticket.

Many towns that showed strong Progressive tendencies sent Republican representatives to the legislature, so that the party leaders were early assured of a substantial majority on joint ballot for governor, as the failure of a candidate to get a majority at the polls throws the election into the legislature.

Progressives Pleased.

Progressives said they were greatly pleased with the result.

The Democratic managers derived satisfaction from the early returns, showing decided gains over two and four years ago.

Many Republican leaders claimed that the threatening weather contributed to the falling off in the party vote.

BRIDGE BREAKS; 2 DROWN

Eastern Men Lose Lives in Chippewa River at Cornell.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Sept. 4.—J. W. Karhoff of Philadelphia and J. F. Bransfield of Boston, were drowned in Chippewa river at Cornell when a swinging bridge out over the new dam broke. They were working on it and thrown into the deep swift current. A companion was thrown into the river but escaped by clinging to a plank. The flood on the Chippewa river is the worst this season.

Kansas Case Under Advisement.

Denver, Colo., Sept. 3.—Judge Frank Sanborn of the federal court here took under advisement the temporary restraining order case in which an attempt is being made to prevent Charles Sessions, secretary of state of Kansas, from certifying to county clerks of Kansas the names of presidential electors who have been in favor of Theodore Roosevelt for president.

Martial Law in Strike Zone.

Charleston, W. Va., Sept. 4.—During the first 12 hours of martial law in the Kanawaha strike zone the militia confiscated 200,000 pounds of ammunition, seven modern colt machine guns, 1,500 rifles of various kinds and a bushel of revolvers, it is announced.

Rioting Becoming Serious.

Jackson, Mich., Sept. 4.—Rioting among convicts confined in bullpens has broken out and the men are now in the prison yards with the officials exerting every effort to keep them from going over the walls. That the local prison officials fear the worst is yet to come was evident when, in addition to the two local militia companies, numbering about 160 men, the Lansing company had been ordered to this city. Every man who can be induced to act as special guard is being rushed to the prison.

SUFFRAGISTS LOSE IN OHIO

$50,000,000 BOND ISSUE FOR ROADS POSIBLY DEFEATED.

Heavy Majority Rolled Up Against Women—Other Propositions Carry.

Columbus, O., Sept. 4.—Ohio women lost their fight to have equal suffrage incorporated in the constitution of the state. Although not all the returns in the election on 42 proposed amendments to the constitution have been returned, the majority rolled up against suffrage is so great that it is plain the final result can not be changed.

Indications are that all of the other amendments, with the possible exception of a $50,000,000 bond issue for good roads, have been carried.

The initiative and referendum was adopted, according to the first 950 precincts out of 5,917 in the state. It received 63,097 votes to 33,093 against.

The liquor license was carried by 55,341 to 20,942. The suffrage vote from 950 precincts showed 36,063 for to 55,139 against. The good roads vote was 37,299 for to 38,210 against. The country districts were expected to change this result however. All the labor proposals received good majorities.

RESORT FIRE SWEPT.

Damage Estimated at $2,550,000 Done at Los Angeles.

Los Angeles, Cal., Sept. 4.—Fire which originated from a defective flue at the Casino cafe on the pleasure pier at Ocean park caused one death and property loss estimated at $2,250,000.

For a time it threatened to devastate the twin beach resorts of Ocean park and Venice, 18 miles from Los Angeles. High wind spread the flames so rapidly that seven men were caught at the end of the Frazier pier, on which the Casino was located and were forced to jump into the breakers. Six were rescued by life guards. E. W. Leach, chef of the Casino cafe, was drowned.

FAMILY IS DROWNED.

Iowans Lose Lives When Son Hits Rowboat.

Lansing, Ia., Sept. 4.—Mrs. Frank Lankford and her three children, John, 21 years; Mabel, 12 years, and Francis, 4 years old, were drowned three miles below here when their boat was upset in a collision with a launch driven by a younger member of the same family.

John, the eldest son, was the only member of the party able to swim. He drowned in the attempt to save the others.

Roosevelt Electors Attacked.

Philadelphia, Sept. 4.—"Within the next 48 hours court proceedings will be instituted looking to the removal of Roosevelt electors from the regular Republican ticket in Pennsylvania and the substitution of Taft men," said U. S. Senator Penrose after a day spent in conferring with political lieutenants in the city and state. The court proceedings which will be brought in the United States court at Philadelphia, it is believed, will be based on the ground that the electors in the Republican column under a state law, appear on the ballot under the names of Taft and Sherman, and are therefore "bound morally and in equity," to support those nominees in the electoral college.

One Killed; One Injured.

Minneapolis, Sept. 4.—Christian L. Ilstrup, candidate for county surveyor, had a close call to death, and an employe, James Conroy, was instantly killed when they were struck by in-bound passenger train No. 10 on the crossing of the Northern Pacific tracks at Twenty-third avenue north.

Sen. Cummins for Roosevelt.

Des Moines, Ia., Sept. 4.—Senator Albert B. Cummins of Iowa declares that he expects to vote for Colonel Roosevelt.

DEMOCRATS NOMINATE KAREL

ADOLPH J. SCHMITZ, HIS OPPONENT, ADMITS DEFEAT.

Governor Francis E. McGovern, Republican, Is Renominated Without Opposition.

Milwaukee, Sept. 4.—The nomination of Judge, John C. Karel as gubernatorial candidate on the Democratic ticket is conceded by a safe majority by his opponent, Adolph J. Schmitz.

While the returns are not quite complete, enough been received to warrant Karel's nomination by a good-sized majority. Karel's campaign manager claims his candidate will have at least double the number of votes of his opponent.

On the Republican ticket, Walter C. Owen of Maiden Rock appears to be leading Philip Lehner of Princeton for the nomination for attorney general, and Henry Krumrey, Plymouth, is ahead of Henry Johnson of Madison for state treasurer.

For the Democrats, Nicholas Schmidt of Marathon leads over George J. Leonhardt, Marshfield, for state treasurer, and Charles A. Kading, Watertown, and John F. Doherty, La Crosse, are running a close race for attorney general.

Governor F. E. McGovern, Republican, has been renominated without opposition, as has Lieut. Gov. Thomas Morris of La Crosse.

Harry W. Bolend, Fort Washington, probably is nominated lieutenant governor on the Democratic ticket over Henry A. Moehlenpah of Clinton.

ATTACKS WILSON'S VIEW

Replies to New Jerseyite in Speech Before Convention.

St. Louis, Sept. 4.—Woodrow Wilson's stand on the tariff, the trusts and the proposal for minimum wage scales was assailed by Colonel Roosevelt in a speech here.

The colonel joined the issue squarely with Governor Wilson, taking as his text the Democratic candidate's speech Monday at Buffalo. He delivered his address before the Missouri Progressive state convention.

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Sept. 4.—Big receipts and heavy world's shipments had a depressing effect today on wheat. Commission houses were generally sellers. Aside from moderate short covering, there was no important demand. The opening was ½@1c lower. December started at 92@92½c, a drop of ½@1c and steadied at 92¼c.

Reports of big yields in the Dakotas and Minnesota led to a further decline. The close was steady, with September 1c net lower at 92c.

Favorable weather for the growing crop made the corn market easy. December opened ⅛@⅜c to ⅜@⅝c off at 54⅜ to 54⅝c and later held around 54⅝c.

Later the market fluctuated within narrow confines, closing steady at 54⅝c for September, a net loss of ⅛@⅜c.

Oats showed steadiness owing to a well distributed trade. December started unchanged to ⅛c down at 32⅛ to 32¼c and seemed inclined to remain within those limits.

Chicago Livestock.

Chicago, Sept. 4 — Cattle—Receipts, 7,000; market weak to 10c lower; beeves, $5.75@10.50; Texas steers, $4.75@6.50; western steers, $5.85@9.15; stockers and feeders, $4.25@7.15; cows and heifers, $3@8; calves, $8@11. WANTS HENS TO SLEEP.

Oklahoma City, Okla., Sept. 4.—John Sherwin has asked the city commissioners to have the street lights turned off at midnight. Sherwin declares that every night his chickens go out under the big electric light at the corner and feast on the grasshoppers that are attracted by the big lamp. "Sometimes the chickens remain up all night," said Sherwin, "and go back to roost about daylight. They are drowsy all day and the hens do not lay."

In Minnesota.

Important Happenings of the Week Briefly Told.

Albert Lea.—H. Pratt, a switchman, had his foot cut off when he slipped from the side of a boxcar and fell under the wheels.

Swanville.—Fire destroyed the Central House livery barn, conducted by Max Greene. The loss of $1,000 include a cow and hay. The horses and part of the harness was saved.

Winona.—The Electro Process company of this city has increased its capital stock from $50,000 to $150,000 and has absorbed the Dubuque Art Manufacturing company. The business will be moved from Winona to Dubuque.

Duluth. — Leon Forte of Eveleth, age eleven years, was shot and killed by a companion, Willard Millette aged 14, Tuesday, in the woods near the city. The boys were approaching a squirrel from opposite directions at the time of the accident.

Pipestone.—George Scheurman has been making some experiments in the raising of alfalfa, and three acres devoted to that forage promise an excellent yield. The seed was planted in June. Next year Mr. Scheurman intends to increase his field to ten acres.

Red Wing.—Chimneys were blown down, trees torn up by the roots, windows broken in all parts of the city, buildings were unroofed and cellars flooded and telephone and telegraph service badly crippled as the result of a terrific rain, wind and hail storm which struck Red Wing and vicinity.

Fergus Falls.—Colonel Soren Listoe, American consul at Rotterdam, Holland, arrived here Thursday night with the remains of his wife, whose death occurred in January, 1911, and of his son, William Listoe, who died five years ago. The bodies were brought here, as Colonel Listoe resided in this city before going to Holland, and other members of the family are buried here.

Bemidji. — Through streets that were running rivers and a sky streaked with lightning and which poured torrents of rain, twenty-five automobiles splashed into Bemidji late Tuesday evening.

The Crookston cars had planned to return Wednesday noon, but owing to the heavy rains many feared to attempt the trip and [illegible] on the afternoon train and will come back for their cars on Sunday.

Albert Lea.—Charles Konecke and Henry Luedtke of Lake Fremont township have petitioned for license to conduct a saloon in a building on the August Konecke farm in Lake Fremont township. The saloon would be on the north side of the state line, a little over four miles southwest of Dunnell. The Iowa counties south of there are dry territory. The people of Lake Fremont will oppose the saloon, as they have no police protection.

Pipestone.—At a special election held at Kinbrae last December to vote on the question of forming a consolidated school district the vote was 92 for to 52 against. It was then contended the election was illegal because the petitions were not properly signed. Judge Nelson, in a decision, maintains that the petitions were in proper form and that the election was legal.

St. Paul.—The state supreme court has ordered Julius Schmahl, secretary of state, to place on the ballot of the Fifty-third legislative district the names of George F. Cashman and T. D. Winship. Both are democrats. Mr. Schmahl had refused to accept their filings because Mr. Cashman had entered in Class A and Mr. Winship in Class B instead of in Classes 1 and 2, as Mr. Schmahl held to be necessary to comply with the primary law. The court, however, ruled that the filings were in substantial compliance with the statute.

Albert Lea.—Mrs. Morin, wife of the late W. A. Morin of this city, has donated the big hall at Broadway and Clark street for a modern gymnasium for young men. The lumber companies have furnished the lumber for the interior furnishings, contractors the carpenter work, and the hardware dealers all the hardware, while money is being subscribed by business men for the equipment. Mr. Morin left to the city a Christmas dinner fund of $10,000, the interest to be used for a dinner each year at Christmas time for the poor.

Albert Lea.—Small grain is practically all in the stack or has been threshed out of the shock. Few specific yields have been reported, but the crop is more than an average for this county. Corn is making rapid progress, but it will be a fortnight or three weeks before seed corn can be safely picked in most fields. There has been considerable timothy saved for seed this year, and a larger amount will be thrown on the market from this section than ever before, while some clover seed will be threshed later in the season.

Minneapolis. — John Peterson was perhaps seriously injured, and burned, when a gasoline stove in one case, and a kerosene lamp in another, exploded. Fires were caused by both explosions, in one case the entire house being destroyed, a loss of more than $1,000, and in the other case only two rugs and two oil cloths.

'85 BOYS ARE GUESTS AT FAIR

LITTLE DOING THAT ESCAPES YOUNG VISITORS' NOTICE.

Purpose of Encampment to Stimulate Interest in Country Life in State.

Minneapolis.—Eighty-five farm boys, chosen by competitive contest in eighty-five counties to attend the first annual farm boys' encampment without expense and as guests of the fair management, are having the time of their lives at the state fair this week. It is an experience which none of them will ever forget.

The boys will be off duty each day until about 11 o'clock, and will spend their time until then visiting points of interest about the grounds. One morning will be spent attending the university week program in the agricultural building. In the afternoons the boys will be detailed to act as messenger boys about the fair grounds and in the hippodrome, and as ushers in the grandstand. Later, when not on duty, the boys will be taken about by competent experts and will listen to an explanation of the livestock, agricultural exhibits, and poultry.

B. F. Woodard, secretary of the West Central Development association, is assisting Mr. Higbie in the camp management during the week. Others who are helping are Superintendent Victor Knutson, of Todd county; Superintendent C. G. Selvig, of the Northwestern Experiment station at Crookston; P. B. Miller, agronomist at Morris; R. E. Baxter, livestock man at Crookston, and S. I. Snortum, poultryman at Morris.

The boys were chosen by competitive contests arranged by the fair association in each county in the state.

When the boys have broken camp Saturday afternoon, Sept. 7, diplomas will be given to each one who has lived up to the rules of the camp. When the boys have returned home they will be given an opportunity to write an essay of not less than 600 words, nor more than 1,000 words, on the subject, "What I saw and learned at the fair as a member of the farm boys' camp." The winner of this contest will be invited to read his essay before the annual meeting of the Minnesota Agricultural society at the expense of the society. Other prizes will be awarded to those securing high rank.

CASE MAY BE SETTLED.

Great Northern Will Give Former Cashier a Chance to Pay Up.

Grand Rapids.—The case of Jerry Hicks, former cashier of the Great Northern Railway company here, who is facing a charge of embezzlement, has been continued until Sept. 5. It is understood that if Hicks pays the alleged shortage in his accounts, $813, the prosecution will be dropped.

The shortage was discovered the latter part of July, when an accountant of the railway was sent here to check Hicks out, prior to promotion. Hicks asserts his innocence, declaring he does not know how or where the shortage occurred.

Former Station Agent W. C. LeFevre and Special Accountant Johannes of the Great Northern are witnesses for the state. If a settlement is not reached by Sept. 5, the case will come up again for hearing. The defense has been insisting on a minute examination of the books of the office, and the preliminary hearing has already occupied three days.

AWAIT NEW INSTITUTION

First Inebriate for Willmar Asylum Will Go From Mankato.

Mankato.—Mankato will furnish the first inmate of the new inebriate asylum at Willmar, to be opened in October. A traveling man, who, according to his own statement, has taken the Keeley cure six times without lessening his desire for strong drink, and who was recently arrested in this city for drunkenness for the fifteenth time, has been sentenced to serve seventy days in the county jail, or until such time as the farm for inebriates at Willmar is ready to receive patients. He is then to be turned over to the authorities of that institution, under the sentence of the court, for an indeterminate period.

Minnesota Postmasters to Convene.

Minneapolis. — The Minnesota State League of Postmasters will meet in seventh annual convention at the mayor's reception room Thursday and Friday of this week and will be welcomed to the city with addresses by Mayor Haynes and J. W. Bragdon, president of the Commercial club. W. S. Bartholomew, Avon, Minn., president of the league, will respond and an address by George W. Drake, postoffice inspector, and reports of officers will fill in the first day. Good programs are arranged for the other sessions.

Madison to Have Waterworks.

Madison.—The contracts for remodeling the electric light and power plant and for the installation of a waterworks system have been let. Bonds to the extent of $50,000 were sold to the Western Securities company of Des Moines. The work was let as follows: Erection of water tank and tower to Chicago Bridge & Iron works at $8,000, water system to Cook Construction company of Des Moines for $19,319, the renewing of the electric light plant to J. G. Robertson of [illegible]

TESTING OF COWS

Interesting Report Made by Pioneer Association.

Albert Lea.—The first annual report of the Pioneer Test association, the first cow testing association in the state, organized by the agricultural department of the Albert Lea high school, has just been made. From the twenty-eight herds, containing 455 cows, of this association, careful reports of the butterfat and the cost of feed for each cow have been recorded.

The association has proved of great value to its members. Some have found that their milk-producing stock had been unprofitable, while others have been barely running even. The association has prompted dairymen who have studied the records of the different herds to provide better methods of feeding, and more purebred stock, and barns have been improved by putting in cement floors, swinging stanchions, additional windows and ventilating systems.

The report shows that if the farmers of Minnesota would replace the poorest one-fourth of their heard by cows as good as the best one-fourth, it would add $46,516,122 each year to the profits of the dairy business of Minnesota. The best two cows of the association gave 13,656 pounds of milk and 485.3 pounds of butter fat valued at $141.02. The cost of feed was $53.34, leaving a net profit of $87.68. The two poorest cows lost the owners $20.43 each, making the actual difference between the best cow and the poorest $108.11.

The best herd produced an average of 9,485 pounds of milk and 815 pounds of butter fat to the cow, valued at $89, while the average cost of feed a cow was $41.69, making a net profit of $57.31 a cow. The poorest herd produced an average of 1,976 pounds of milk and 90.7 pounds of butter fat a cow, valued at $37.88. One of the best cows taken from each of the twenty-eight herds showed a net profit of $45.99 over the one of the poorest cows taken from each herd.

This association and the Clark's Grove and Alden associations, the first three organizations of the kind in the state, have finished their first year and have been reorganized with over 500 cows each, which goes to show the interest and growing desire of the farmer to increase the value of the dairy industry in the state.

COMPANY GIVES ROAD.

Ready-Made Thoroughfare for Northern County.

Bemidji.—A ready-made road, twenty-eight miles in length, and one of the finest in northern Minnesota, will be thrown open to the public in the next few days, the stretch beginning at a point three miles west of Solway and continuing to the northwest corner of the Itasca state park, tapping the towns of Regina, Alida, Mallard and Long Lake.

This highway is the old roadbed of the Red River Lumber company, built about twelve years ago, at an expense of $160,000. Farmers are pulling up the ties and leveling the road, which has a clay bed with gravel ballast. This road is to connect with the trunk road from St. Vincent to Duluth.

Through the efforts of G. P. Jones of Bagley, and W. B. Mackenzie, secretary of the Northern Minnesota Development association, the Red River Lumber company has agreed to lease the roadbed to Clearwater county, the only expenses being that Clearwater county must maintain it. The lease will continue until the lumber company desires to use it again for railroad purposes.

The new road will be open for traffic by the time the hunting season begins and will be popular for automobiles.

PREDICT DROP IN PRICE

Edward Cudahy Forecasts Decrease in Cost of Meat.

Minneapolis.—All sorts of beefsteak and pork chops will be cheaper in Minneapolis this fall and winter than they have been in a year if packers' local branches follow the course laid down by Edward Cudahy, head of the Cudahy Packing company. Also the steaks will be juicier and the pork chops more tender than they have been in years, according to the same authorities.

Mr. Cudahy is optimistic as to future meat prices. "Cheaper meats must come, and come soon," said Mr. Cudahy in Omaha. "Especially is this true of beef. The season for grass-fed cattle has arrived and the heavy run of medium grades will force prices down. Pork will maintain its present high price until January, when there will be a drop of more than 10 per cent, and by next summer pork will have dropped by one-third."

Mr. Cudahy stated that the Northwest was harvesting the biggest crop in its history and that with so much corn and feed the price of meat was bound to go down.

Samaritan Feud Intensifies.

Duluth. — The imperial council of the Modern Samaritans, an insurance society with membership in several northwestern states, adjourned after a four days' meeting, with the war raging among the officials for control still unsettled. Treasurer O. F. Collier, who was voted out Monday, and his successor, elected, still holds onto the funds and puts forth the claims that he is still in office, arguing that the meeting at which he was ousted was illegally held [illegible]

TELLS OF GEYSERS

Every Year More Tourists Throng Yellowstone Park.

"Old Faithful" Resembles Symmetrical Cone Containing 250,000 Gallons of Steaming Water 150 Feet High.

Yellowstone Park.—Yellowstone National Park every year furnishes a center of interest for increasing numbers of vacationists. The government has taken precautions to preserve this, the greatest of American wonders, for years to come. The acting superintendent of the park is the commanding officer of Fort Yellowstone, a four-company post. Hunting is not permitted in the reserve, but visitors may fish for trout. The Government protects the animals in the park and sees to it that the natural formations of stone are not damaged by vandals.

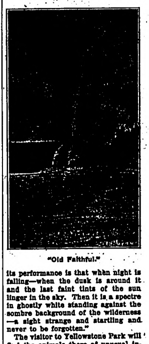
The geysers are principal attractions in Yellowstone. There are thousands of these strange natural phenomena there; some are almost constantly active, while others seem to be extinct. Old Faithful geyser has been thus described:

"In imagination lift in a symmetrical cone 250,000 gallons of scalding, steaming water 150 feet high and hold it there three minutes, jewel the grand fountain with a million diamonds, filter through it the hues of innumerable dancing rainbows, commingle in confusion every sound of splash and splutter—and you will have a faint idea of Old Faithful in action.

"It is the immutable water clock of the Yellowstone, the most perfect illustration of geyseric phenomena, the most famous and beautiful geyser in the whole world.

"The note of the beginning of the play of the geyser is an angry growl down deep in its throat, whence almost instantly the water, in rapid recurrent leaps, forms the stately fountain that plays for three minutes and then slowly sinks into the earth to await its time to rise again. Sometimes the winds unfold from its top an iridescent banner of spray, but more often the fountain form is a perfect cone.

"Old Faithful plays every seventy minutes, and never disappoints. In the daytime, under the sun, it glistens and gleams with prismatic hues; but the most enchanting hour to witness its performance is that when night is falling—when the dusk is around it and the last faint tints of the sun linger in the sky. Then it is a spectre in ghostly white standing against the sombre background of the wilderness—a sight strange and startling and never to be forgotten."



"Old Faithful."

The visitor to Yellowstone Park will find the animals there of unusual interest. No sound of gun or bark of dog is ever heard and the wild animals have become so tame that they have no fear of the tourist and give only a passing glance at the visitors. Deer, buffalo, elk and bear roam through the Yellowstone. The bears come down from their caves in the evening and feed about the hotels. Excellent hotel accommodations are to be found in the Yellowstone and competent guides are to be hired.

RAISE MANGO IN FLORIDA

Government Experimenters Succeed With Tree Given to Official by Prince in India.

Washington.—President Taft has been presented with a fine basket of East Indian mangoes raised in the United States. The bureau of plant introduction, which is experimenting with hundreds of foreign fruits in the effort to find new varieties that will grow here, raised the mangoes in Florida. They came from a tree presented to David Fairchild, chief of the bureau of plant introduction, when he was in India some years ago, by one of the princes of that land. Mr. Fairchild says mango growing in the United States can be made a commercial success.

Senator F. H. Peterson, candidate for congress, made a short address here yesterday. He has a plan to return thousands of dollars to the people of this state by securing the passage of a law of congress giving the state the right to fix both passenger and freight rates between points both of which are in this state, whether the roads are wholly within the state or are interstate.

H. E. Ives is out with his photo calling the voters' attention to the fact that he is a candidate for nomination and of course election for clerk of court. Mr. Ives has made a very efficient county official, and about the only reason to defeat him for reelection would be that another man wants the job. But here is hoping we will see the smiling face of Harry behind that counter after January first.—Sunbeam.

The attack of Penrose and Archbold, of course, helps Colonel Roosevelt more than anything else could. When a statesman has a high and well-earned reputation he can only gain by slander from persons well known for ways that are dark. The strange thing is the self deception that keeps these distinguished leaders of the plunderbund from realizing that they hurt the men they support and help the men they assault.—Colliers.

Voters should be sure to record their second choice. With so many candidates in the field as there are for most of the offices, it is quite possible, if the voters neglect this important point, for some candidate to obtain the nomination whom the voters do not want at all. All voters who prefer to vote for any other candidate for clerk of court should be sure to indicate their second choice for Mr. Ives. If they neglect this, we repeat that it is possible under the present system for the nomination to go to some man who was far from being the choice of the greater part of the voters. They should remember that a second choice vote in no way affects the first choice.

Obituary

We returned home last Saturday from Bemidji where we were called by the sickness and death of Mrs. Amble's father and sister. Mrs. Pearl Bickstad died Aug. 23, at the hospital in Bemidji from spinal meningitis. Her last words were: "I wish to die, its well with me, but comfort mother." She was 20 years old, and leaves a husband. Her father, O. N. Johnson, died at his home eight miles east of Bemidji Aug. 24, from heart failure, 71 years old. He leaves a wife and several children. He was conscious to the last and died while prayer was being offered up for him. The double funeral was held from the Presbyterian church in Bemidji Aug. 26, Rev. Chas. Flesher officiating. Children and grand children, a large following of relatives and friends who showed their respect and sympathy for the dead, conveyed father and daughter to their last resting place, side by side in one grave in Greenwood cemetery, Bemidji. The following relatives from Grand Forks, N. D., were present at the funeral: Mr. and Mrs. C. L. McCaffrey, Mr. and Mrs. A. Behnke, Mr. and Mrs. N. Johnson, C. Johnson, M. Johnson, and Bertha Johnson.

Farewell, father, sister, your earthly care and trouble are past. God who gives and takes life, and our destiny in his hand, knoweth best. For peace and joy and comfort doth he give a place in heaven, where Jesus guides. Rest, soldiers, rest.

Though loved ones from us are gone and voices that we loved are stilled; their places in their homes are vacant that never can be filled; God in his wisdom wisely rules, for though their bodies slumber in the grave, their souls are safe in Heaven. Rest, soldiers, rest.

MR. and MRS. S. J. AMBLE.

Life and Accident Insurance

Henry Olson spent his vacation in selling life and accident insurance. He has a plan of insurance which he finds to appeal to the young farmers, and he has done a good stroke of business in the past two weeks.

He has held the agency for the Merchants' Life and Casualty Company of Minneapolis, and has successfully worked it in northern Minnesota for the past three years. This company insures against death in case of accident only, but pays monthly benefits for any sickness as well as accident including surgical operations and quarantine against contagious diseases.

The cost of this insurance is $500 for is $5.00 for the policy and $1.00 per month thereafter. The fifth year of insurance is free—that is, the monthly payments are remitted that year; as also the elevedth, twelfte, and thirteenth years. Taken altogether, this may be said to be the best and cheapest insurance on the market.

Part Played by Heredity

Heredity plays an important part not only in tuberculosis and cancerous affections but likewise in diabetes, rheumatism, gout and many other diseases. We do not inherit tuberculosis, but we do inherit a lessened vitality, or a tendency to contract tuberculosis infection. Underweights are usually people who have inherited such a lessened vitality, and they run the further risk of infection from their underweight brothers or sisters who are apt to be infected. To guard against weakened vitality, provide the system regularly with the food, with the proper supply of phosphates, albumen, malts and hops found in perfection in golden grain belt beers. Alex Thompson, Crookston agent.

Bids for Bonds

Sealed bids will be received by the village council of the village of St. Hilaire for the purchase of $4,000.00 in bonds running for a period of fifteen years, issued for the purpose of taking up floating indebtedness. Bids will be opened at 8 p. m., September 19.

The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids.

Bear Wanted to Play with Children.

While the children of John Herron were playing in front of their home, at Duryea, Pa., a she-bear and her cub appeared on the scene. The baby bear ran up and wanted to play with the children, kitten-like, but the mother bear called it back, while the youngsters ran into the house. As Mr. Herron was not at home and no one who could shoot was around the visitors remained unmolested. After sniffing about the yard for a while and eating a few apples and potato peelings at the back door, the bears rambled away.

Breakfasting with Whistler.

There was a foreign painter who used to breakfast at Chelsea, and when Mr. Carr asked him if he had been there lately he replied: "Oh, no; not now so much. He ask me a leetle while ago to breakfast, and I go. My cab fare, two shilling, 'arf a crown. I arrive, very nice. Goldfish in bowl, very pretty. But breakfast—one egg, one toast—no more! Oh, no. My cab fare, two shillings, 'arf a crown. For me no more!"—London Telegraph.

Steenerson's Announcement

In announcing my candidacy for reelection as representive in congress I desire first of all to thank the people of the district for the honor bestowed upon me in the past and to assure them that, if it shall please them to continue me in their service, I shall in the future, as I have in the past, put forth every effort to serve them faithfully to the best of my ability.

I am a republican—a progressive republican—and have supported all progressive legislation for the more complete government regulation and control of railroads and interstate commerce, the policy of conservation of water powers and other natural resources in the interest of the people, and the development of unsettled lands on liberal terms to actual settlers.

While I voted against the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and Canadian reciprocity because, in my judgement, they were against the best interests of my constituents, I am a protectionist and favor a tariff high enough to preserve the home market to American industries, but not so high as to make it a shield for exorbitant prices.

I voted for the amendments to the constitution recently passed by congress providing for election of senators by the people, and an income tax, which now await ratification by the states.

I aided in the elimination of railroad and ship subsides from postal expenditures, and the improvement and extension of postal service, including parcel post and rural free delivery, and am trying to get improved laws to prevent using the mails to promote fraudulent schemes.

I favor strict government regulation of interstate comerce, as well as transportation; supervision of corporations on capitalization, and, if necessary, even limitation of prices; and workmens' compensation for the benefit of victims of industrial accidents, and all legislation in favor of temperance and morality.

Liberal pensions in their declining years is due from a grateful nation to its gallant defenders, the veterans of the civil war, as a matter of right and justice. While I believe in due military preparation on the part of the leading civilized powers of the world; I believe the time has come when there should be renewed efforts to substitute international arbitration for war in the settlement of disputes among nations, and to limit armaments, thus saving immense sums for more useful purposes in the service of humanity.

The rural schools will soon be in session, some opening the first Monday of this month. Teachers have been referred to all schools; but have all district officers acted on the applications sent in to the respective school boards? Teachers may be scarce this fall, and unless the hiring of teachers is taken care of early some schools may find difficulty in obtaining them. Clerks will kindly inform the superintendent of schools when school is to begin and of the fact that a teacher has been hired. Only a few clerks have complied with the law in sending in time the school census reports.

Respectfully submitted.

For County Treasurer

I hereby wish to announce my candidacy for the office of county treasurer at the republican primaries to be held Sept. 17, 1912, and earnestly solicit the support of the voters of Pennington county.

JOHN T. GULLINGSRUD.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by W. J. LaBree.)

Sheriff

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I am a candidate for the office of sheriff, and respectfully solicit your vote and support at the primaries September 17, 1912.

Yours very truly,
W. J. LABREE.
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by J. M. Bishop.)

For County Attorney

I am a candidate for county attorney for Pennington county on the republican ticket on the first primaries to be held in the county. I have never held a county office although I have been in the practice of law for twent-two years, but would consider it an honor to be the first nominee of the party for county attorney in the county. I will be delighted to receive your vote and support.

J. M. BISHOP.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by A. H. Fasel.)

County Auditor

Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912

I wish hereby to announce to the voters of Pennington county, that I am a candidate for the the republican nomination for the office of county auditor, at the September 17, 1912, primaries. Since my appointment to this office, at the time of the organization of Pennington county, I have given the office my whole time and my very best efforts. Should I be favored with the nomination and election, I believe with the experience gained, I will be still better prepared to serve you the coming term.

If our services have met with your approval I earnestly solicit your consideration and support.

Very truly yours,
A. H. FASEL.

Clerk of Court

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I will be a candidate for the republican nomination for clerk of the district court for Pennington county, subject to the decision of the voters at the republican primery, September 17, 1912.

I have occupied the position since the organization of Pennington county and have tried to the best of my ability to be strictly impartial and as efficient as my ability would allow. I will be pleased to have the votes and support of all citizens who believe that I have filled the position in an honest and efficient manner.

If nominated and elected I hereby promise to give the office my personal attention and my best efforts to honestly administer the affairs of the office in a strictly impartial and efficient manner.

HARRY E. IVES.
Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Andrew Trovaten.)

For County Treasurer

I wish to announce that I am a candidate for county treasurer, subject to the ratification of the republican voters at the primaries, September 17, 1912. Being that political parties have always regarded it as important to have their members elected to all offices, it must be for aid in promoting party politics, for so far as the work in the county offices is concerned, it can make no difference whatever, what the officer's political affiliations are, so the idea must be that he is expected to talk and work, and use the advantage of his public position, in aiding the party to which he belongs. I believe that it is of the utmost importance to have the republican party control at least one branch of congress, in order to maintain the average of prices. While the price-level does not prove that times are good, theoretically, yet we know that with the enormous debt of the country, it will be harder to pay it with low prices than with high, steady prices. I believe that because one cannot support the whole republican ticket, it is no reason at all to quit supporting candidates for congress and the legislature, which is by far more important than the office of president, so far as party politics is concerned. These are my ideas, and I shall use my influence to help along on those lines, no matter whether I am nominated or not.

Sincerely for the success of the party,
ANDREW TROVATEN.
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by C. H. Martz.)

County Surveyor

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I am a candidate for the republican nomination for the office of county surveyor at the primaries September 17, 1912.

Your support will be appreciated.

C. H. MARTZ.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by Earnest L. Quist.)

Register of Deeds

I hereby announce my candidacy for reelection to the office of register of deeds, and respectfully solicit your support. Should I be nominated and elected I shall consider it an endorsement of past favors.

Very sincerely yours,
EARNEST L. QUIST.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Wilhelm Michelet.)

Judge of Probate

I hereby announce that I am a nonpartisan candidate for re-election to the office of judge of probate in and for Pennington county, Minnesota. I respectfully solicit your vote and support at the primary election to be held on Tuesday Sept. 17, 1912.

WILHELM MICHELET,
Judge of Probate,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by E. A. Mostue.)

County Superintendent

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election for the office of superintendent of schools for Pennington county subject to the ratification of the voters at the primary to be held Tuesday, Sept. 17, 1912.

Your vote and support are respectfully solicited.

E. A. MOSTUE.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by George L. Netteland.)

County Superintendent

St. Hilaire, Minn., August 5, 1912.

I wish hereby to announce to readers of the Spectator that I am a candidate for superintendent of schools of Pennington county, and hope you will give me your votes and support next fall.

I am not running on any particular party ticket as the new primary law requires that all candidates for superintendent of schools run on a non-partisan ballot, on their merits.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE L. NETTELAND.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by O. F. Post.)

Clerk of Court

According to the present laws, that we as a citizen are sworn to abide by, it is necessary that we file application for candidacy for the office of clerk of court, and publish notice of our desire.

I am perfectly willing to abide by the decision of my friends and aquaintances as to my qualifications to clerically and economically fulfill the duties of this office.

I have been a citizen of this county for twenty-nine years. I will most surely appreciate any favors that the voters of Pennington county feel disposed to confer upon myself at the primary election to be held September 17, 1912.

Yours truly, O. F. POST.

Wedding Bells

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Martin Hanson was the scene on Sunday, Sept. 1, of the wedding of their daughter, Effie Florence, and Stuart G. Richards of Manitoba, Canada.

At 2 o'clock p. m. the strains of the Lohengrin wedding march were played by Miss Esther Palmer announcing the coming of the bridal party. Miss Francesca Alison of Hazel, who acted as bridesmaid, entered with Ralph Roy as best man; then entered the bride with her father and was met by the groom beneath the wedding bell, and Rev. Paul N. Palmer, pastor of the M. E. church of St. Hilaire, read the wedding service.

The bride wore a gown of white silk crepe de chine, caught up with blue forget-me-nots and carried a bouquet of bridal roses. The bridesmaid wore a gown of pink silk, and carnations in her hair. The groom and best man were presentably dressed for the occasion.

After the ceremony a tasteful four course dinner was presented by Mr. and Mrs. Waring in a room draped in green and white.

Immediately after the reception Mr. and Mrs. Richards left for the cities on a short honeymoon trip. They will make their future home in Canada, as the groom is chief clerk of H. M. customs service. Their many friends wish them a happy and joyous wedded life.

They were presented with many valuable and useful gifts. The out of town guests were Mr. and Mrs. James Hanson of Crookston. Mr. Hanson is brother to the bride.

School Notes

Due to the small enrollment in the primary room and the crowded work in the upper grades it was necessary to shift the grades so as to even up the work in the respective rooms. The grades have been arranged as follows:

Mr. Boehm, high school and departmental eighth.

Miss Patterson, seventh and departmental eighth.

Mrs. O'Brien, fifth and sixth.

Miss Hagen; third and fourth.

Miss Hodgson, first and second.

The enrollment since the changing of the grades is: Mr. Boehm's room, 16; Miss Patterson's, 12; Mrs O'Brien's room, 39; Miss Hagen's room, 27; Miss Hodgson's room, 27.

Several of the pupils who are not accustomed to marching are having quite a time knowing which is their left foot.

There will be no football team this fall, due to the fact that ten of the eleven would-be star players are making themselves conspicuous by their absence. The material so far is good and we only need ten more boys like him to have a winning team.

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making The Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

SYMPATHY, BUT NO APOLOGY

Lawyer's Tart Remarks Not Greatly Softened by His Rejoinder When "Called Down."

Andrew Lipscomb, who practices law before the courts of Maryland, was trying his first case before a judge named Merrick. Lipscomb, wishing to impress the judge, was, in the language of the bar, right lippy in his remarks to the eminent gentleman. Finally, Merrick lost patience and exclaimed:

"Sit down! Sit down, sir! If you don't sit down I'll fine you for contempt of court."

Lipscomb sat down, but turned to a young lawyer beside him, and remarked, in an understone:

"That's the crustiest, most opinionated old judge I ever saw. I'll show him where he gets off. He's an old fool."

"If you talk like that, I'll beat you up!" replied the young lawyer. "He's my father!"

"How sad!" said Lipscomb, smoothly. "How sad."—Popular Magazine.

ECZEMA IN RED BLOTCHES

205 Kanter Ave., Detroit, Mich.—"Some time last summer I was taken with eczema. It began in my hair first with red blotches, then scaly, spreading to my face. The blotches were red on my face, dry and scaly, not large; on my scalp they were larger, some scabby. They came on my hands. The inside of my hands were all little lumps as though full of shot about one-sixteenth of an inch under the skin. Then they went to the outside and between and all over my fingers. It also began on the bottoms of my feet and the calves of my legs, and itch, oh, my! I never had anything like it and hope I never will again. The itching was terrible. My hands got so I could scarcely work.

"I tried different eczema ointments but without results. I also took medicine for it but it did no good. I saw the advertisement for a sample of Cuticura Ointment and Soap and sent for one. They did me so much good I bought some more, using them as per directions, and in about three weeks I was well again. Cuticura Soap and Ointment entirely cured me." (Signed) Benj. William M'Intosh, the "Scotch Indian"

W^m M^cINTOSH

He was half Scotch, half Indian, wholly scoundrel. His mother was a squaw of the "Creek nation." His father was a Scotch trader and soldier. The son took the name William McIntosh. But he remained with his mother's people and was made a Creek war chief.

The Creeks were a powerful federation of Indian tribes whose lands stretched through several of the southernmost states. The white settlers, growing more and more numerous, cast envious eyes on the rich Creek country and appealed to the United States government to get it away from its redskin owners for them. It was the same old story enacted so many times along the frontier when the white man has wanted the Indian's land. The government turned over several million acres of Creek territory to the state of Georgia. McIntosh pointed out to his people that unless they stood firm for their possessions the government would soon have every acre of their once huge tract of land. He then drew up a law—which the Creeks eagerly adopted—making it a crime punishable by death for a Creek to try to sell to the United States any of the remaining territory. This law made McIntosh immensely popular with the Indians. He now proceeded to make himself equally popular with the government.

In the War of 1812 most of the Creeks sided with Great Britain. But McIntosh declared himself a friend of the United States and managed to raise a big war party, which followed him against the rest of his "nation." He attacked a village of Creeks (Atasi) that had sided with England and massacred its 200 men, women and children. In other conflicts of that same war he fought so savagely against his own people as to win not only the rank of major, but the trust of our government. Incidentally his services opened to him a pleasant field for graft.

The United States was eager for more of the Creek lands. McIntosh stood high in the Creek councils. He could be of use in managing "treaties" for the despoiling of his people. He willingly accepted the government's offer and secretly became its paid agent. It was a highly profitable bit of double-dealing—for a time.

Fifteen million acres of Creek land were soon after transferred to the United States. McIntosh reaped a rich harvest by this "treaty." But it ruined him with the Creeks. They made no open threats against the traitor; but they simply met in council and re-enacted his own former law, making any such future transfers punishable by death.

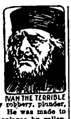
In 1824 McIntosh received a large cash offer for his services in a plan for ceding 10,000,000 more acres of the Creeks to the government. The majority of the Creeks fiercely protested against this glaring robbery. John C. Calhoun, secretary of state, declared that it was cruelly unjust. President Monroe laid the treaty before the United States senate. And, after John Quincy Adams' inauguration, it was approved. A letter in which McIntosh had offered bribe money to one of the Creek officials to side with the government was discovered by the Indians. This proved the wily half-breed's treachery past all question. The Creeks—using his own old law as a death warrant—declared McIntosh's life forfeited.

This time McIntosh was really alarmed. He retired to a fortified house at Milledgeville and surrounded himself with a strong guard. The Creeks went about the traitor's execution in a quiet, business-like way.

On the night of May 1, 1825, one hundred of them surrounded his house, They sent orders to his guards, servants and family to leave the place at once. Then they burned the house to the ground. McIntosh, dashing out through the flames, was shot dead.

No punishment was inflicted on McIntosh's slayers. The question of vengeance was brought before President Adams. But, for everybody's sake, it was deemed best to let the affair drop. It was a scandal the administration did not care to make too public.

Ivan The Terrible, "Heavy Villain" of Russia's Drama



IVAN THE TERRIBLE

A Russian boy of fourteen, after a childhood of misery and ill-treatment, was carefully educated by his relatives in the art of cruelty. For three years this horrible education lasted. He was taught to enjoy robbery, plunder, torture and killing. He was made to win his teachers' applause by galloping at full speed through Moscow's crowded streets and trampling helpless women and children to death under his horse's iron-shod hoofs. The boy was Ivan IV. of Russia, known as "Ivan the Terrible."

Russia was least civilized of all European lands. Its early history was one of needless bloodshed and merciless conquest. The rulers were called grand dukes, until Ivan the Terrible became the first czar. He took the title of "czar" because that was the Russian form of "Caesar," a title applied to Rome's emperors. ("Kaiser" is another form of the same word.)

Ivan mounted the throne in 1533, at his father's death. He was but four years old at the time and was for the next ten years wholly in the power of brutal nobles who ruled the court. Then when he was fourteen a political clique made up of his relatives came into power and proceeded to teach him to be more a fiend than a human being. When Ivan was seventeen he had a vision, or trance, in which he believed an angel warned him to lead a better life. He obeyed—more through fear and superstition than from religious zeal.

For the next 13 years Ivan was a model ruler. He did much for his people, was gentle and wise, and gave promise of an ideal career. The noblest influence in all his life was his lovely wife, Anastasia. He loved her and was guided by her advice. In 1566 came the change that made him an object of dread.

In that year Anastasia died. Ivan fell dangerously ill through grief. When at length he was well again his whole nature had changed. It is probable sorrow and illness had affected his brain. In any case he rose from his sick bed more like a wild beast than a man. He was filled with fear of fancied conspiracies. To crush these imaginary plots he slew numbers of noblemen, along with their entire families. He devised tortures too repulsive to be named. Among the mildest of these was the turning loose of wild dogs and bears among throngs of innocent people.

The city of Novgorod incurred his displeasure. He marched against it with an army and massacred 60,000 of its inhabitants. He had the prisoners herded in an inclosure and slew them with his own hand as long as he could strike a blow. Then he ordered his fierce troops to continue the slaughter on them.

A thousandth part of such cruelty as his would have set any nation, in late days, into a flame of revolt. But the sixteenth century Russians looked on their czar as a god, and bore meekly whatever outrages his maniac brain might choose to inflict upon them.

Ivan had seven wives in rapid succession, and sent to Queen Elizabeth's court for an eighth. But the English girl he chose—daughter of the earl of Huntington—begged so piteously to be saved from the fate of wedding the imperial monster that the match was broken off.

Fiend as he was, Ivan the Terrible did great things for Russia. He opened its ports to the commerce of the world, established the first printing office there, conquered and annexed Siberia and—except in his fits of madness—encouraged civilization and progress among his savage people. He was a shrewd statesman, a crafty warrior, a man not devoid of genius.

As the years went on Ivan's insane fear of conspiracy and assassination grew stronger. Falsely suspecting his eldest and ablest son of plotting with his foes, he struck the young man dead with a blow of his iron staff.

Remorse for this murder hastened Ivan's own death. Surrounded by quacks and "magicians"—a prey to superstitious terrors—now repenting his cruelties, now feverishly planning fresh atrocities—the tyrant wore out the last three years of his vile life, dying in 1584.

Many a man has been wrecked on a train of thought.

Old Time Cost of Living

Putting Blame on Middleman and Combinations of Farmers and Merchants No New Thing.

Blaming the high cost of living on the middleman and on combinations of farmers and merchants is no new thing. In the last century in England Chief Justice Kenyon presided at many trials where punishment was inflicted for alleged combination and the forestalling of competition. In charging the jury in the case of one Rusby, who was indicted for purchasing a quantity of oats and selling them at a profit the same day, his lordship adverted with scorn to the doctrines of Adam Smith. "I wish," said he, "that Dr. Smith had lived to hear the evidence today. If he had been told that corn and cattle were brought to market, and there bought by a man whose purse happens to be longer than his neighbor's, so that the poor man who walks the streets and earns his daily bread by his daily labor could get none but through his hands; that corn had been raised in price nearly double on the same day it was sold, would he have said there was no danger from such an offense?" On a verdict of guilty being rendered, the judge thanked the jury, and said: "Gentlemen, you have done your duty and have conferred a lasting obligation on your country."

Latest Wrinkle.

In a shop recently a well-known actress, who is noted for her perennial youth, asked for a traveling bag of alligator skin. The shopkeeper, who had none of that particular sort, brought out instead some of smooth leather.

"And you tell me this is alligator skin?" objected the actress. "Why, where are its wrinkles?"

"Ah, madam," replied the wily dealer, who knew his customer "wrinkles are out of vogue. The correct alligator bag is made from the skin of an alligator that has been massaged."

To Reproduce Riot Scenes.

The recent riot at the Federal building, Los Angeles, will be reproduced at the trial of those arrested by motion picture films, and shown to the jury on a screen. It will be the first time in the history of jurisprudence that such evidence will have been introduced. While the riot was at its height a moving-picture company, with the newest model machine, had an operator on the scene, and his films show the entire actions of those persons who are charged with having caused disturbance.

THIRTEEN YEARS

Unlucky Number for Dakota Woman.

The question whether the number "13" is really more unlucky than any other number has never been entirely settled.

A So. Dak. woman, after thirteen years of misery from drinking coffee, found a way to break the "unlucky spell." Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the drug in coffee. She writes:

"For thirteen years I have been a nervous wreck from drinking coffee. My liver, stomach, heart—in fact, my whole system being actually poisoned by it.

"Last year I was confined to my bed for six months. Finally it dawned on me that coffee caused the trouble. Then I began using Postum instead of coffee, but with little faith, as my mind was in such a condition that I hardly knew what to do next.

"Extreme nervousness, and failing eyesight caused me to lose all courage. In about two weeks after I quit coffee and began to use Postum I was able to read and my head felt clear. I am improving all the time and I will be a strong, well woman yet.

"I have fooled more than one person with a delicious cup of Postum. Mrs. S. wanted to know where I bought my fine coffee. I told her my grocer had it and when she found out it was Postum she has used it ever since, and her nerves are building up fine.

"My brain is strong, my nerves steady, my appetite good, and best of all, I enjoy such sound, pleasant sleep." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Get the little book in pkgs., "The Road to Wellville." "There's a reason."

DRAGON OF OLD HARMLESS

Terrifying Creature of Prehistoric Days Was a Vegetarian and Not Considered Dangerous.

Sheridan, Wyo.—A dinosaur or land dragon is being uncovered near Sheridan (Wyo.) and measurements indicate that the gigantic reptile must have been 65 feet long when it lived. The largest previous specimen unearthed measured only 30 feet long, and stood about 13 feet high. It is, perhaps, something to be thankful for that these immense monsters have had their day and ceased to be. Most of them were aquatic in their habits and, apart from their terrifying appearance on land, an encounter with one of them in the water, when bathing or boating, would occasion something more than a mere diversion.

The duck-billed dinosaur, shown in our illustration, although resembling in appearance the traditional dragon of fire-breathing proclivities, was one of the harmless type. Its most remarkable characteristics were a huge duck-like bill, a long tail with much-compressed sides and webbed feet. It broke the record in the matter of teeth borne on the jaws at the back part of the mouth. The upper jaw alone had over 2,000, symmetrically arranged in rows, but only those along the cutting edge of the jaw were in use at one time. As they got worn they were shed and replaced by the next row. These teeth were admirably adapted to cutting up grass, rushes and submerged weeds, which were evidently shovelled in by the curious toothless beak. This species of dinosaur was strictly vegetarian.

Duck-Billed Dinosaur.

All that is known of this creature has been gleaned from mummified remains found in ages old strata of the earth in Montana and Wyoming, so that it was evidently a denizen of this country. It was one of the last surviving species of its race and flourished toward the end of the great age of reptiles. The body seems to have been covered with a tough hide, studded with irregular bony plates capped by horn, much as in present day crocodiles. On land it walked on its great hind limbs which, like those of all the bipedal reptiles, were bird-like, and bore but three toes. The long and immensely powerful tail served as a propeller when swimming. The forelegs seem to have been but little used except, perhaps, to convey food to the mouth.

PRETTY BATHER IS DARING

Policeman Pursues "Heliotrope Girl" in Rowboat and She Disappears.

Chicago.—A pretty bather attired in a heliotrope silk bathing suit and knickerbockers, shocked the guests at the Chicago Beach hotel, when the young woman took a plunge into the water.

There were others who were shocked besides the hundreds of men and women who noticed the woman saunter toward the pier, just before she took a dive into the surf.

The person who was most surprised was William Denney, manager and detective of the beach. He prides himself on the way that the beach has been conducted since he took charge, and when his attention was called to the "heliotrope girl" the policeman's esthetic tastes were crushed.

"This will never do, you are violating every code in the city ordinance covering bathing beaches," said Denney, as he ran over to the pier, where the "heliotrope girl" was majestically swimming beyond the life lines.

"Hey, come ashore," shouted the policeman, but the fair bather swam further out into the lake. "She can't swim around here," said Denney, as he ran to shore and jumped into a rowboat to overtake the swimmer. The girl in the heliotrope colored bathing suit noticed that the policeman was in pursuit, and she swam toward Forty-seventh street, out of the range of his jurisdiction, and climbed over the pier and disappeared.

None of the bathers at the beach know who the woman swimmer was, but Policeman Denney said that if she ever attempts to take another dip, he will place her under arrest.

THROW LUNCHES AT WOMEN

Boston Woman Driven From Stand at Dayton Picnic—Others Also Are Targets.

Dayton, Ohio.—At an outing given by the policemen and firemen of Dayton at an amusement park, Miss Margaret Foley of Boston, a militant leader of the suffragist cause, was compelled to abandon her speech because of a demonstration against her.

Prominent club women of Dayton attempted to support Miss Foley and were driven away under a shower of fragments of luncheons of the picnickers.

Miss Foley, who had mounted a table to speak in behalf of woman's suffrage, was hissed, but persisted in speaking. Someone threw a ham sandwich, which struck her in the face, but she continued to talk until luncheon refuse of all kinds, thrown at her, forced her to flee.

Mrs. G. F. Davidson of Dayton appealed for a hearing, but was met with a similar reception. The other members of the suffragist party, all wives of prominent Dayton business men, then sought refuge wherever they could from the missiles aimed at

To Operate Canal by Electricity.

The Panama canal will be operated almost exclusively by electric power. Approximately seven per cent. of the minimum water supply will be diverted for hydro-electric development, and this will be the excess which is not required for lockages, evaporation and leakage. The hydro-electric station will be located adjacent to the north wall of the Gatum spillway and the plant will have a capacity of 6,000 kilowats. The average hydraulic head throughout the year will be about 75 feet.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientist for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng., and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. Fougera Co., 90 Beekman St., New York.

DUMAS TO PRISON

MUST WORK OUT PENALTY FOR CONVICTION IN PUPOSKY RAID AT STILLWATER.

A JEKYL-HYDE DRAMA.

Bemidji Courtroom Is Final Scene—Former Cass Lake Mayor Protests Innocence to the Last.

Bemidji. — Continually protesting innocence and asserting through his attorney, George Spear of Grand Rapids, that he has been prevented from ever telling his side of the story, Dr. D. F. Dumas, until last spring mayor of Cass Lake and one of the most successful physicians in Northern Minnesota, was sentenced in District Court here before Judge W. S. McClenahan to hard labor at Stillwater on the charge of attempted arson in the third degree.

This charge grew out of the Puposky raid of June in 1911, when Mike Davis and Martin Behan were trapped in the Postoffice Building while in the act of attempting to rob and burn the building, according to evidence produced by the State. Testimony also went to show that Dr. Dumas had planned this expedition and that he had been a confederate of some of the country's most daring and desperate criminals.

Dr. Dumas left here under the personal guard of Sheriff A. B. Hazen, to enter the prison at Stillwater to begin the daily routine of a convict. The maximum penalty is three and one-half years.

Attends Patients to Last.

Dr. Dumas spent Tuesday forenoon attending to his patients in Cass Lake, prescribing for eight persons. He closed up his office at noon and came to Bemidji. He previously had sent his wife and infant son to relatives.

Assistant Attorney General Alex James, Deputy Fire Marshall Sam Fullerton and Attorneys Thayer C. Bailey and E. E. McDonald, both of this city, who acted as special prosecuting attorneys, were in the court room and only Attorney McDonald spoke for the State, and than only brieby making formal demand that sentence be passed.

"Let the prisoner stand forward," ordered Judge McClenahan, and Dr. Dumas, smooth shaven and well groomed, quickly arose from his seat beside his attorney and faced the court. He told the Judge that he was born April 4, 1879; that he had lived in Minnesota all his life except the time spent in Chicago graduating from the Medical Department of the University of Illinois; that he had lived 26 years in the city of Minneapolis, had practiced medicine there and that for a year was house physician of the Minneapolis City Hospital.

Attorney Speaks for Him.

Dr. Dumas made no other statement and Judge McClenahan inquired if he had anything to say. Instead, Mr. Spear, as his attorney, addressed the Court and reviewed at some length the proceedings which were about to terminate with the imposition of sentence. Mr. Spear said that the expense of the case had proved a severe financial strain not only to Dr. Dumas, whose means were exhausted, but also to his father, a Minneapolis business man who had come to his assistance, and that when it appeared that the motion for a new trial would have to be based upon technical ground and that heavy expenses would accrue in the event of an appeal, Dr. Dumas himself determined that he would not allow the case to proceed further; that the defendant had been unwilling to place additional burden upon his father and had made up his mind that it would be wiser to end the uncertainty and suspense which would attend upon further proceedings.

This explanation, the attorney said, was made to advise the Court of the good faith of the defendant in obtaining a stay in order that the motion for a new trial might be made.

C. W. Berlin, former land commissioner of the Southern Pacific, testifying in the Southern Pacific land foreclosure hearing at Portland, Ore., blamed the Booth-Kelly Lumber company, for the Harriman orer of 1903 withdrawing 2,300,000 acres of the Oregon and California grant lands from entry or sale.

The Panama-Pacific international exposition, which will be held in San Francisco in 1915 to celebrate the completion of the Panama canal, will be ready on time. This was the positive assertion of its president, Charles C. Moore. After months spent in preliminaries the perfected plan has been adopted by the directors, and orders have been given to go ahead immediately.

Belmore Brown, renowned for his ascents of Mount McKinley with Prof. Herschel Parker, underwent a dangerous operation Sunday at Tacoma to save the life of a young woman who was virtually a stranger to him. The explorer heard Miss Ethel Madden, a friend of one of his neighbors, was dying of anemia. He volunteered to undergo an operation for transfusion of blood from his veins to that of the patient. The operation occupied twelve hours and has been pronounced successful.

SALE HELD VALID.

Wife No. 1 Shown to Have Forfeited Rights.

Cloquet.—The case of O. E. Kinsley, administrator of the estate of Antoine Poupore and Adeline Poupore against Capitola Allen of Minneapolis, has been decided by Judge Cant of Duluth in favor of Mrs. Allen. Mrs. Allen is the wife of Dr. H. B. Allen, who died in Cloquet several years ago. In recent years she has lived in Minneapolis, but owns property in Cloquet.

The case had been tried twice before. It grew out of the fact that in 1906 Poupore sold to Mrs. Allen a residence in Cloquet, the warranty deed being signed by Poupore and his wife. It developed at Poupore's death that the woman who signed the deed had never been his legal wife, wife No. 1 appearing from New York state and demanding her share of the property. Poupore had married the first wife in 1854, and several children were born to them. About 1889 he abandoned his family and came west with another woman, and a second family grew up.

Life ran smoothly for Poupore except for a short time in 1904, when Mrs. Poupore in the east began to make trouble. He then paid her $500 to keep out of his affairs and had it not been for that transaction the case would undoubtedly been decided in her favor, but the court declared she forfeited her rights as a wife when she accepted money to keep silent.

AGAIN NAVIGATED.

Steamer Threads Wisconsin Stream to Durand.

Winona.—The steamer Red Wing, packet running between St. Paul and Wabasha, in charge of Captain W. H. Newcomb, navigated the Chippewa river as far as Durand the other day. Sunday the boat took an excursion out of Durand down the Chippewa and Mississippi rivers. The trip on the Chippewa is the first in 26 years by a regular steamboat, according to local river men.

There is said to be a mystery about the trip to the Red Wing. Some weeks ago the Burlington Railway Company took its watchman off the bridge at Durand, closing it up permanently. Soon afterward the city offered a bonus to any steamer that would run up to Durand above this bridge.

It is said Captain Newcomb made an inquiry of the government as to the authority of the railroad to close the bridge over the stream, which is theoretically navigable. Assured that there was no authority for the action, the captain called upon the company to open the bridge and announced his unusual excursion. The plan of the city to keep the bridge open worked out admirably. The excursion was a gala event, with John Gilmore, Durand's postmaster, acting as pilot.

Old Cannon Carriage Dug Up.

Winona.—Workmen excavating for a downtown store building unearthed a massive cannon carriage. At one time it was the property of John Nichlin, a veteran of the First Minnesota battery in the civil war. According to Mr. Nichlin, the gun was captured at the battle of Cheraw, March 23, 1865, from the rebel forces. The gun has had a history locally. In a premature explosion at a republican celebration in 1888 Laurits Oleson was seriously injured. A few years later the gun was loaned to Wabasha people and burst in an explosion.

Board and Parents Clash.

Little Falls.—The crowded condition of the schools and the leasing of three rooms in the downtown district for school purposes, has caused much trouble between the board of education and parents of children. The parents say too much room has been given in the regular ward buildings for manual training and agriculture, to the detriment of other studies and they threaten to get out an injunction should the board insist on continuing school sessions in the business district. A public meeting has been called in an attempt to adjust matters.

Quarantine a Train.

Rochester. — The startling discovery of a case of smallpox on the southbound Great Western passenger on Thursday night resulted in strict quarantine regulations being enforced on the car at Zumbrota and the retaining of the car in this city. Dr. Harry Wood, Rochester's new health officer, who happened to be on the train here, was responsible for enforcing the necessary regulations to prevent the exposure of persons returning from the state fair.

Only Two Warmer.

Minneapolis. — Only two days recorded at the local weather bureau during the summer of 1912 registered a higher temperature than Wednesday. The thermometer showed a temperature of 92 degrees at 3 o'clock.

STORM DAMAGE $100,000.

Buildings Wrecked and City is Threatened By Fire.

International Falls. — A very terrific cyclone and electrical storm did damage in this vicinity estimated at $100,000. The plate glass windows in many of the stores were blown in.

The large pulp wood conveyor at the paper mill was blown out and destroyed; the top of an immense water tank was ripped off and carried a block. The refuse conveyor of the International Falls Lumber company planing mill was destroyed and the top of the grandstand at the baseball park was torn off and the fences leveled. No lives were lost nor was anyone injured.

Lightning struck the office of the Fort Francis Times at Fort Francis and set fire to the building, destroying it together with all its contents. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

27 ARE ARRESTED.

Twin City Police Take Rioters Into Custody.

Minneapolis. — At least twenty-seven persons were jailed in the Twin cities Saturday night following battles with the police, who sought to disperse two crowds of several thousand each which were blocking the streets. The Minneapolis police arrested nineteen persons, while the St. Paul police captured eight. The action of the Minneapolis police prevented what might have been a riot such as never had been witnessed before when several thousands gathered on Bridge Square gave utterance to inflammatory doctrines, shouted, screamed, cheered and threatened, blocked the streets and sidewalks and defied the police to do their worst. The nineteen persons arrested were charged with failure to obey the commands of the police to move.

WHEAT GRADES WELL.

First Trainload of the 1912 Crop Arrives at Duluth.

Duluth. — The first trainload of new grain to reach Duluth this season arrived over the Northern Pacific. It consisted of fifty cars with an average of 1,500 bushels of wheat to the car. The opening of the season means a rush of business for lake carriers. The entire load consisted of northern No. 1 hard wheat, from western Minnesota and North Dakota points.

Has Market Day.

Sauk Rapids.—Sauk Rapids was filled Wednesday with people from all parts of neighboring counties. The attraction was a big market day and exhibit of the agricultural products of Benton county. Only a few weeks ago was the interest aroused in sending an exhibit to the state fair. Hustlers took hold of the idea, the Sauk Rapids business men contributed money, prizes were offered and the growers responded.

St. Paul to Get New Depot.

St. Paul.—Very definite announcement that St. Paul would have a new union depot has been made by James J. Hill, following a conference of presidents and vice presidents of seven different roads running into St. Paul. The cost is estimated at between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000.

Dog Bite Fatal to Boy.

Duluth.—Little Thomas Hedican, aged seven years, son of Patrick Hedican, a special officer for the Oliver Iron Mining company in the Higgins mine, near Virginia, died at his home from hydrophobia. The boy was bitten by an unknown dog July 28.

One Killed; One Injured.

Minneapolis. — Christian L. Ilstrup, candidate for country surveyor, had a close call to death, and an employe, James Conroy, was instantly killed when they were struck by in-bound passenger train No. 10 on the crossing of the Northern Pacific tracks at Twenty-third avenue north.

Railroad Offers Compromise.

Duluth. — The Great Northern Railway company has offered to compromise with its striking employes at the Allouez bay ore docks. The strikers demand an advance of 25 cents a day and the company has offered them 20 cents.

Two Struck By Train.

St. Cloud. — Thomas Lepske, aged twenty-eight, was killed instantly and Martin Yarnoct, aged 50, was fatally injured at Holdingford when a freight train struck them.

Increases Hundreds of Thousands.

Minneapolis.—A large increase in value of the corn crop of the northwest estimated at hundred of thousands of dollars will result, it is believed, from the hot weather of the last three or four days. Reports from the great farming centers of Minnesota and the Dakotas state the high temperatures have come at a most desirable time and the quality of the corn may be greatly improved. [illegible]

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Caledonia.—Houston county has organized a Wilson club of nearly three hundred members. Every voting precinct in the county has elected a vice president.

Litchfield.—Three thousand people attended the monthly market day held here. The main attraction was aeroplane flights by Fred Barlow in a Curtis biplane.

Pipestone.—A graded school is to be established at Florence, north of here. Contractors are erecting a building which will cost in the neighborhood of $5,000.

Hallock.—John Lindell, of Bronson, was badly injured when his arm was caught in the flywheel of a threshing engine. He sustained a compound fracture and a severe bruise on the face.

Mankato.—The date for the opening of the new Bethany Ladies' college, the name of the Lutheran seminary that is now nearing completion in this city, has been set for Sept. 25. The dedicatory ceremonies will not be held until spring.

Pipestone.—Thomas Buseman of Steen has a bullet wound in his side as a result of the accidental discharge of his rifle while hunting. The trigger caught in weeds and the bullet passed into his side. It is believed he will recover.

Caledonia.—E. R. Sprague has twenty acres devoted to alfalfa, the first that has been grown in this county. The forage promises an excellent yield. Ernest Kroeger has set out an acre of ginseng. It will require seven years to insure a good yield.

Fergus Falls.—The question whether an Indian has a right to hunt and fish, regardless of the state game laws, is about to be tested by John W. Carl in the courts of this county, and the case will eventually go to the supreme court of the state and possibly of the United States.

St. Paul. — Martin F. Falk, of Duluth, the Progressive candidate for governor, was arrested on the fair grounds for distributing campaign literature. It is a rule of the superintendent of privileges that none but those who have headquarters on the grounds are privileged to distribute literature.

Fergus Falls.—A telegram from Woodland, Cal., states that Theodore Orr was killed in an automobile accident there. Particulars of the accident are not given. Orr formerly was engaged in the bicycle business in this city and recently entered the automobile business in California. His mother lives here.

Little Falls.—This city has a coal dealer who has for years been giving overweight on all fuel bought of him. A deputy states weight and measure inspector is here making an inspection of all scales. When the sheds of W. H. Ryan were reached, the inspector found that the scales had been dealing out sixty pounds extra coal on every 1,000 pounds.

Fergus Falls.—The Otter Tail county commission has decided to call for bids for the construction of a county tuberculosis sanatorium at once. The bids will be opened Sept. 16, and the successful bidder will be expected to have the building completed this year. The cost of the first building is estimated at $10,000. It will be on the shore of Otter Tail lake.

Duluth. — Acting upon the suggestion of Attorney General Wickersham, a federal suit was filed here against the Minnesota & International railroad, charging double violation of the national hours of service law. It is charged that Engineer F. B. Bispham, on Jan. 18, 1912, was compelled to work 20½ hours. The second violation is in the fact that the railroad company failed to report the incident.

Minneapolis. — In one of the most spectacular races for first place in county exhibits in the southern section ever known at the state fair, Houston county was adjudged a winner over Olmsted county by a margin of only 16 points, the judges having worked all night to make the placing. Last year Olmsted won by a small margin over Houston. In the central section Douglas county scored first place, with Morrison and Stevens following close behind. Roseau is a winner in the northern section.

Winona.—A negress' hug cost Oscar Katchman, a farm laborer, 60 white man's dollars in this city, according to the story told by the man to the police here. Watchman says he has been working near Waseca, saved $60 and is on his way to Milwaukee. When he arrived here he was compelled to transfer from one depot to another and while walking across the city late at night was accosted by a negro woman. Before he realized his predicament, he says, the woman threw her arms about him. When he arrived there he was about to buy a ticket when he discovered his pocketbook, carried in the rear pocket of his trousers, was gone.

Cokato.—In response to a call issued to the progressives of Wright county, about 150 supporters of the movement met here, the western part of the county being heavily represented, with scattering delegates from the eastern part. A full state ticket, headed by W. E. Lee, was indorsed.

West No Place for Consumption.

Physicians in all of the eastern states will be asked by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis to stop sending consumptives in the last stages of tuberculosis and without sufficient funds to the southwestern part of the United States in search of health. While it is impossible to tell accurately how many consumptives there are at present living in the states of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona, southern California, and western Texas, it is probable that no less than ten per cent of the 6,000,000 people in this territory have tuberculosis themselves, or have come to the west because some member of their family have had it. Every year, the health authorities estimate, not less than 10,000 consumptives, hopelessly diseased, come west to die. For these cases, the climate of this section of the country can do nothing, and they are compelled to die in strange surroundings and thousands of miles from home and friends. The National Association points out further that from 50 to 60 per cent of these advanced cases are too poor to provide the proper necessaries of life, and they are either starved to death, or compelled to accept the meager charity which this part of the country affords.

To Improve the Hudson.

Secretary of War Stimson has transmitted to congress the report of Colonel Black, engineer officers in charge of the New York harbor, containing a recommendation that $1,570,000 be spent during the next five years in improving the Hudson river to meet the requirements of the big ocean steamships.

A FOOD CONVERT

Good Food the True Road to Health.

The pernicious habit some persons still have of relying on nauseous drugs to relieve stomach trouble keeps up the patent medicine business and helps keep up the army of dyspeptics.

Indigestion—dyspepsia — is caused by what is put into the stomach in the way of improper food, the kind that so taxes the strength of the digestive organs they are actually crippled.

When this state is reached, to resort to tonics is like whipping a tired horse with a big load. Every additional effort he makes under the lash diminishes his power to move the load.

Try helping the stomach by leaving off heavy, greasy, indigestible food and take on Grape-Nuts—light, easily digested, full of strength for nerves and brain, in every grain of it. There's no waste of time nor energy when Grape-Nuts is the food.

"I am an enthusiastic user of Grape-Nuts and consider it an ideal food," writes a Maine man.

"I had nervous dyspepsia and was all run down and my food seemed to do me but little good. From reading an advertisement I tried Grape-Nuts food, and after a few weeks' steady use of it, felt greatly improved.

"Am much stronger, not nervous now and can do more work without feeling so tired, and am better every way.

"I relish Grape-Nuts best with cream and use four heaping teaspoonfuls as the cereal part of a meal. I am sure there are thousands of persons with stomach trouble who would be benefited by using Grape-Nuts. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. [illegible]

Both republicans and democrats are trying to look joyful over the results of the election in Maine; the republicans over having obtained a majority at all, and the democrats over the great gains they claim. There was no third party ticket.

George A. Ralph, state drainage engineer, has resigned to take effect Jan. 1. His resignation is dated then in order that he may finish several reports for the next legislature. Offers of other positions and continued attacks by the legislature and others are the reasons assigned for his resignation.

The citizen standing in the doorway of his home—contented on his threshold, his family gathered about his hearthstone, while the evening of a well spent day closes in scenes and sounds that are dearest—he shall save the republic when the drum tap is futile and the barracks are exhausted.—Henry W. Grady.

One of the most significant results of the past week politically is the exhibition of progressive sentiment in Ohio, made in connection with the vote on constitutional amendments. The initiative and referendum are devices in government which have received Mr. Taft's very hearty disapproval, and yet the people of Ohio have declared for them.

The democratic national committee is said to be hampered for lack of funds to prosecute the campaign. But that should cause them no worry. At the present status of the campaign republicans and bullmoosers appear to be able to raise all the funds necessary to accomplish their own mutual destruction and leave the democrats in possession of the field. This ought to satisfy the democrats.— Warren Sheaf.

Since the power to fix rates has been taken away from the state railway and warehouse commission and their power otherwise so circumscribed that it amounts to almost nil, the commission has become more of an ornament than anything else. It can act only in an advisory capacity in the adjustment of differences between the shippers and the railways and cannot enforce any decrees which the railways may oppose. There is certainly no justice in making poor people pay fare at three cents a mile while the rich may ride at two cents a mile, therefore if the commission had any power and gumption it would seem that it should forthwith remedy this injustice—because a glaring injustice it is.—Warren Sheaf.

"Jag Farm" to be Opened

According to official announcements the farm for inebriates at Willmar, established by the state, will be open for reception of patients Nov. 12. The board of control announces that already a number of applications for admission are on the file, among them several personal appeals for admission. It is expected that very soon after the farm has been opened there will be about one hundred patients enrolled. Under the law a wife may have her husband sent to the "jag farm" if she shows he is tippling more than he ought to and a man may have his neighbor committed upon proper showing. A toper may have himself committed provided he signs a voluntary commitment and undertakes to pay a certain sum for his keep.

BACK TO THE TOWN

COUNTRY LIFE PALLED ON THE SUBURBANITE.

Real Facts of the Case Somewhat Different from the Explanation He Made to His City Friend.

The year around the city resident and the summer suburbanite were carrying on a conversation over their hurried noonday lunch.

"Must be mighty all fired crimpy around the edges out in the country these days," suggested the city man. "Don't believe I'd like living out in the country these days without steam heat and things. You'll be hiking into town pretty quick now, I s'pose."

"O, not for awhile yet," returned the summer suburbanite. "This is really the finest time of the year to be in the country. It is a trifle crisp when you get out of bed in the morning, of course, but then it beats the city at that. Some might exchange the good country air for a few city comforts, but not me. A little cold isn't going to hurt me."

This was a day or two ago. The following morning when the summer suburbanite crawled out from under the covers the thermometer was down around 40.

"Holy jumpin' James M. Jehosaphat, but it's cold in this barracks!" exclaimed the S. S. to his wife. "Talk about your polar expeditions and their hardships. They haven't got much on this! What are we staying out in a place like this for, anyhow? Never saw such a bleak habitation as this, if you'd call it a habitation, in all my troublous life. What's your idea in sticking to a place like this for when we've got a house there in town with a furnace and hot water and bath tub and all such things? That's what I'd like to know! I surely would.

"If I wanted to freeze to death I could do it right in town any good winter day. I wouldn't need to come clear out here to the country to do it. Holy mackerel but that water's cold! Don't even dare wash your face in this Greenlandish place! And I'm serving notice on you right at this juncture that we're going into town to-day, and we're going to stay there until next summer. Us for town. In cold weather a man's supposed to live in town where they've got radiators and such like. That's what towns are for."

Then the other day the suburbanite and his friend met again at lunch.

"So you've moved back to town, have you?" spoke up the year-around city man, "Thought you'd get enough of that country business in this sort of weather."

"O, yes, I moved in," owned up the late suburbanite. "It was fine out there, but my wife just naturally wouldn't stand for it. Said she couldn't keep warm. And you know how useless it is to argue with a woman. I had to come in. Hated like Sam Hill to do it, though."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Clever Work of Beavers.

A peculiar fact was discovered at the reservoir at Saddleback pond recently at Rangeley, when beavers' work in dam construction was found to interfere with the water supply from Saddleback stream. These busy engineers had constructed a tight dam, which had retained considerable of the supply of the mountain reservoir, and workmen each day tore out their work, only to find it rebuilt on the next visit. Good-sized tree sections had been hauled in and placed in the dam by the beavers. After several destructions of the beavers' dams there was again found to be a stoppage in the supply of water through the main pipes. The dam had not been rebuilt, but on close investigation it was found that those cunning engineers, in revenge, apparently, had built a dense screen across the strainer, which had prevented the flow of water through the main pipe.—Kennebec Journal.

Australia's Wild Oysters.

Oysters are sometimes regarded as dangerous but they are not usually considered savage. A Queensland judge, however, has decided that they are wild beasts. Before a royal commission on the pearling industry, which has been sitting at Brisbane, a witness stated that eight years ago he had laid 100,000 shells in the neighborhood of Friday island. The Japanese stole the shells, and the district court judge held that as pearl shell oysters were wild animals there was no penalty for stealing them.

WHALE CARRIED OFF THE LINE.

The Monster Also Made Away with a Good Harpoon.

Up among the forn bergs of the Arctic a monster whale is cruising about with a harpoon imbedded in his thick back and something less than half a mile of stout hempen rope trailing after him.

The crew of the steam whaler Thrasher, which returned Sunday night from an eight months' cruise in the icy north, declare that "Mister Whale got all that was coming to him."

"He got away from us," muttered the mate, spitting viciously into the scuppers, "but we will get him next season. It was good rope we used, and he'll get tangled up on something so we will be one whale to the good when we get back there.

"He was a bad one, though. You see Silva, the boat steerer, slung the hook into him when we were in open water between two big bergs. Off he goes with the stick in his back, and the rope went out like a man tumbling from the loft. He ducked and dived until one tub of rope was gone, and he did the same with another. He was making for the nearest floe and when he reached it he spit a lot of water into the air and took a deep dive. The edge of the ice cut the rope like a knife and he was off for good, with 2,000 feet of the Thrasher's line and a good harpoon with him."—San Fran-

Steenerson's Announcement

In announcing my candidacy for reelection as representive in congress I desire first of all to thank the people of the district for the honor bestowed upon me in the past and to assure them that, if it shall please them to continue me in their service, I shall in the future, as I have in the past, put forth every effort to serve them faithfully to the best of my ability.

I am a republican—a progressive republican—and have supported all progressive legislation for the more complete government regulation and control of railroads and interstate commerce, the policy of conservation of water powers and other natural resources in the interest of the people, and the development of unsettled lands on liberal terms to actual settlers.

While I voted against the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and Canadian reciprocity because, in my judgement, they were against the best interests of my constituents, I am a protectionist and favor a tariff high enough to preserve the home market to American industries, but not so high as to make it a shield for exorbitant prices.

I voted for the amendments to the constitution recently passed by congress providing for election of senators by the people, and an income tax, which now await ratification by the states.

I aided in the elimination of railroad and ship subsides from postal expenditures, and the improvement and extension of postal service, including parcel post and rural free delivery, and am trying to get improved laws to prevent using the mails to promote fraudulent schemes.

I favor strict government regulation of interstate comerce, as well as transportation; supervision of corporations on capitalization, and, if necessary, even limitation of prices; and workmens' compensation for the benefit of victims of industrial accidents, and all legislation in favor of temperance and morality.

Liberal pensions in their declining years is due from a grateful nation to its gallant defenders, the veterans of the civil war, as a matter of right and justice. While I believe in due military preparation on the part of the leading civilized powers of the world, I believe the time has come when there should be renewed efforts to substitute international arbitration for war in the settlement of disputes among nations, and to limit armaments, thus saving immense sums for more useful purposes in the service of humanity.

Asbestos Shingles

Asbestos shingles are now being manufactured in this country with success, and the trade has grown enormously. The new products are of the lightest weight and fireproof up to a temperature of two thousand and more degrees. They are proof against acids and weather and are said to last as long as a concrete building will. Concrete shingles are no greater improvement over old-fashioned ones than golden-grain belt beers are an improvement over old-fashioned beer. Alex Thompson, Crookston, agent.

TO SEND COIN BY U. S. MAIL.

Express Companies Rudely Jarred by Discovery of New Clause.

Washington.—The treasury officials have recently discovered a highly interesting fact in regard to the appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the government, which escaped general attention at the time it was enacted.

It pertains to the shipment of fractional silver coin from the several subtreasuries of the United States to banks in various parts of the country.

It now appears that in the rush attending the passage of the sundry civil bill, James Wesley Gaines of Tennessee caused to be inserted in the measure a provision that one-half of the $60,000 appropriation for the transportation of coin shall be expended for registered mail. Heretofore shipments of currency have uniformly been made by express, and the express companies have been obliged to make good any loss by theft or other accident in transportation.

The express companies are greatly concerned over the new order of things, especially as Mr. Daskam, chief of the bureau of public moneys in the treasury department, has ruled that the law means that $30,000 should be expended by registered mail before any part of the appropriation is expended for express charges. It is believed at the treasury department that as the charges for registering a package is only eight cents, $30,000 will be sufficient to pay the entire apparent cost of transporting coins under this system for a year, and the express companies will therefore get none of the business.

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county, that I am a candidate for the office of Register of Deeds of Pennington county and respectfully solicit your votes and support.

GEO W. ELDER.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by N. J. Anderson.)

Register of Deeds

I am a candidate for the office of register of deeds of Pennington county and solicit the support of the voters at the republican primaries to be held September 17, 1912.

N. J. ANDERSON.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by J. T. Gullingsrud.)

For County Treasurer

I hereby wish to announce my candidacy for the office of county treasurer at the republican primaries to be held Sept. 17, 1912, and earnestly solicit the support of the voters of Pennington county.

JOHN T. GULLINGSRUD.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by W. J. LaBree.)

Sheriff

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I am a candidate for the office of sheriff, and respectfully solicit your vote and support at the primaries September 17, 1912.

Yours very truly,
W. J. LABREE.
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by J. M. Bishop.)

For County Attorney

I am a candidate for county attorney for Pennington county on the republican ticket on the first primaries to be held in the county. I have never held a county office although I have been in the practice of law for twenty-two years, but would consider it an honor to be the first nominee of the party for county attorney in the county. I will be delighted to receive your vote and support.

J. M. BISHOP.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by A. H. Fasel.)

County Auditor

Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912

I wish hereby to announce to the voters of Pennington county, that I am a candidate for the the republican nomination for the office of county auditor, at the September 17, 1912, primaries. Since my appointment to this office, at the time of the organization of Pennington county, I have given the office my whole time and my very best efforts. Should I be favored with the nomination and election, I believe with the experience gained, I will be still better prepared to serve you the coming term.

If our services have met with your approval I earnestly solicit your consideration and support.

Very truly yours,
A. H. FASEL.

Clerk of Court

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I will be a candidate for the republican nomination for clerk of the district court for Pennington county, subject to the decision of the voters at the republican primery, September 17, 1912.

I have occupied the position since the organization of Pennington county and have tried to the best of my ability to be strictly impartial and as efficient as my ability would allow. I will be pleased to have the votes and support of all citizens who believe that I have filled the position in an honest and efficient manner.

If nominated and elected I hereby promise to give the office my personal attention and my best efforts to honestly administer the affairs of the office in a strictly impartial and efficient manner.

HARRY E. IVES.
Thief River Falls, Minn., July 15, 1912.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Andrew Trovaten.)

For County Treasurer

I wish to announce that I am a candidate for county treasurer, subject to the ratification of the republican voters at the primaries, September 17, 1912. Being that political parties have always regarded it as important to have their members elected to all offices, it must be for aid in promoting party politics, for so far as the work in the county offices is concerned, it can make no difference whatever, what the officer's political affiliations are, so the idea must be that he is expected to talk and work, and use the advantage of his public position, in aiding the party to which he belongs. I believe that it is of the utmost importance to have the republican party control at least one branch of congress, in order to maintain the average of prices. While the price-level does not prove that times are good, theoretically, yet we know that with the enormous debt of the country, it will be harder to pay it with low prices than with high, steady prices. I believe that because one cannot support the whole republican ticket, it is no reason at all to quit supporting candidates for congress and the legislature, which is by far more important than the office of president, so far as party politics is concerned. These are my ideas, and I shall use my influence help along on those lines, no matter whether I am nominated or not.

Sincerely for the success of the party,
ANDREW TROVATEN.
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by C. H. Martz)

County Surveyor

I wish to announce to the voters of Pennington county that I am a candidate for the republican nomination for the office of county surveyor at the primaries September 17, 1912.

Your support will be appreciated.

C. H. MARTZ.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by Earnest L. Quist.)

Register of Deeds

I hereby announce my candidacy for reelection to the office of register of deeds, and respectfully solicit your support. Should I be nominated and elected I shall consider it an endorsement of past favors.

Very sincerely yours,
EARNEST L. QUIST.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by Wilhelm Michelet.)

Judge of Probate

I hereby announce that I am a nonpartisan candidate for re-election to the office of judge of probate in and for Pennington county, Minnesota. I respectfully solicit your vote and support at the primary election to be held on Tuesday Sept. 17, 1912.

WILHELM MICHELET,
Judge of Probate,
Thief River Falls, Minn.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by E. A. Mostue.)

County Superintendent

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election for the office of superintendent of schools for Pennington county subject to the ratification of the voters at the primary to be held Tuesday, Sept, 17, 1912.

Your vote and support are respectfully solicited.

E. A. MOSTUE.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00, paid by George L. Netteland.)

County Superintendent

St. Hilaire, Minn., August 5, 1912.

I wish hereby to announce to readers of the Spectator that I am a candidate for superintendent of schools of Pennington county, and hope you will give me your votes and support next fall.

I am not running on any particular party ticket as the new primary law requires that all candidates for superintendent of schools run on a non-partisan ballot, on their merits.

Yours very truly,
GEORGE L. NETTELAND.

(Paid advertisement, $5.00 paid by O. F. Post.)

Clerk of Court

According to the present laws, that we as a citizen are sworn to abide by, it is necessary that we file application for candidacy for the office of clerk of court, and publish notice of our desire.

I am perfectly willing to abide by the decision of my friends and aquaintances as to my qualifications to clerically and economically fulfill the duties of this office.

I have been a citizen of this county for twenty-nine years. I will most surely appreciate any favors that the voters of Pennington county feel disposed to confer upon myself at the primary election to be held September 17, 1912.

Yours truly,
O. F. POST.

The Useful Hen.

"Country constables who make a living arresting speeding automobiles wouldn't have half so much trouble stopping the scorchers if they used a little ingenuity," says one of the offenders. "Chains across the road and moving vans blocking the highway are all right to accomplish the purpose, but they're cumbersome. My idea for causing a prompt slow-up is to scatter a lot of grain in a road and turn a lot of hens loose. They would block the road all right, and if there's one thing that will make a chauffeur slow up it's a hen. Dogs are bad enough, but a hen always runs the wrong way, and if the machine is going at any speed usually ends up under the wheels. Hitting a hen will sometimes throw the front wheels out of line and cause the car to swerve, so drivers almost invariably slow up and give poultry a chance to get out of the way. A hen speed trap is a great idea, to my way of thinking, and, of course, if one of the birds were killed, the cost could easily be added to the driver's fine."

America's Greatest Weekly
THE
TOLEDO BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO
The Best Known Newspaper in the United States
Circulation 240,090
Popular in Every State
No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.
The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making The Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

LOMBARD PIANOS
The Pianos With The Sweetest Tone

Praised by Press and Pulpit

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Staker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Perviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proved to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

THESE SIX LETTERS

From New England Women

Prove that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Does Restore the Health of Ailing Women.

Boston, Mass.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from hemorrhages (sometimes lasting for weeks), and could get nothing to check them. I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound (tablet form) on Tuesday, and the following Saturday morning the hemorrhages stopped. I have taken them regularly ever since and am steadily gaining.

"I certainly think that every one who is troubled as I was should give your Compound Tablets a faithful trial, and they will find relief."—Mrs. George Juby, 803 Fifth Street, South Boston, Mass.

Letter from Mrs. Julia King, Phœnix, R.I.

Phœnix, R.I.—"I worked steady in the mill from the time I was 13 years old until I had been married a year, and I think that caused my bad feelings. I had soreness in my side near my left hip that went around to my back, and sometimes I would have to lie in bed for two or three days. I was not able to do my housework.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me wonderfully in every way. You may use my letter for the good of others. I am only too glad to do anything within my power to recommend your medicine."—Mrs. Julia King, Box 283, Phœnix, R.I.

Letter from Mrs. Etta Donovan, Willimantic, Conn.

Willimantic, Conn.—"For five years I suffered untold agony from female troubles causing backache, irregularities, dizziness, and nervous prostration. It was impossible for me to walk up stairs without stopping on the way. I was all run down in every way.

"I tried three doctors and each told me something different. I received no benefit from any of them but seemed to suffer more. The last doctor said it was no use for me to take anything as nothing would restore me to health again. So I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to see what it would do, and by taking seven bottles of the Compound and other treatment you advised, I am restored to my natural health."—Mrs. Etta Donovan, 763 Main Street, Willimantic, Conn.

Letter from Mrs. Winfield Dana, Augusta, Me.

Augusta, Me.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has cured the backache, headache, and the bad pain I had in my right side, and I am perfectly well."—Mrs. Winfield Dana, R.F.D. No. 2, Augusta, Me.

Letter from Mrs. J. A. Thompson, Newport, Vt.

Newport, Vt.—"I thank you for the great benefit Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done me. I took eight bottles and it did wonders for me, as I was a nervous wreck when I began taking it. I shall always speak a good word for it to my friends."—Mrs. John A. Thompson, Box 3, Newport Center, Vermont.

Letter from Miss Grace Dodds, Bethlehem, N.H.

Bethlehem, N.H.—"By working very hard, sweeping carpets, washing, ironing, lifting heavy baskets of clothes, etc., I got all run down. I was sick in bed every month.

"This last Spring my mother got Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for me, and already I feel like another girl. I am regular and do not have the pains that I did, and do not have to go to bed. I will tell all my friends what the Compound is doing for me."—Miss Gracie B. Dodds, Box 133, Bethlehem, N.H.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No one sick with woman's ailments does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

ANGRY FISH BITE ANGLER

Brooklyn Man, the Sufferer, Sends Head to Pasteur Institute, Fearing Rabies.

Whether a fish can have hydrophobia is a question that Fred Henry of Hancock street, Brooklyn, would like to have settled, and for that reason he has sent to the Pasteur institute in New York the head of a pickerel that bit him at Swartswood lake recently, says a Newton (N. J.) correspondent of the New York Press. Henry was fishing in a boat that was a trifle leaky and he took off his shoes and socks. His first catch was a pickerel weighing three pounds. When he yanked the fish it flopped around in the bottom of the boat in a lively fashion.

As Henry was baiting up again he felt a sharp pain in one of his feet, and, looking down, saw that the pickerel had made a jump and fastened its teeth in his toe. He tried to kick the fish away, but the pickerel held on and Henry had to use the handle of his landing net to pry open the fish's jaws before he got free of it. The toe started to swell where the teeth had punctured it, and Henry became worried. He says he thinks it possible that the pickerel may have had hydrophobia and, as a precautionary measure, he sent the head to the Pasteur institute.

Unfailing Stimulant.

Men have tried many things, but still they ask for stimulant—the stimulant in use but requires the use of more. Men try to drown the floating dead of their own souls in the wine cup, but the corpses will rise. We see their faces in the bubbles. The intoxication of drink sets the world whirling again, and the pulses playing music, and the thoughts galloping, but the fast clock runs down sooner, and the unnatural stimulation only leaves the house it fills with revelry—more silent, more sad, more deserted, more dead. There is only one stimulant that never fails, and yet never intoxicates—Duty. Duty puts a blue sky over every man—up in his heart maybe—into which the skylark, happiness, always goes singing.—George D. Pentice.

The Love in Fiction and Life.

A periodical devoted to the drama pleads for plays based on some emotion other than love. The difficulty in producing such plays is that every play must have a hero, and in making a hero, the playwright, as well as his audience, almost inevitably adopts the view expressed 2,000 years ago by a scribbler of the dead walls of Pompeii: "He who has never loved a woman is not a gentleman."

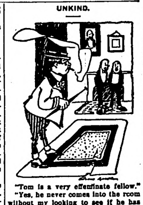
Best Books for Children.

Eugene Field, asked for the best ten books for young people under sixteen years of age, is said to have given this list: "Pilgrim's Progress," "Robinson Crusoe," Anderson's Fairy Tales, Grimm's Fairy Tales, "Scottish Chiefs," "Black Beauty," "The Arabian Nights," "Swiss Family Robinson," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," "Tom Brown's School Days," for boys, or for girls, "Little Women."

More Grazing Ground Required.

It is computed that it takes twelve acres of land to graze one head of cattle on Texas land.

UNKIND.



"Tom is a very effeminate fellow."

"Yes, he never comes into the room without my looking to see if he has feathers on his hat."

Motor Cars and Mosquitoes.

Mosquitoes, flies and gnats of every description are said to be more numerous in Paris this year than ever before. It has become a veritable invasion. The explanation usually given is that the swallows are much fewer this summer, and also that the ubiquitous sparrow is notably on the decrease. Nobody can find a reason for the desertion of the swallows, but the reason of the scarcity of sparrows is not far to seek. The enemy is mechanical traction, which is supplanting the use of the horse. Before long, horses will practically have disappeared in Paris, and when their nosebags go there will disappear one of the principl staples of food for the Paris "pierrot," who is taking wing for the country in search of the grains of oats and barley once so plentiful on the boulevard and avenues.

German Farmer Good Business Man.

Under a seemingly generous offer of hospitality, a North German farmer has managed to include a good stroke of business for himself. In a Hanover paper recently appeared an advertisement that from fifteen to twenty women and girls (not under twelve years of age) who needed recuperation could have free board and lodging on a country estate. But in exchange they would be required to pick pease from eight to ten hours. Industrious pickers might also be paid cash for their labor.

A Booklet for Investors.

The Harris Trust and Savings Bank, Harris Trust Building, Chicago, has issued a booklet entitled "Why Bonds Are Safe Investments," intended for the use of persons planning to invest in bonds for the first time. Its aim is to explain in simple terms the purposes and uses of various classes of bonds, and to indicate the value of bonds as safe investments for individuals as well as institutions. Copies may be had free on application.

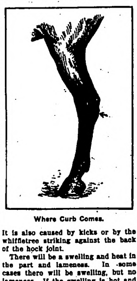
REMEDIES FOR CURB DISEASE

Too Much Stress Placed on Ligament Situated on Back Part of Hock Joint Is Cause.

(By DR. D. M. M'INTOSH, Illinois Experiment Station.)

Anything that puts too much stress on the ligament situated on the back part of the hock joint, such as holding back heavy loads, going downhill or hind legs slipping too far under the horse's body, may cause curb disease.



Where Curb Comes.

It is also caused by kicks or by the whiffletree striking against the back of the hock joint.

There will be a swelling and heat in the part and lameness. In some cases there will be swelling, but no lameness. If the swelling is hot and tender to the touch, mix half an ounce acetate of lead and two ounces tincture of arnica with one quart of water. Shake up and apply a little to the swollen part three times a day and continue until the heat and swelling disappear. If there should be any swelling after the heat and lameness have disappeared, mix one teaspoonful of biniodide of mercury with eight tablespoonfuls of lard. Rub on a little of this mixture with the fingers, let it remain on for twenty-four hours, then wash off with warm water and soap and repeat the blister in three weeks, if needed. In cases where there is swelling, but no heat or lameness, the lotion would be of no use, but the above blister should be used as directed. In old or long-standing cases of curb, if the animal is not lame, it is best to let it alone, as medicines would be of no service.

PROFITABLE BREED OF HOGS

Good Individuals of Any Popular Line, Backed by Good Ancestors, Will Make Money.

The first question every beginner asks is: "What is the best breed of hogs?" The breed makes little difference. Good individuals of any popular line, if backed by good ancestors, will make money with proper handling. I believe the best for you is the breed you like. If you like red hogs, raise Duroc-Jerseys, if you like a good black and white hog with ears turned down, get a Poland-China. If your fancy turns to a black and white hog with ears erect, take Berkshire, writes E. White in the Orange Judd Farmer. If you want to raise bacon hogs, and you prefer white ones, get Yorkshire. If you prefer red, get Tamworth. White hogs do well in the northern sections. Either Chester Whites or Cheshires may be grown. As a rule, white hogs are not profitable in the south. The intense sun blisters the skin and may cause chronic sores. The choice of breed is usually a matter of fancy. An important point is the selection of good individuals from prolific strains and handle these in such a way as to make large profits.

Excellent Type of Berkshire.

CARING FOR HORSE'S TEETH

Excellent Plan to Make Examination Two or Three Times Yearly—Treat Them With File.

If your horse shows difficulty in eating, or loses flesh without apparent cause, it is time to examine the teeth. Very often elongated teeth prevent a horse from properly masticating its food, thereby rendering it impossible to obtain much benefit from it.

Ulcerated teeth also are a source of great trouble and prevent a horse from eating well. Sometimes broken teeth cut the sides of the horse's mouth and form painful sores, which of course interfere with mastication.

It is a good plan to examine the teeth of all horses two or three times a year, and in case of broken or elongated teeth of a valuable animal are badly affected it should be treated by a veterinary surgeon.

Bad Feeding.

You cannot starve money into an animal, therefore, underfeeding is waste. Overfeeding is just as wasteful. When we overfeed we not only tax the animal's digestive [illegible]

PREPARING CORN FOR SWINE

Method of Feeding Hogs in Fattening Carefully Studied by Iowa Experiment Station.

In the new Farmers' Bulletin (No. 497) of the experiment station work by the department of agriculture, Washington, is an article on the preparation of corn for hogs.

Among many farmers the time-honored way of feeding corn to hogs is to shovel it to them directly from the earth, but many careful, progressive feeders have come to feel that the simple form in which corn is supplied by nature can be improved. The grinding and soaking of corn are thus given an influential degree of support because so many of the best purebred hogs in the country are fed their corn in this manner.

The question of the most economical method of feeding corn to hogs has been very carefully studied by the Iowa experiment station. The fastest and most profitable gains were secured by feeding dry ear corn until the hogs were close to 200 pounds in weight. Then if the hogs were to be fed longer, and the weather permitted, the most profitable gains were secured by changing them to soaked shelled corn. Fall pigs and spring pigs carried over to be fattened the following spring were handled most profitably by feeding dry ear corn until the weather became mild enough for soaked corn in the following spring, and then feeding soaked shelled corn until the finish. It should be borne in mind that corn soaked twelve hours gave better results than that soaked twenty-four hours.

USEFUL FOR PENNING STOCK

Hinged Panels Arranged in Convenient Manner One of Handiest Things Around the Farm.

Here is a sketch of a hinge panel that I have found to be about the handiest thing on the place when used to handle calves, hogs or other stock, writes D. H. Grifton of Smith Center, Kan., in the Farmers' Mail and Breeze. It is especially handy to catch and pen a sow without worry, as two men can entirely inclose an animal with it. Have a man at the end of each wing of the panel, walk up to a hog and enclose him while asleep or eating. Panel, hog and all may then be slipped along to the pen. The panels make a good pen to enclose a sick animal, or a sow and litter that has been farrowed in the open. There are many uses for it. The panels should be made of light, strong lumber. Mine may be folded up and carried under the arm.

GOOD MANAGEMENT OF GOATS

Despite Natural Inclination to Browse on Shrubs and Weeds, They Must Be Fed.

(By R. E. LARA.)

Goats, like other animals, must be fed or they will die. Some people do not seem to recognize this fact, but it is true. Goats have a natural inclination to browse on shrubs, weeds or any other coarse leaved herbage, but they must have nutritious feed in addition to thrive.

If Angora goats are fed and treated as one would treat sheep, they will get along very well. In the winter time they need clean clover hay and some grain and clean, fresh water at all times. The goat is almost as finicky as the sheep and requires water untainted by any other animal, sweet grain and hay, as they will not touch these feeds if they are musty.

Too much has been said about the ability of the goats as weed destroyers. It is true they will clean up a pasture of coarse weeds, and so will sheep; we have never been able to discover much difference and, taking everything into consideration, we believe that the farmer who raises sheep instead of goats will get better satisfaction from his flock.

Pasturing Reacting Cattle.

Cattle that react under the tuberculin test, if they are not to be disposed of at once, should be kept in a separate pasture. This pasture should be some distance from the other, or so fenced that it will be impossible for the infected and non-infected animals to get their heads together.

Whole Oats for Pigs.

Put a platform in a little inclosure in which the little pigs can be fed whole oats. Nothing quite takes the place of whole oats for suckling pigs. They will eat every grain out of the husk and grow like weeds on it.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Brush the sweat and grime from the horse collars.

There is no animal more unprofitable than a poor sheep.

The water in the stock tank should be kept clean, pure and fresh.

A few choice lambs make suitable farm companions for the children.

Get busy now with shaping up the live stock you will exhibit at the fair.

Sheep should not be kept with horses or swine, for they are liable to get killed.

Sheep feeders can no longer ignore the value of manure as a by-product of the feed lot.

Sheep do best on high, rolling ground; low ground produces foot rot and parasites.

Smooth-faced collars will not cure gall, but they will do better than cure it by preventing it.

Do not attempt to raise more hogs than you can handle well, [illegible]

ELECTRIC LIGHT IN DENMARK

Every Town in That Country of Over 5,000 Population Has Public Service.

According to recent information about the progress of electric light and power industries in Denmark, it appears that all the towns of 5,000 inhabitants and over are now provided with public electric service, says the Scientific American. As to towns having between 5,000 and 2,000 inhabitants, there are only three in which electric mains are not installed, so that it will be seen that Denmark is one of the most progressive countries in this respect. The largest sized electric stations are to be found at Copenhagen and at present there are three large plants in operation giving a total of 27,000 horse power. Current is supplied for the city mains, as well as for the tramway lines. As regards the Danish stations in small towns, in general each town has its own plant, and there is but one example of an intercommunal system. This is at Skovshoved, near Copenhagen, and the central station extends its power lines over all the suburban regions, also supplying the tramways of Hellerup and Klampenburg. In most of the town electric stations the Diesel heavy oil engine is used.

ERUPTION LIKE PIMPLES

Wathena, Kan.—"My child's scalp trouble became so bad that I was ashamed to have anyone see him. His head had a solid scab on it. He also had a terrible breaking out on his face which was gradually growing worse. The eruption was like pimples which developed into sores when he scratched, which he did almost constantly. Baby would almost scratch himself raw.

"I had used several different kinds of salve, none of them helping in the least bit, when I saw the Cuticura advertisement in the paper and it made me think of the good results my sister had when she used it for her children. I had only used Cuticura Soap and Ointment about two weeks before I noticed that the sores were almost entirely gone, and it must have been a month or six weeks he was troubled before I began the treatment. He would get easy when I would put the Cuticura Ointment on him. Cuticura Soap and Ointment completely cured him and he has a clear complexion now." (Signed) Mrs. W. H. Hughes, Dec. 31, 1911.

Collective Housekeeping.

An English paper tells of an experiment in collective housekeeping in what is known as Brent Garden village. The dwelling houses contain all improvements except a kitchen. Meals for everybody are cooked at a central hall, and may either be eaten there or sent home. A four-course dinner costs only 1 shilling and 6 pence. Servants are supplied, when needed, from the central hall at a cost of about ten cents an hour.

Robert Browning's Will.

Diligent search is being made at Florence, Italy, for the will of Robert Browning, son of the famous poet, but so far it has not been found. The fact that there apparently is no will is causing considerable gossip, as the property, of which there is a good deal, both in Asolo and Florence, will pass to his wife, who was Miss Coddington of New York, and from whom he lived apart for years, owing to incompatability of temper.

Browning's property in Florence included Casa Guidi, where he spent his childhood days. When his mother died the property passed out of the family, and was acquired by him a few years ago.

Child's Popularity Explained.

A winning lottery ticket of $100,000, in connection with the Nobles Bank was recently presented for payment at the State Bank in St. Petersburg, and it now transpires that the owner is an eight-year-old orphan, an inmate of the Orphanage at Pskoff. The lottery ticket was her sole possession. Her relatives have hitherto done nothing for the child, but when the news of her good fortune became known they were one and all eager to adopt her. The authorities have placed her in the charge of an arch-priest, a distant connection of her father.

Common sense will do more to cure backache than anything else. 'Twill tell you whether the kidneys are sore, swollen and aching. Don't Poison Baby.

FORTY YEARS AGO almost every mother thought her child must have PAREGORIC or laudanum to make it sleep. These drugs will produce sleep, and A FEW DROPS TOO MANY will produce the SLEEP FROM WHICH THERE IS NO WAKING. Many are the children who have been killed or whose health has been ruined for life by paregoric, laudanum and morphine, each of which is a narcotic product of opium. Druggists are prohibited from selling either of the narcotics named to children at all, or to anybody without labelling them "poison." The definition of "narcotic" is: "A medicine which relieves pain and produces sleep, but which in poisonous doses produces stupor, coma, convulsions and death." The taste and smell of medicines containing opium are disguised, and sold under the names of "Drops," "Cordials," "Soothing Syrups," etc. You should not permit any medicine to be given to your children without you or your physician know of what it is composed. IT IS RINGDAHL AND EBERHART

GOVERNOR'S RENOMINATION BY HANDSOME MAJORITY IS GENERALLY CONCEDED.

NELSON BY OVER 7,000.

Present Railroad Commissioners Win —Other Incumbents Probably Renamed, According to Returns.

Minneapolis, Sept. 19.—Governor Eberhart has prevailed by a handsome majority; Knute Nelson has distanced James Peterson, his lone rival; J. A. A. Burnquist is the party's candidate for lieutenant governor, and the present incumbents of the minor executive offices who were up for renomination have gotten by safely. This was indicated by fairly complete returns. P. M. Ringdal, of Crookston, seems to have won an easy victory over his adversary on the Democratic side. Eight hundred and nineteen precincts in the state outside the Twin Cities give Nelson 24,698 and Peterson 17,250. Only the unexpected can change the results and this is not anticipated. Judge Mills and C. E. Elmquist, the present members of the railroad and warehouse commission, up for renomination, were being hard pressed by Canfield and Rosenwald, their rivals, but the general opinion was that their lead in the cities would pull them through.

Both Judge Mills and Mr. Elmquist showed their anxiety over the returns from the country. Rosenwald made a showing that was surprising and it may yet require the official canvass to determine who will represent the commission on the election ballot. Elmquist is in the greatest danger. Judge Mills has a lead in the country of 637 and Elmquist 609.

Secretary of State Julius Schmahl leads the Republican ticket, with J. A. A. Burnquist a close second. Attorney General Smith is third in the count.

Schmahl Always Safe.

Burnquist, according to the returns, simply ran away from his rival, D. M. Neill of Red Wing. He surged ahead from the start and has been keeping up the lead ever since. There never was any question regarding the nomination of Secretary of State Schmahl. Attorney General Smith will win out by a handsome majority.

Insurance Commissioner J. A. Preus, early in the game predicted that Governor Eberhart would prevail in 70 counties and his claim may be realized. His excellency had a substantial majority over all and the figure is growing. W. E. Lee and E. T. Young pressed him hard in country districts during the day, but the distance between Governor Eberhart and the two has since been considerably widened.

Lee won out in his own county, Todd, and has prevailed in Sherburne county. Here the vote was Lee, 405; Eberhart, 356. Young ran third in Sherburne county. Picked to give Governor Eberhart the run of his life, the vote given S. Y. Gordon takes on the pathetic. The slump was predicted days before the primary and it has been realized to its fullest extent. It is likely that Mr. Gordon will only carry his own county, Traverse. So far only eight precincts in Traverse county have been heard from and they give Gordon 323, Eberhart 120, Lee 59 and Young 19.

Wife of Senator Sullivan Dies.

New York.—Mrs. Timothy D. Sullivan, wife of Senator "Big Tim" Sullivas, is dead. Senator Sullivan and his wife have been separated for the last seven years and during that time the politician has maintained a residence for her on West Seventy-fifth street, the house in which she died.

Officer Who Took Bribe Ousted.

Chicago, Sept. 19.—Accused of taking a 50 cent bribe, Fred E. Brandt, member of the police department, was stripped of his star and termed a disgrace to the police force by Assistant Chief Herman F. Schuettler. Brandt admitted that he took 50 cents from a peddler after arresting him for crying his wares.

Former Detective Arested.

Lethbridge, Alta., Sept. 19.—Former City Detective Pat Egan, was shot and perhaps fatally wounded by Richard Christian, a cowboy from the Iron Springs district. The shooting is said to be the result of an old feud between the two. Christian was arrested.

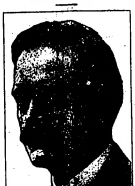
4,000 Copper Miners Strike.

Bingham, Utah, Sept. 19.—All the copper mines here are idle following the vote at a miners' meeting for a strike to affect immediately 4,000 men. Strike pickets, said to be armed, turned back shifts which started to work.

$10,000 for Aviator's Son.

Washington, Sept. 19.—A fortune of $10,000 is left the 7-months-old son of Paul Peck, the Washington aviator, killed at Chicago, Sept. 11, according to probate proceedings here.

P. M. RINGDAL



The returns from the Minnesota state-wide primary indicate that P. M. Ringdal, Crookston, is the Democratic nominee.

WILSON VISITS TWIN CITIES

ADDRESSES BUSINESS MEN, CHILDREN, COLLEGE STUDENTS.

Outlines His Policies to 2,500 in Parade Speech.—Speaks Frankly of Business Evils.

Minneapolis, Sept. 19. — The sun came out from behind a dark cloud and struck Woodrow Wilson, candidate for president, who campaigned in Minneapolis, square in the face as he emerged from the university armory, where he spoke to 4,000 people, and it then went back again. He was immensely pleased and said it was a good omen. The democratic candidate came into town on a gloomy morning, his entire schedule disarranged by a late train.

"I like this sunlight," he said, as he climbed into an automobile for a run to the parade grounds to make another speech. He had spoken three times already, once to 200 men at the Commercial club breakfast, again to 500 children of the Garfield school, and again to the assemblage in the university armory, and had before him his parade ground talk and his big speech tonight in St. Paul. He had cut out an hour of rest that had been provided in his schedule and was rushing through his program on the jump from one place to another.

"The western democracy is up and stirring," he said. "It has been a very gratifying trip. I have been in Minneapolis before and am pleased at my reception."

"Do I think I will be elected? Well," he smiled broadly, "I am out for that purpose. Certainly I could not ask for greater encouragement or enthusiasm than has attended my tour and this Minneapolis reception is splendid."

WORLD'S SERIES DATES.

World's Series Dates Will Be Arranged Definitely Wednesday.

Cincinnati, Ohio. Sept. 19.—Chairman August Herriman of the national baseball commission has announced that the commission will meet in New York next Wednesday and arrange for the world's championship series.

Mr. Herriman said all matters pertaining to the games would be placed in the hands of the national commission. He believed the arrangements for the distribution of tickets as made by the Boston American League club management was premature and even if applied would not be successful. He is rather in favor of obliging mail requests as much as possible.

Revolt Approaches Crisis.

Douglas, Ariz., Sept. 19.—With most of the rebel bands in Sonora mobilizing at Colonia, Morelos, and the federal forces concentrating at Fronteras and Yzabel on the Nacozari railroad, the revolutionary situation in that part of Sonora tributaries to this city is rapidly approaching a crisis. Upon orders of Mexican Consul Cuesta, 150 rifles and 15,000 rounds of ammunition were shipped to Nacozari for the arming of Mexican miners who have expressed a desire to defend the town in the event of attack.

Five New Cardinals.

Rome, Sept. 19.—The pope will shortly fix the date of the November consistory. It is expected he will create five new cardinals, including an American and possibly a South American. Successors will also be named for the late Cardinals Fisher of Cologne, Couille of France, and Samaisa of Austria, bringing the membership of the sacred college up to sixty-seven.

Connaughts Visit Vancouver.

Vancouver, B. C., Sept. 19.—With a guard of honor of the duke of Connaught's own regiment standing at salute and the regimental band playing the national anthem, the royal train drew in at the station and the duke, the duchess, the Princess Patricia and their party were welcomed here. Carriages were in waiting and the royal guests, escorted by a detachment of the British Columbian mounted horse, proceeded on a tour of the city.

SIXTEEN ARE KILLED

CHESTER-LIVERPOOL EXPRESS CRASHES INTO STATION PLATFORM AT DITTON JUNCTION.

RUNNING DOWN INCLINE.

Engine Jumps Tracks and Nine Cars Run Wild Down Track.—Harrowing Scenes Are Evidence.

Liverpool, England. — Sixteen persons were killed and 49 injured by the derailing of the express from Chester to Liverpool at Ditton Junction, eight miles from Liverpool. The train had passed over the long bridge spanning the Mersey river and was running down the incline leading to the junction when, at the crossover points, the engine jumped the rails and crashed into the buttress of a bridge spanning the line.

The coupling of the car next to the engine parted and the train of nine cars sped on to the station. The leading cars crashed into the platform with terrific force and were wrecked. One car was overturned and caught fire and was soon consumed. Several bodies in this car were cremated. Some of the injured were rescued from windows.

The engine driver was crushed to death and the fireman had both legs broken. He was pinned under the locomotive for two hours.

Dead Taken from Wreck.

The work of extricating the dead and injured by the light of bonfires was continued until a late hour. The fourth car became a roaring furnace and the terrible cries of the injured and appeals for help, together with the difficulty in taking the passengers from the wreckage, caused harrowing scenes.

The known death roll numbered 16. Several of the bodies still are unidentified.

WOMEN IN CRUSADE.

Will March Against Vice in Chicago.

Chicago, Illinois. — Chicago women have banded themselves under the leadership of Virginia Brooks, West Hammond's girl reformer, for a giant vice crusade to end only with the emancipation of enslaved girls found in the disreputable districts of this city.

Club women and working girls will be found in the legions following the modern Joan of Arc in her march upon the city's organized vice, as soon as the West Hammond's crusade is ended.

SNEAD IS INDICTED.

Amarillo Banker Is Charged With Murder.

Amarillo, Texas.—J. B. Snead, the Amarillo banker, has been indicted for the alleged murder here Saturday of Al C. Boyce, Jr. The indictment was returned by the Potter county grand jury at conclusion of the examination of 50 witnesses.

The trial of Snead for the murder of young Boyce could not be held before the January term of the district court here. Before that time, in November next, he will face trial at Fort Worth for the murder of his Amarillo victim's father.

Union May Aid Sidna Allen.

Des Moines, Iowa.—A Proposition that the International Carpenters' union in convention at Washington, D. C., extend aid to Sidna Allen, Virginia mountaineer, captured here last Saturday in connection with the Hillsville courthouse murders, will be brought before the convention by representatives of the Des Moines union, according to an announcement. Members of the local organization say that Allen is as much entitled to consideration as any other member.

Eau Claire, Wisconsin. — Mrs. Robert M. LaFollette in support of woman's suffrage addressed an audience of about 3,500 here.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Le Sueur.—Joseph Kennedy and Harry Scanlon were bound over to the grand jury, charged with burglary in the third degree.

Pipestone.—The enrollment of the Pipestone public schools at the close of the first week was 546. The enrollment in the high school is 124.

Grand Rapids.—Complete returns from outlying precincts of Itasca county will not reach the auditor's office until Friday or Saturday owing to the circuitous routes.

Northfield.—A touring car was struck near Castle Rock by a Rock Island passenger train. Mrs. C. J. Hoffman received severe bruises and the others were shaken up but not hurt.

Madelia.—Professor Maria Sanford made an address before the Sorosis club here and gave a reading from Macbeth in the auditorium in the evening. The reading was well attended and she held the close attention of all.

Bemidji.—At a state land sale conducted here by Theodore Nelson of the state auditor's office, more than 900 acres were sold for a total amount of $5,497.06, the average price per acre being $6.05. The amount collected for timber was $325.

Herman.—Because of alleged unrequited love, George Kegley attempted to shoot the object of his affections, a young widow living with her parents on a farm near here. The young woman's mother slammed the door in Kegley's face when he drew his revolver. Kegley then turned the gun on himself, inflicting a serious wound two inches above the heart.

Grand Rapids.—Itasca county commissioners have approved the survey of that portion of the Duluth-St. Vincent road, which lies in this county. About 52 miles of the road runs across Itasca, touching the towns of Swan River, Feeley, Warba, Blackberry, Grand Rapids, Cohasset, Deer River, Dumas and Ball Club. It is estimated the road in this county will cost $1,908 a mile.

Moorhead. — Information reached here that Louis Marsch, a convict from this county in the state penitentiary, had succumbed to heart disease. He was committed about a year ago for stealing pure blood fowls from a farm near Glyndon. Time and again he had been in trouble for stealing chickens and it seemed to be a mania with him. He is survived by his wife and several children.

Minneapolis, Minn.—With receipts of 11,732 cars loaded with grain since August 24, Minneapolis grain dealers are satisfied so far that the railroads are "taking care of them." Orders for cars have been supplied promptly, but even the railroad officials say that there is to be a shortage in about two weeks. So far, according to statistics in the office of the secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, the early shipments of spring and winter crop of all small grains have been delivered to market promptly.

Thief River Falls.—C. C. Nordby & Co. of this city secured the contract for the grading of the proposed Elwell highway running east of Thief River Falls twenty miles. C. Jensen & Sons, also of this city, were awarded the contract for hauling the covering of gravel to the road after it is graded. This highway will be the main road of travel for all farmers living in Eastern Marshall and Pennington counties. Pennington county had more candidates for the various county offices than any other county except Hennepin.

Cloquet.—The annual membership campaign of the boys' department of the Cloquet Y. M. C. A. is on and an effort is being made to have 100 boys enrolled by Oct. 1. The slogan of the campaign is "A Greater Boys' Department." Charles A. Gross, the secretary, says the work will be carried on with more enthusiasm than ever before. There will be a more up-to-date gymnasium to tempt the boys, frequent socials and open house for them and their friends, and special work for and oversight of the boys from 15 to 18 years of age, and meetings with the men's department into which the older boys expect to graduate.

Hamline.—The sale of tickets during fair week reached a total of $186,830.95, according to the books of Edgar L. Mattson, treasurer of the Minnesota State Agricultural society. This represents only the money received for admission to the grounds, grand stand, hippodrome and dog show, but not the advance sale of tickets outside of the fair grounds. The fair will have as other receipts the revenues from the sale of privileges, percentages on shows, entries to the racing events and an income from miscellaneous sources which not only will cover all the expenses of the fair, but may even wipe out the indebtedness of $77,000.

Stillwater.—Judge Stolberg held a special term of court here to consider condemnation proceedings brought by the state for the possession of thirty-seven lots lying east of the administration building of the new prison. The lots are owned by H. H. Harrison and F. S. Register and the price they have put upon them is regarded too high by the state. Judge Stolberg took the matter under advisement.

YOUNG WIFE SAVED FROM HOSPITAL

Tells How Sick She Was And What Saved Her From An Operation.

Upper Sandusky, Ohio.—"Three years ago I was married and went to housekeeping. I was not feeling well and could hardly drag myself along. I had such tired feelings, my back ached, my sides ached, I had bladder trouble awfully bad, and I could not eat or sleep. I had headaches, too, and became almost a nervous wreck. My doctor told me to go to a hospital. I did not like that idea very well, so, when I saw your advertisement in a paper, I wrote to you for advice, and have done as you told me. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills, and now I have my health.

"If sick and ailing women would only know enough to take your medicine, they would get relief."—Mrs. BENJ. H. STANSBERY, Route 6, Box 18, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

If you have mysterious pains, irregularity, backache, extreme nervousness, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait too long, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound now.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy and should give every one confidence.

Move for Change in Time.

The French ministry of public works is endeavoring to have the government adopt the system of reckoning time on railways by the use of the hours from 1 to 24, instead of 12 noon to 12 midnight. This system has already been adopted by many continental railways and has been in operation for years on the Canadian Pacific railway.

Matrimony in Australia.

Bridegrooms in Australia last year ranged from sixteen to ninety-nine years of age, and the records show the youngest bride was fifteen, and the oldest eighty-two. One man of seventy-seven married a girl of eighteen. It is not surprising to learn that more marriages were reported from the country than ever before.

RIGHT HOME

Doctor Recommends Postum from Personal Test.

No one is better able to realize the injurious action of caffeine—the drug in coffee—on the heart, than the doctor. Tea is just as harmful as coffee because it, too, contains the drug caffeine.

When the doctor himself has been relieved by simply leaving off coffee and using Postum, he can refer with full conviction to his own case.

A Mo. physician prescribes Postum for many of his patients because he was benefited by it. He says:

"I wish to add my testimony in regard to that excellent preparation—Postum. I have had functional or nervous heart trouble for over 15 years, and a part of the time was unable to attend to my business.

"I was a moderate user of coffee and did not think drinking it hurt me. But on stopping it and using Postum instead, my heart has got all right, and I ascribe it to the change from coffee to Postum.

"I am prescribing it now in cases of sickness, especially when coffee does not agree, or affects the heart, nerves or stomach.

"When made right it has a much better flavor than coffee, and is a vital sustainer of the system. I shall continue to recommend it to our people, and I have my own case to refer to." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Apparently Governor Eberhart has been renominated by a minority constituting about 30 per cent of the republican votes cast at the primary, because of the foolish division of the opposition and the failure of the voters to exercise the unfamiliar second choice privilege.

It does not militate against a system, or not necessarily so, that some little thought and intelligence are necessary to its operation. Under the new law there is something more than walking into the voting booth and handing a ticket to the judges. The voter must know what he is about.—Dispatch.

The second choice primary appears to have failed in its purpose. Though seventy per cent of the republicans of Minnesota were opposed to the renomination of Governor Eberhart, thirty per cent of the republican voters have succeeded in renominating him. The second choice machinery failed, not because it was poor machinery, but because the voters did not use it. When they learn to use it they will find it very good machinery indeed.—Duluth Herald.

Saving Money by Saving Seed Corn

Farmers who did not have seed corn last spring paid from $2.00 to $5.00 per bushel for it. They could have saved it from their crop of the fall before at a cost of 40 cents per bushel, figuring that a man could select only 5 bushels a day. Storing and curing in an attic or unused bedroom would cost only a few cents, and testing is good pastime for the winter and spring days.

All told, it should not cost the farmer over $1.00 a bushel to grow, save, cure, and test his own seed corn, from a good field of corn. Thus from $1.00 to $4.00 per bushel might have been saved by the men who had to buy seed corn last spring.

But the most important consideration is not the cost of saving the seed. When a good crop of corn has been grown on a farm there is no better source from which to select seed corn for that farm than from that crop. The corn is adapted to the soil and climate and is most likely to succeed again. If it is kept pure and attention is given to selecting the best type of ears for feed, constant improvement can be made and the crop made much more certain.

If while saving seed corn for himself the farmer can save two to five bushels per acre to sell at $2.00 or more a bushel to those who are not so forehanded, he has put a nice premium on his corn crop. A 40 bushel yield at 41 cents, the average price for corn during the past ten years, would be worth $16.40 an acre for seed. If three bushels were sold as seed at $2.50 a bushel and the balance used for feed, it would bring $22.67 an acre or $6.27 more. Twenty acres of corn so handled would yield profit enough to pay the expense of one of the boys at the agricultural school for the winter. Or, divided among the boys, it might help solve the problem of how to interest them in the farm.—Andrew Boss, Minnesota College of Agriculture.

Monkey Hugs Woman

According to dispatches, one of the women of New York swelldom, Mrs. Archibald E. Roberts, daughter of Mrs. Orlando Harriman, while returning from Europe, was too well hugged by an "almost human" chimpanzee which was being shipped on the same steamer. That she suffered no worse than a few scratches, the loss of a handful of hair, and the shock, was due to the timely arrival of the keeper. The mistake of the chimpanzee was no compliment to New York's elite. As serious a mistake is that of people who use other beer than golden grain belt on their home tables. Alex. Thompson, agent, Crookston.

The Primaries

The primaries passed off very quietly in St. Hilaire. There were 116 votes cast, 38 being by women. Following is a partial synopsis of the vote:

REPUBLICAN.

NON PARTISAN.

Judge of Probate — Richardson 13, Michelet 23.

Superintendent of Schools — Netteland 81, Miss Connely 14, Mostue 13.

The vote for clerk of court did not prove as interesting as was expected, and the present clerk easily distanced all opponents, polling nearly as many votes as all of the others combined.

On the non-partisan ticket Michelet won handily over Richardson by a vote of 868 to 560, or 308 majority.

For county superintendent of schools E. A. Mostue polled by far the largest vote, and he and George Netteland, the two highest, will contest for the office at the general election. Miss Anna Connelly was third in this race, polling but a light vote, undoubtedly from the fact of entering somewhat late. The women's vote on this race was exceedingly light all over the county.

Through the courtesy of the News-Press we print a complete tabulation of the republican vote.

Notice for Bids

The town board of the town of River Falls will receive sealed bids for the construction of a steel bridge with concrete floor, 16 foot span, 18 foot roadway, abutments about 13 feet high.

Bids will be opened on Tuesday, October 1, at 2 o'clock p. m.

The board reserves the right to reject any or all bids. J. S. ROY, s21-2t Chairman.

HAS MADE A FORTUNE.

N. G. Scram of Seattle, Wash., a graduate of the Mankato Commercial College six years ago, has made a wonderful success, and attributes it to the training he received at the Mankato Commercial College. PLENTY OF ROOM.

No Trouble to Find a Place For Him to Rest in Sleep.

His blanket the soldier takes along on the march, but usually not his tent. Usage soon makes the ground as soft a bed as he wants. The case is pretty nearly the same with the prospector and the frontiersman. In writing of the "Highways and Byways of the Pacific Coast" Mr. Clifton Johnson tells of the practice on the ranches of the west. He was the guest of an early settler.

While we were chatting a laborer passed, shouldering a roll of blankets. The butcher had come to the door, and he pointed to the passer and said: "You see that fellow, don't you? Well, when I first reached here from the east I thought a man with a bed on his back was the funniest thing I'd ever come across.

"A rancher in this country won't take his hired man into his house. They've got to furnish their own blankets and usually sleep on the hay in the barn.

"I know a fellow who, when he'd just arrived and didn't understand the way they manage, got a job harvesting on a big wheat ranch. The help usually sleep in the straw stacks then, and it's precious little time they get to sleep anywhere. But he didn't know anything about that, and he was sitting around in the evening and finally said to the rancher, 'Where am I to sleep tonight?'

"'Why, I don't care where you sleep,' said the rancher. 'I've got 1000 acres of land around here, and if you can't find a place to sleep on that I'll get my next neighbor to lend me a piece of his.'"

AN UNSOCIABLE LOT.

What Mr. Thomas Thought of the Crowd In New York.

Mr. Thomas crammed a fresh stick of birch into his little stove and closed the door, which John Arnold had left ajar on his entrance. The tiny shoe shop thus became air tight. Then the proprietor replied to John's question of what he thought of New York.

"I can tell ye in 'mazing few words," he said. "It's considerable of a place. Lots doing an' splendid big buildings an' schools an' churches an' all that. They think they're some punkins too. An' I ain't saying that there ain't plenty of real smart ones there. Spite of all that, though, I call 'em kind o' ignorant, besides being cold in their manners."

"I want to know!" commented John, visibly impressed by this recital.

"I'll tell ye," continued Mr. Thomas. "Brother Tom's boy's office is down near the big Brooklyn bridge, and I used to go down there and set a good deal while my wife visited with his wife up in Harlem.

"When it come what they call rush hour I used to go down an' stand on the bridge an' watch 'em passing by, hundreds of 'em, on their way home, an' I got to feel real friendly an' to know lots of 'em by sight. But"—

Mr. Thomas paused impressively—"but, although I didn't miss an aft'noon whilst I was there, an' that was two weeks, nary one o' them men ever give me a single glance of recognition.

"It wa'n't my place to speak first, me being a stranger an' they home, so to speak. I wa'n't going to push myself; but, I tell ye what, John, two or three times I had to hold on to myself to keep from telling of 'em just what I thought of such unfriendly ways.

"'Why,' says I to Brother Tom's boy, 'how long do you s'pose one o' them would be at Tunkett Corners before we knew him well enough to nod to an' found out his name?'"—Youth's Companion.

Sui Generis.

"Got everything, pa?" asked Ham of Noah while the old man stood on the quarter deck and scanned the passenger list.

"Not yet," replied Noah. "We'll have to wait for the man who vows to high heaven that he will never be caught alive in a full dress suit and the woman who won't talk while she plays whist."—Chicago Post.

Qualified.

The great magazine editor sneered. "What right have you," he asked, "to think you'll ever make a poet?"

"Well, sir," the youth said timidly, "I've been fasting man in a sideshow for the last two seasons."—Cincinnati [illegible]

DECRIES THE PERPETUAL GRIN.

Writer Takes Issue with Man Who Says "Keep a-Smiling."

A favorite motto with many people in these latter days, when the wholesome gospel of cheerfulness is being preached so extensively, is, "Keep a-smiling." It is a very good motto within limitations. In so far as its adoption as a rule of conduct prevents the wearing of a lugubrious countenance when no overwhelming grief or calamity is being endured or is impending, in so far as it overcomes the tendency to look on the dark side and anticipate evil, in so far as it enables one to look for the best in all situations and to keep up his courage when troubles threaten—in all these respects it is a maxim worthy of commendation.

But it should not be interpreted too liberally; its spirit rather than its letter should be observed. Its spirit means a persistent hopefulness, a refusal to be cast down by discouraging or unfavorable circumstances, a sturdy defiance of adverse fate. Its literal observance may include these things, but it means also a perpetual grin, and a perpetual grin leads to thoughts of crime on the part of beholders. No one becomes so irritating or has such a maddening effect upon sensitive associates as the man or woman who wears the "smile that never comes off."—Indianapolis Star.

RABBITS ARE HARD FIGHTERS.

The Charge of Cowardice a Slander—Defeat of a Ferret.

Tell a man that he hasn't the pluck of a rabbit and if he doesn't disprove it by hitting you he is certain at any rate to be extremely annoyed.

Yet the taunt is a libel on the rabbit. A doe rabbit will fight like fury in defense of her young. She will charge like a battering ram and use those long sharp incisors of hers to capital purpose.

An old buck rabbit is not to be lightly tackled by weasel, stoat or even ferret. On the sanded floor of a small public house near Chestnut a ferret of long experience was matched with an old lop-eared buck, the property of the landlord.

The ferret made straight for the rabbit's throat, but the latter was in the air before master ferret could reach him, and leaping clean over the ferret's head let out with those powerful hind legs of his a kick which hurled the ferret bodily against the wainscot. Twice the ferret returned to the attack and twice he missed his grip and went hurtling through the air.

The third repulse was enough for him. He knew he was beaten and could not be persuaded to stand up for a fourth round. — Pearson's Weekly.

For Your Health.

Conquer your moods; don't let your moods conquer you. People who give way to moods never amount to much, because they are never masters of themselves. They never know in the morning whether they are going to do a good day's work or not, whether they are going to be a cheering or a depressing influence on the people around them. If they feel like being good-tempered, they will be; if they feel like "snapping" at everybody, they will snap.

People who suffer from "moods" should be careful about their habits. They should be regular about meals, sleep, exercise and work. The condition of the health has much to do with moods, and there is nothing that contributes so much to health as absolute regularity.

A Little Case of Telepathy.

"There is nothing strange to me in the operation of one mind upon another," the telepathic woman said. "Once when my sister I am very fond of was operated on I went with her and sat in the anteroom a long way off from the operating room. That is I walked up and down there, worried to death nearly about her, when all at once I threw myself into a big arm chair and went sound asleep.

"They had just given her the ether, so her mind was at rest, and rested mine. I slept until she came out from under the influence."

ONE STONE FENCES FARM.

Missouri Man Has Land Where No Wheel Ever Rolled.

Jasper, Mo.—Within sight of this town a settler has a farm which probably is unlike any other in the world.

This farm occupies the tableland on the summit of a ridge and is inclosed with a fence which no animal has ever broken through. It does not rise above the surface of the farm, but falls sheer from the edge a distance of many feet. The man who homesteaded the tableland had a hard climb up the face of a perpendicular cliff to reach the comparatively level summit.

At one point a ledge extends out a few inches and along the face of the cliff at an upward grade. By following this ledge and making use of occasional points of rocks and of shrubs growing in the fissures the discoverer pulled himself to the summit and found a surface well covered with a soft and luxuriant vegetation.

Gradually he improved the ledge until he could carry up tools and seed. By blasting and drilling he cleared a narrow trail, up which he was able to take first some pigs and then a cow. Later on he took up a horse.

And that to-day is the condition of this curiously protected farm. No vehicle has turned a wheel within its limits of palisades. The live stock has multiplied and consumes the grain raised. Some stones thrown across the trail completely fence in the hogs and cattle. When the farmer has stock to sell he drives the animals down the private trail and strikes the road to Jasper.

CATERPILLARS HALT TRAIN.

Three Times Within Mile Crew Shovels Them Off the Tracks.

St. John, N. B.—Moths, caterpillars and other like pests have made their appearance in great numbers in many sections of this province, particularly in York county. There they have caused considerable inconvenience, and several amazing stories are told of experiences when they have met in large bodies. Trainmen manning a freight between Fredericton Junction and McAdams are authority for a statement that appears incredulous. They say that the heavy freight train was stopped three times within a mile by caterpillars which swarmed over the tracks in such numbers as to effectually impede the progress of the train. It was necessary to arm the entire train crew with shovels and scoop the thousands of pests off the tracks, and smother those on the roadbed by shoveling gravel over them. They report every tree and bit of foliage along the line as being denuded of green.

Parcel Shower

Mrs. B. E. Burkee and Mrs. Cephas Swanson entertained fourteen young ladies Wednesday afternoon at a parcel shower in honor of Miss Josephine Gigstad, who is soon to be a bride. Autumn leaves and flowers were the decorations at the home of Mrs. Swanson, where the guests were first entertained with contests appropriate to the occasion. In the principal one, "A Floral Love Story," the prize was awarded to Miss Inez Patterson.

A delicious lunch was served at the Burkee home, where all had been made lovely in decorations of pink and white. The guests were all seated at one long table, unique ment cards furnishing a great deal of amusement.

Red Lake County Fair

In spite of the most discouraging weather conditions the 1912 Red Lake county fair can be pronounced a big success. There were magnificent exhibits in all departments and since the purpose of the fair is to encourage the raising of better stock and farm products, the exhibition was a most gratifying success.

The exhibit hall was literally jammed full of products of the farm, garden, and dairy, with fancy work, culinary products, and exhibits of the work of the pupils of the public schools. The magnificence of the display surprised and delighted all fair visitors.

Twice as many stalls for live stock exhibits as were used last year were built on the new grounds. In spite of that fact, early on the first day carpenters were rushing the construction of more stalls, for long before noon on the opening day of the fair every stall on the grounds was filled.

Fair visitors were quite as much delighted with the new grounds as they were with the magnificent displays. Few had realized how much work had been done on the new grounds. With the fine exhibit hall, excellent race track, big grand stand and many other improvements one could scarcely realize that the place had been unimproved ground only a few weeks before.—Gazette.

America's Greatest Weekly
THE
TOLEDO BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO
The Best Known Newspaper in the United States
Circulation 340,090
Popular in Every State
No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner; and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making the Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

LOMBARD PIANOS
The Pianos With The Sweetest Tone

Praised by Press and Pulpit

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw; and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

The growth in lumber shipments from Riga, totaling $7,400,000 cubic feet in 1910, ranks this port among the world's greatest timber exporters. The greater part of this trade was in sawed lumber. Britain took over half of the amount exported.

British Metropolis Leads in Mud.

According to L. Meerson Clancey of St. Louis, who is now in London, there is more mud in the British metropolis than in any other of the big cities he has been in, and his record includes Paris, Berlin, Vienna, New York, Washington, Baltimore, St. Louis and Milwaukee.

Old Roman Wall Unearthed.

A part of the wall which once enclosed old St. Paul's, London, has been discovered in excavations at the corner of Paternoster Row and St. Paul's alley in London. The wall, which is about 60 feet long, is made of chalk and rubble, and was built in the twelfth century. On the same site pieces of a Roman amphora, Roman vases and some Samian ware have also been found. Other "finds" include a camel's skull unearthed in High Holborn and a large quantity of pipes of the eighteenth century. Under some old stables in Bartholomew Close—one of the oldest parts of London—three Norman arches have been found. They are close to one another, and are believed to have formed part of the cloisters of the priory which once stood on this site.

Sang for Sultan.

Mulai Hafid, the ex-Sultan of Morocco, while staying at Vichy, in France, made an excursion to Les Ardoisieres, says the "Matin," where Napoleon III. used often to go for rest. Three young girls, sisters, timidly approached the Sultan and asked him to sign postcards. Mulai Hafid consented on condition that they would each sing a song to him. Two of the girls at once complied, and the delighted Mulai Hafid wrote on their cards words which, translated, mean: "Like Napoleon III., I have visited Les Ardoisieres, where I have enjoyed, together with the calm and freshness of nature, the grace and charm of the voices of Miles Pauline and Clotilde." The third girl did not know how to sing, but one of her sisters having sung for her the Sultan added the name of Gabrielle.

Ten-Year-old Julia Gets Into Bad Graces of Mother by Giving Tramp a Half-Dollar.

"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

The foregoing quotation is from chapter xiii, verse 2, Book of Hebrews, and it is introduced solely because it constitutes a vital part of this story. Julia is ten years old and she goes to Sunday school. It appears that on a recent occasion the Sunday school teacher had considerable to say about this matter of "entertaining angels unawares." Anyway, it made a deep impression with Julia.

A few days after the lesson Julia's mother left her in charge of the house for a few hours. When the mother returned she went to a particular cup in the cupboard to extract therefrom one-half dollar. In this cup is kept the family pin money, and Julia's mother knew that she had put 50 cents there before she had gone out. But the half dollar was gone. There was an expression of anxiety on Julia's face and mother scented mischief.

"Did you take that money?" asked the mother, somewhat severely.

Julia broke into tears: "I gave it to a man that came to the back door," sobbed the little girl.

"Gave it to a man!" exclaimed the mother. "What for?"

"I thought he might be God," tearfully replied Julia.—Kansas City Star.

BURNED AND ITCHED BADLY

539 Lincoln Park Blvd., Chicago, Ill.—"A year ago I received a very severe burn on my left arm. I caught cold in it and it was all sore and ulcerated. The sore was as large as a silver dollar. It was all red and inflamed and had pus running out of it. I suffered terribly from burning pain; could not sleep for two weeks it burned and itched so badly. I applied —— Salve, —— Salve and a salve my druggist recommended as his own, but got no relief. I then commenced using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I bathed the burned parts with Cuticura Soap and applied the Cuticura Ointment on a linen bandage. I got relief from the first, and my arm healed nicely. I was soon able to be at work again. Had I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment at first I would have avoided lots of suffering." (Signed) Harry Junke, Mar. 9, 1912.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Add. post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston." Adv.

Crime to Kiss.

In Russia it is a crime for lovers to kiss in public, and not very long ago two young men and two young women were arrested in Odessa for having been guilty of this offense. They had all been dining together in a restaurant, and kissed on parting. They were condemned to short terms of imprisonment, and the sentences were confirmed on appeal. The general fine in Russia for a kiss in the open street is 15 shillings, but in a tramcar it may cost anything up to 25 shillings.

A Pen and Ink Shakespeare.

Woodrow Wilson, on a recent visit to Atlantic City, referred good humoredly to his rather illegible handwriting.

"But my hand is nothing," he said, "to that of Horace Greeley.

"This appeared the next day:

STRENGTHEN CHURCHES.

Rural Life Commission Prepares for Campaign.

Winona.—The plan of Rev. J. C. Craig, superintendent of Winona district Methodism, for the establishment of a country life commission to promote work among country churches in the district, will be carried forward. Of the necessary guarantee of $2,500 there has been pledged $1,500, with a prospect the guarantee will be raised to at least $3,000.

The memberships in the commission are placed at $25 to extend over a period of five years. One-fifth of the amount pledged is to be paid in the first year and thereafter in such amounts as may be called for by the commission, never more than $5 a year. It is expected that after the first assessment the calls will be light, that the work will be made self-sustaining.

The first call will provide a guarantee fund for the payment of a young evangelist and his wife who will spend their entire time in the work. Their labors will mostly be in the rural districts, but their first appointment early in October will be at Spring Valley, where meetings will be held for several weeks.

Dr. Craig says there are many places in the district where good societies can be built up and church activities strengthened by work of this character. He advocates more social life for the young people in the rural districts, many of whom now have nothing in this line outside of public dances.

A meeting of the commission will be called at Rochester about Oct. 10, when organiation will be perfected and the work on the district started. If he is able to get the membership guarantees up to $3,000, he expects to place two working evangelists on the Winona district.

Everywhere throughout the district resolutions are being passed for the return of Dr. Craig to the district superintendency for the coming year.

MANIAC TERRORIZES.

Demented Farmer Armed With Shotgun Threatens Two Families.

Mankato. — Terrorized for nearly three hours by an insane man who stood over them with a loaded shotgun and repeatedly announced his intention to "wipe them out," the families of August Zingler and Henry Schultz, Decoria farmers, were nearly prostrated.

Financial worry led Zingler to threaten to kill his family and himself, and when Schultz interfered he and his family were also threatened. As Zingler stood guard over the telephone and Schultz did not dare to leave, it was several hours before officers could be notified. Zingler had just sold his farming implements and rented a house in Mankato, and he and family were guests at Schultz. Zingler has been adjudged insane and committed to the asylum.

CAN'T END CAR TIE-UP.

Manager Says Strike Does Not Exist As Men Are Discharged.

Duluth. — General Manager Warren of the Street Car company attended a meeting of the Common Council and a citizen's committee at the City Hall and restated his determination not to arbitrate nor recognize the grievances of the 153 striking employes.

His defiance to the wishes of the business men who declared the strike must be settled, led to a motion offered by Frank Grassweller, that the old men be reinstated at seven o'clock in the evening and the matters causing the strike be arbitrated later.

The plan proposed for arbitration was that two men should represent the company, two the employes and the four thus chosen select a fifth.

It was set forth that the company and strikers could find no more fair manner of concluding their troubles. The representatives of the strikers declared themselves ready to enter into the proposed agreement and consented that the grievance regarding recognition of the union be not considered, thus sacrificing one of the chief causes of the walkout.

Mr. Warren was then called upon to state his policy regarding settlement by arbitration. He replied that he would not enter into any arbitration and that there is no strike among the employes of the car company. He said that the men discharged would not be taken back. He declared that meddlers were interfering with the business of the company and he said that he was a busy man and attended the gathering only at the expense of business duties.

Mayor Konkel, of Superior, in which city the men are also out, replying to Mr. Warren's demand for protection, stated that if he was forced to put on extra policemen he would place them as crews on the cars and operate the line and that if this was necessary, the city would take action for the public ownership of the car system.

It is said that the strike breakers are receiving $10 a day. This is admitted by the new men, who say they first asked $25 a day and settled upon $10 after the car company had refused more.

JUDGE IS MENACED.

Man Sentenced Shakes Fist at Court.

Minneapolis. — Exactly duplicating their actions of one week ago when they were arrested, the members of the Industrial Workers of the World who were charged with disorderly conduct by refusing to move on at the command of an officer of the law, created a "near" riot in the Municipal Court room that resulted in the clearing of the Chamber at the order of Judge Montgomery.

Twelve of the men who belong to the Workers' organization were found guilty. Eight of the 12 were given their choice of paying a $10 fine or spending 10 days in the workhouse. Four were asked to pay a fine of $5 or go to the workhouse for five days.

When Arthur Boose was called as the clerk read off the names in order, he sprang to his feet, shook his fist at the Judge and yelled:

"Thank you, Judge, for sending me to jail. Remember there is a time coming when you will be silent and the people will hear us. Some day we'll be free."

The other prisoners yelled and about 200 spectators, most of whom were members of the Industrial Workers or in sympathy with the movement, sprang to their feet, waved their hats or handkerchiefs, and shouted vociferously.

MEETING AT MADELIA.

District Christian Society Elects Officers at Annual Convention

Madelia.—The yearly convention of the Mankato district of the Christian church closed here after a two days' session. The meeting was attended by laymen and ministers from nearly every church in the district, Rev. C. B. Osgood of Mankato, Rev. G. M. Walker of Worthington, Rev. Ole Nielson of Canby and Rev. C. F. Martin of Redwood Falls, made the principal addresses. The following officers were elected: President, Rev. R. Nay of Cleveland; vice president, Rev. G. M. Walker, Worthington; secretary and treasurer, Rev. Ole Nielson, Canby.

Fairmont was selected for the next annual convention.

Annual W. C. T. U. in St. Paul.

St. Paul.—The thirty-sixth annual convention of the Minnesota Woman's Christian Temperance union will take place in St. Paul beginning Friday and continuing until Tuesday, Sept. 24, at the First Methodist Episcopal church. Mrs. Edith Smith Davis of Hartford, Wis., and Miss Addie A. Austin of Chicago, Ill., will be among the guests at the convention. At the opening meeting of the convention, Friday evening, Mrs. Davis will have for her subject on the program, "Pledges."

Pipestone.—A bandstand in the courthouse park has been dedicated. C. T. Howard had the dedication ceremonies in charge and addresses were made by Mayor Dyer, E. W. Davies, Jessie E. Walkup, county superintendent; Rev. H. N. Hanson, Dr. Thomas Lowe and Frank A. Swanson, band-leader. The new stand was erected by the efforts of the Civic Improvement league and occupies a prominent place. A movement has been started to raise funds for the placing of a statue of the late D. B. LOOK FOR THE CAUSE

Follow the Advice of Other Women Who Have Had Experiences Similar to Yours.

Have you ever stopped to consider what is the meaning of the various symptoms from which you are suffering? Certainly the paleness, pain in the back, headaches, loss of appetite, nervousness, shortness of breath must have some one cause. They are not diseases in themselves but are complaints and warnings from the different organs of the body that these organs are not being supplied with pure blood and cannot do their daily work well.

To be in good health a person must always have good rich blood. Every tissue of the body depends upon it for nourishment and strength. Knowledge of this fact makes possible a direct treatment for the various disorders from which women suffer. They can cure their troubles by making the blood pure with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People.

Mrs. F. N. Kenning, of No. 411 Fifteenth avenue, North Minneapolis, Minn., who was completely cured by this remedy, says:

"For over a year I was in very poor health. I was very weak and thin and had terrible pains through my back. I would be in bed for a week at a time. I was subject to dizzy spells. My limbs would seem to give out and I would have no control of them during these spells. I was reduced in weight to 98 pounds and could not do my work.

"The doctor did not seem to help me and I quit his treatment. It was then a cousin recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People to me and I gave them a trial. I soon felt much better and I now weigh 115 pounds. For years I had terrible headaches but since taking the pills these have disappeared. My health is better than it has been in years and I give the credit to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I would advise all suffering women to take the pills for I know they will relieve them of much misery."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People should be used in anaemia, chlorosis or green sickness, sick headache, and for nervousness and a general run-down condition of the health.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are for sale at all druggists, or will be mailed to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. Our new booklet, "Plain Talks to Women," will be sent free on request. Adv.

Obliging.

A young man who had never testified before was called before the court as a witness in a certain case. He was somewhat flustered over the attention that was being paid him, and mumbled his words so that the young woman stenographer could not hear them distinctly. He was told to speak plainly and to turn toward the stenographer.

"Speak to the stenographer," said the prosecutor.

At that the young man arose and with a deep bow to the lady said, "How do you do?"—Satire.

Spanish Wedding Is Ruined If One Person Appears Entirely in Black —Some Other Signs.

In Spain the wedding is spoiled if one of the guests appears entirely in black, or if the bride looks into a mirror after orange blossoms and veil are fast in her headdress.

When a person's hair ends split, it's taken by the superstitious for a sign that she is either a witch or has been bewitched. As blond hair splits more readily than dark hair, all witches, spirits and sorceresses have blond or red hair, according to the standard of art.

On the marriage eve there is often much good-natured rivalry between the groom and the bride in the Slav countries as to who shall blow out the candle, for the person who does will be "first to die." It is impossible to trace the origin of this superstition, yet it prevails in aristocratic society as well as in the peasant's hut, even as like this, that "to insure the life and health of the children" the woman must occupy the right side of the bed. In addition, she must not smoke before her forty-fifth year.

There is a superstition in this country and many others against burning a broom. The bud of birch broom is used in Southern Germany as a preventive against erysipelas. These buds, a piece of yellow wax and some other articles are enclosed in a pink silk bag, secured with red silk and worn on the back of the neck. The person must change his shirt every Friday.

English Honors Cost Money.

The letter patent granted for the dignity of a baron cost £150, and for that of a baronet £100, payable to the board of inland revenue. Other expenses to be incurred by the newly-honored include crests or new coats-of-arms, while some wish to have their "genealogical trees" properly made out. Consequently the Heralds' college is busy after the issue of a list of honors, and the total expenses of a baron are not far short of £400, and those of a baronet exceed £200.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

In this age of research and experiment, all nature is ransacked by the scientist for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides in the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine is that of Therapion, which has been used with great success in French Hospitals and that it is worthy the attention of those who suffer from kidney, bladder, nervous diseases, chronic weaknesses, ulcers, skin eruptions, piles, &c., there is no doubt. In fact it seems evident from the big stir created amongst specialists, that THERAPION is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. It is of course impossible to tell sufferers all we should like to tell them in this short article, but those who would like to know more about this remedy that has effected so many—we might almost say, miraculous cures, should send addressed envelope for FREE book to Dr. Le Clerc Med. Co., Haverstock Road, Hampstead, London, Eng. and decide for themselves whether the New French Remedy "THERAPION" No. 1, No. 2 or No. 3 is what they require and have been seeking in vain during a life of misery, suffering, ill health and unhappiness. Therapion is sold by druggists or mail $1.00. Fougera Co., 90 Beekman St., New York.

FIGHT ON HOME RULE

DEMONSTRATION AT PORTADOWN SAVORED SOMEWHAT OF MILITARY STYLE.

20,000 ARE PROTESTERS.

Covenant to Be Signed Saturday—Royal Troops Ready for Action in Case Trouble Is Started.

Portadown, Ireland, Sept. 27.—The Ulster campaign took on a militant attitude when 20,000 orangemen and unionists assembled to register their protest against home rule.

From the moment Sir Edward Carson, the unionist leader who came here from Belfast, alighted at the station, where he was received with a guard of honor, until the procession arrived at the grounds where the chief demonstration was held, everything savored of military style and discipline.

It was not permissible to carry arms; so the unionist club men bore dummy rifles, but handled them as though they were real.

Later Sir Edward Carson, standing at the foot of the statue of the notable unionist leader, Colonel Saunderson, witnessed the march past of 5,000 men with dummy artillery and a mounted ambulance corps. The whole display was proof that active drilling has been going on for some weeks.

The speeches at the demonstration, which was attended by Lord Londonderry, Sir John Lonsdale and other prominent unionists, breathed a strong fighting spirit.

Trouble Is Feared.

Belfast. -- Regiments of Highland light infantry and Scottish borderers will be drafted into Belfast in anticipation of trouble Saturday, Ulster day, when the covenant in defiance of home rule is to be signed by Ulsterites. The Royal Irish Rifles, already stationed here, are confined to barracks in readiness for emergency. More than a thousand members of "Young Citizens Volunteers of Ireland" were enrolled. The new organization is to assist when called upon by the civil authorities in the maintenance of peace.

The demonstration at Portadown was one of the most remarkable of the campaign.

MARCONI INJURED.

Discoverer of Wireless in Auto Smash-up in Italy.

Spezia, Italy, Sept. 27—William Marconi, of wireless fame, was injured in an automobile accident near Borghetto in the valley of the Vara river.

While the extent of his injuries have not been entirely disclosed he was brought to a hospital in this city suffering from a wound of the right eye and his right cheek and temple were badly bruised. He also was severely bruised about the body.

Mr. Marconi was motoring with his wife, and shortly after passing Borghetto in turning a sharp curve his machine came into collision with an automobile which was proceeding from Genoa. Both cars were overturned. Mrs. Marconi was not injured.

Taft Men Bolt Convention.

Sacramento, Cal., Sept. 27.—Exhausted by two days of almost continuous debate and uncertainty, three California state conventions are still in session hoping to conclude their business at any moment. In the main, all three had followed closely the lines laid down for them. The Progressives controlled the Republican convention by 88 to 13. Supporters of Taft bolted and organized separately, refusing to recognize as Republicans any electors not pledged to the Republican nominees.

"HUSBAND FAIR" BIG EVENT

Really the Ceremony of the Year in Quaint Belgian Village of Ecaussines.

Brussels, Belgium.—The tenth annual "husband fair" of the quaint little village of Ecaussines, situated a few miles from the Belgian capital, was held recently.

Just about a decade ago the maidens of the town resolved to take active steps to remedy the serious falling off in the number of eligible young bachelors. Believing in the well-known "feed the wretch" principle, they organized a breakfast, consisting chiefly of those dainty little cakes for which the Belgians are noted, washed down with delicious coffee and fresh cream. All the girls of the town club together to pay the cost of the breakfast, the excursions, and the ball which terminates the eventful day's proceedings.

Street of Ecaussines.

At nine o'clock in the morning sprightly young bachelors arrive from all parts of the kingdom by train and proceed direct to the town hall, where they sign their names in the "Golden Book" of the "Girls' Marriage Society." Half an hour later they are served with breakfast by the young ladies, who are headed by their own elected "presidente." The ice now being to some extent broken, the young men and maidens set off to visit the quarries and the fine old church of which the inhabitants are justly proud.

Naturally the young ladies lead the way, but they often cast furtive glances at the crowds of young men who follow with great docility. At half-past eleven a visit is made to the old fifteenth century castle, which affords excellent opportunities for bringing the young people a little closer together.

At noon everybody goes to lunch—the men to restaurants and the girls to their homes. The latter tell their anxious parents about the morning's happenings.

Lunch must be finished by half-past one, as this is the time fixed for the official reception of the bachelors by the young ladies. The "presidente" makes a speech in which she offers a hearty welcome to the young men, and extols the charms of married life with the wife of one's choice. A blare of trumpets signals the end of her discourse, and dancing now begins in every available open space, or in the town hall if the weather is unfavorable. The young couples sort themselves out, and a number of engagements, followed by happy marriages, forms a fitting conclusion to the picturesque "Husband Fair" of Ecaussines.

SELF-SUPPORT FOR BLIND

Maine School to Pay Them for Work at Trades—Will Make Brooms and Weave Rugs.

Portland, Me.—If the plan which Millard W. Baldwin, the new head of the Maine School for the Blind in this city, is to put into operation when the next term of the school opens proves a success there will be no blind person buried in a papuper's grave or go to a hospital as a charity patient in the future.

This school is an industrial one, where the blind are taught to make brooms, cane chairs, weave rugs and other trades such as are adaptable to the blind. In the past those who went there have received no compensation for their labor. They were given their board and no more.

By Mr. Baldwin's plan each man and woman will be paid on the piece system. At the end of each week his or her board will be deducted. In addition a certain per cent., according to the amount earned, will be taken out and deposited to the earner's credit in a savings bank. So long as the blind person remains in the school this money cannot be drawn from the bank by him or her, except by the approval of the trustees of the school. In this way a fund will be created for each pupil for use in later life. Another feature which will be introduced in the school by the new superintendent is that of reading the newspapers to them. A certain hour will be designated, when all will gather in the big hall of the school and Mr. Baldwin will read the important news of the day to them.

Mr. Baldwin is a native of the State of New York and was for many years connected with the educational work of that state, both as a teacher and a supervisor of schools. For several years past he has been engaged in business in Maine, but was induced to take his present position because of a lifelong interest in the work of teaching those afflicted with loss of eyesight.

REGRET SUPERIOR RIOT AFFAIR

DULUTH MEN DECLARE NO SUCH SYMPATHY DESIRED.

Many Outsiders Injured, But None Fatally in Superior Rioting.

Duluth. — At a very recent meeting of the Duluth striking street car men, speakers deplored Thursday night's outbreak of destructive sympathy in Superior and it was stated that no such sympathy is desired by the car men. Duluth went through its fire of mob rule, declared the car men, without the sanction and against the wishes of the strikers.

Quiet prevails in Superior following Thursday night's wild outbreak. Cars were being run to all parts of the city without any active interference. The police and sheriff there are on the alert and the fire companies are relied upon to disperse with water any crowds the police cannot scatter.

It was declared by the Superior police that Thursday night's mob was the most destructive seen in the present car strike at the head of the lakes. Cars quickly were dismantled and Tower avenue was showered with broken glass, brass work and seats piled in gutters, testifying to the thoroughness of the mob's work on the cars.

Everything that could be broken was smashed. The strike breakers fled for their lives. Several attempted to hide under the car seats, but the seats were yanked from the floors. One strike breaker caught in a jam suffered the loss of an eye when a piece of glass was hurled at him.

Many outsiders were injured, but none fatally. Stones thrown at windows went through and hit the mob at the other side, which increased the fury of those struck and they redoubled their bombardment.

In Duluth strike breakers were noticed giving money to the strikers. The strike breakers professed sympathy with the old employes. The police department of Chicago has sent pictures here of men wanted in Chicago, stating that the men are believed to be strike breakers in Duluth.

OLE HAGEN FOUND.

Detectives Locate Spouse of Wells, Minn., Woman In South.

St. Louis, Missouri. — Private detectives from St. Louis brought here a man, said to be Ole Hagen, whose wife, Mrs. Anna Dahl Hagen, now a telephone operator at Wells, Minn., two months ago instituted suit against the Modern Brotherhood of America to collect $2,000 insurance carried by her husband, who has been missing since Dec. 26, 1903, and whom she believed dead.

The case bids fair to be of as much interest as the famous Kimmel case, which some months ago puzzled courts as to the question of identity. In both cases, men who were supposed to have been dead for some number of years, and who carried considerable insurance, stepped forth when relatives sought to collect that insurance and pressed their claims for identification.

Hagen was located near Meridian, Miss. Following a disagreement, it is said, with his wife nine years ago, he left home and was, the following year, heard from at Hot Springs, Ark., Montgomery, Ala., and Beamont, Texas. Since then his wife had not heard from him.

CAR SERVICE ORDERED.

Lack of Service Not for Want of Protection.

Duluth, Sept. 26.—Under an order of the district court the Duluth Street Railway company must resume full and adequate street car service. Judge Homer B. Dibell filed his decision in the city's mandamus suit against the street railway company to force a resumption of the old service such as was offered prior to the strike.

The company, the court holds, cannot be compelled to reinstate the strikers. Neither can the strikers be compelled to go to work for the company again.

If serious disorder breaks out again, Judge Dibell intimates that the railway company or the city has the right to reopen the proceedings.

Judge Dibell holds that the failure of the respondent to maintain service to accommodate the traveling public, and equivalent to the service maintained prior to Sept. 9, 1912, is not owing to wan of sufficient protection.

Serious Wreck Is Averted.

Winona. — An extra special passenger train composed of a Pullman sleeper and an express stock car, from Kasson to Chicago, ran into a switch point in the Northwestern yards and the engine left the rails, turned over on its side and tore up about 60 feet of the main line tracks. No one was injured. The fact that the train was a special and was running slowly ahead of the regular train undoubtedly prevented a disastrous wreck.

MINN. APPOINTMENTS.

Northern German Conference of the Methodist Church.

Menomonie, Wis.—The Northern German conference of the Methodist Episcopal church finished its work there. Bishop Quayle ordained Rev. G. A. Wolff as deacon and Rev. Gerd Bruns as elder. The bishop was assisted by the board of conference examiners and the superannuates.

Memorial services were held for Rev. Christian Nachtrieb of Minneapolis, Rev. Mr. Singenstrue of Morristown, Rev. H. Ziegler of Warrenton, Mo., and Dr. J. F. Froeschle of St. Paul.

The appointments for the ensuing year are: Minneapolis District: C. H. Sauter, superintendent; Ada and Averill, W. J. Grummelin; Arlington, F. Brinkman; Brownton, William G. Baab; Echo and Johnsonville, F. C. Schulz; Fairfax, J. Berger; Gardena and Movina, G. H. Bruns; Jordan, J. G. Sohm; Le Sueur, H. A. Potthoff; Mankato, G. A. Rabe; Minneapolis, Central church, C. L. Koerner; Washington, W. F. Koerner; Waseca, J. F. Steiner; Winona, W. F. Fritze.

NORTHWESTERN WRECK.

One Hurt When Mixed Train Jumps Track.

Winona.—While traveling at a speed of about forty miles an hour down a steep grade, the bare truck of a freight car, near the front of the Plainview branch of the regular mixed Northwestern train, became defective and derailed the car. It carried with it five other box cars and two passenger coaches and tore up the rails for fully 600 feet.

The engine and two box cars just behind it remained on the track, but three of the cars turned completely over and the passenger coaches were thrown at right angles with the roadbed. One passenger, Henry Engl of Elgin, was injured, but will probably recover.

Big Feeder for Coast Line.

Pipestone.—That officials of the Milwaukee road intend to make the southern Minnesota division one of the main routes for freight to the Pacific coast is no longer in doubt. For months gangs of men have been at work along the line west from Austin and the road has been placed in excellent shape for heavy traffic. At Jackson the roundhouse is to be enlarged by the addition of six new stalls. A new turntable will be put in and a new "Y" has just been built. New engines will also be brought to this division.

Finke to Be Opposed.

Pipestone.—In spite of the rumor that the republicans would have no fight in this legislative district if either Finke or Thorson were nominated at the primaries over Harrison White, it now develops that the prohibitionists are to carry the legislative fight to the polls in November and that Rev. H. N. Hanson will make an aggressive campaign against A. C. Finke, the republication nominee. Finke has been known as a prohibition republican, and it was generally thought his nomination would mean the withdrawal of Rev. Mr. Hanson.

Judge Collins Is Stricken.

Minneapolis. — Loren W. Collins, former judge of the state supreme court, G. A. R. veteran and one of the best known men in Minneapolis, is critically ill.

$25,000 for Inspection.

Minneapolis. — The city board of tax levy tentatively allowed an appropriation of $25,000 for the extension of medical inspection in the city schools.

Survives 6,000 Volt Shock.

Winona. — Mr. George Vader, of Cass City, Michigan, a lineman in the employ of the Tri-State Telephone company, was engaged in tieing wires at the tip of a 80-foot pole in the east end when his head came in contact with an electric light wire, carrying 6,000 volts. His leg touched a telephone wire, his body thus making a perfect link in grounding the current. He remained unconscious for an hour, but was not seriously injured.

In Minnesota.

Important Happenings of the Week Briefly Told.

St. Paul. — Minnesota has 21,218 automobiles listed for taxation.

Winona.—Rev. Father William Lette of St. Joseph's church in Winona in 1864, is the guest of Rev. Father John Meier.

Pipestone.—Walter, the 3-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Max Vogt, who reside on a farm near Lake Okabena, was drowned.

Deerwood.—Louis Reid the thirteen-year-old son of Dr. William Reid, was shot in the arm by his playmate, Frank Grey.

Owatonna.—The annual convention of the Interdenominational Missionary society of Minnesota will be held in Owatonna, Oct. 9, 10 and 11.

Jackson.—Thomas Clipperton, an old soldier, was fatally injured and his wife and sister badly bruised in a runaway accident near here.

Rochester.—During a storm lightning struck six stacks of oats on the Frank Hughes farm west of Eyota, this county, setting fire to them.

Minneapolis, Minn.—The ten Taft electors have been named by the republican state committee to fill the vacancies made through resignations.

Jackson.—After a series of evangelistic meetings lasting three months, the Seventh Day Adventists baptized eight converts in the Des Moines river here.

New Ulm, Minn.—Charles Silverson, sixty-two years of age, president of the Eagle Roller Mill company, and former mayor of this city, is dead after a lingering illness.

Winona.—H. L. Brown of Dresbach holds the record for snake killing in Winona county. He has just been paid a bounty of $63.50 for killing 127 rattlesnakes in this county.

Caledonia.—Over eighty experienced farmers have been selected by the county commissioners to attend the conservation and agricultural development congress at Minneapolis on Nov. 19.

Pipestone.—John Forrest, who is employed with a threshing outfit, received a blow on the head while at work around the machine, and it is feared he has suffered a fractured skull.

St. Paul.—P. M. Ringdale, Democratic candidate for governor, will not resign as chairman of the board of control, but during the time he spends campaigning he will not draw any salary.

White Earth.—An officer, Sergeant Toliaferro Clark of the United States marine service is expected here soon to look after the health conditions of the Chippewa Indians of Minnesota.

Duluth. — Practically all evidence of violence has ceased in connection with the street railway strike. The small boys who have been throwing stones at passing cars have quit the practice.

Pillager.—Fire late Sunday night destroyed the saloon of Anderson & McCabe, at Sylvan, including the hotel furnishings, just moved in from Brainerd. Loss, $2,500. The fire is said to have been caused by incendiaries.

Winona.—Crossing the street in front of his home, John Borowski, 4 years old, was struck and run over by an auto, driven by Mrs. J. E. Burke. The boy's leg was broken and his body and head bruised. His condition is serious.

Washington, D. C., Sept. 25.—Orders were issued at the navy department assigning the Duluth naval militia to the battleship Wisconsin for the review in New York harbor. The militia will leave Duluth October 10 and will be away about 10 days.

Mason City, Iowa, Sept. 26.—J. E. Stiles, postmaster of Wells, Minn., passed through this city, returning from St. Louis, where he went to identify the long lost Ole Hagen. He was positive in his identification. Both men recognized each other and talked over old times. Hagen disappeared from Wells nine years ago, owing to domestic troubles. Mrs. Hagen had presented her death claim for $2,000.

Minneapolis.—Otto Meyer, the Minneapolis musician mentioned in the dispatch from Denver concerning the death of James Cooper Wheeler, who opposed Mr. Meyer as beneficiary of the estate of Miss Wheeler, the daughter, declared that he knew little concerning the case. "I left Denver a few days after the funeral of Miss Wheeler," he said, "and have not kept in touch with the legal aspects of the case, having turned that part over to a firm of lawyers in Denver.

Le Sueur Center.—Henry Scheffert, who was indicted for assault in the first degree at the February term of court, pleaded guilty and was given an indeterminate sentence, to be determined by the board of control, not to exceed ten years. Scheffert was indicted at this term of court on a like charge for attempting to shoot his former wife. Scheffert entered the home of his divorced wife's parents last fall and attempted to kill his divorced wife and her mother.

Lakefield.—The nineteenth annual convention of the Jackson County Sunday School association will be held at Alpha October 5 and 6. The principal speakers will be Alfred Day, Syracuse, N. Y.; County Attorney Mansfield and County Superintendent J. B. Arp. Mrs. J. A. Mansfield, of Lakefield, will have charge of the music.

Willmar.—W. G. Mapes, who has held the position of relief agent on the Great Northern road and made this city his headquarters, has been promoted to traveling auditor and will [illegible]

Leaving out of consideration the merits or otherwise of the executive order placing fourth class postmasters on the civil service list, politicians will quite likely see in the order the defeat of the present administration. If they are politicians of the pie counter variety they will be certain to see this. They will be unable to explain the surrender of this vast patronage upon any other assumption.—Dispatch.

Bert Norby of this city secured the contract for the construction of the road, his bid being 19½ cents per yard for the work. Jenson & Sons of this city secured the contract for the hauling and laying of the gravel at the rate of 58c for the first mile, $1 for the second mile, $1.50 for the third mile, and $2 for the fourth mile. It is figured that the longest haul at any one point in the road will be four miles. Mr. Norby expects to start in on his part of the contract by October 1 and will probably be able to complete the first five miles this fall. He has until January 1, 1914, to complete the contract. As fast as he gets a part of the road finished according to his contract the gravel will be put on and the road opened for traffic.

This road is the first of its kind in the state and the preliminary work has been no very small item. The road is constructed along the line followed in the digging of a county ditch. The state pays one-half of the cost of its construction, the county pays one-fourth, and the farmers whose lands will be benefited pay the balance in annual installments. The road will run from the river just north of the city due east for about twenty miles. It will provide one of the best rural highways in the state and in addition to the many ditch roads will furnish a fine road from this city to the eastern end of the county. In all directions from this road, there are other good county and ditch roads and as soon as it is turned over to the public, will provide the means by which every farmer living north of the river come to this city on a good level modern highway.

The road will cost approximately $1900 to the mile, and in its construction 112,000 yards of excavating will have to be done. The road does not start from the river, but from a point about a mile east. The part of the road between the west end of the Elwell road and the river will, however, be put into first class condition, and when it is done one of the worst pieces of highway in the state will be no more. Today many farmers residing east of this city go to towns on the Soo line to do their trading, simply because they find that the roads to this city are impassible a greater portion of the time. This is a condition that exists in most counties of northern Minnesota, and as soon as the Elwell road is proved practical, it is safe to assume that there will be considerable more business coming to towns that deserve it. The commissioners of Pennington county who have labored hard and faithfully to secure this road are to be complimented, and the highway will deserve to be called a monument to the memory of the men who were instrumental in having it constructed.—Thief River Falls Times.

Wolf Raisers Successful

According to official reports the state of Minnesota paid bounties for the scalps of 472 full grown wolves and 100 cubs during three months of early winter. The state treasury suffered to the extent of $3,840, which was paid over to those bringing the hides, which were burned in the furnaces of the several county court houses where the money was paid. After all, a full grown wolf does not do as much harm as poor beer. To be sure of something beneficial, always use golden grain belt beers at home or abroad. Alex Thompson, agent, Crookston.

Council Proceedings

Special meeting of the village council of the village of St. Hilaire held Sept. 19, 1912, for the purpose of considering the bids for bonds.

The clerk reported that there was one bid to consider, that of C. L. Hanson of Thief River Falls.

C. L. Hanson offered to take the $4,000 bonds at par with 6 per cent interest and offered a premium of $50.00.

On motion duly made and carried the bid of C. L. Hanson was accepted.

There being no further business the meeting adjourned.

J. C. DAHL, Pres.
DR. C. SWANSON, Clerk.

LAZY JOY FOR LITTLE WORK

Six Months' Labor Enables Them to Loll in Indolence For a Year and a Half—Combing the Islands For Men For the Sugar Plantations.

A happy-go-lucky, stand up and fall down, genial, inconsequential spirit animates the West Indian negroes in their labors and in their begging. From the sweating toilers on the dock at Macoris loading sugar into the steamers, with their warning cry, "Bee-low!" to the men in the hold, to the grinning boys hauling their fishing boats up on the beach at Dominica, they live from day to day and take no thought of the morrow. A West Indian negro with $50 will live for a year and never do a stroke of work.

And why not? His living costs him only 9 cents a day. He has his little cabin for the occupancy. A mango tree grows in his yard, and he can pick plantains by the road at will. If he is too lazy to bake 5 cents will buy bread for the family for the day, and a few cents more will buy a dozen small fish and one large one. A single garment does for the women, and $5 will clothe the man for a year, while the pickaninnies run as God made them.

The West Indies are the paradise of the happy loafer. Every year the islands are combed from end to end for hands to work the great sugar plantations in Santo Domingo, and at that the negroes must often be practically kidnaped to get them on the boats.

In November of each year the sugar boats, little sloops and schooners that spend the remainder of the year trading among the islands get into the Santo Domingo negro trade. Their captains and supercargoes, when they have them, and the owners go up and down the islands telling the negroes that on a certain day the vessel will sail for Santo Domingo and take all who want to go to work on the sugar plantations.

Take the little island of St. Martin's for illustration. For a week the island is combed, and on the appointed day a dozen sloops and schooners are crowded into Marigot bay. The night before the negroes have begun to stream into the little town that sleeps through the year, waiting for this one day to bring it to life. Boards are laid across boxes, and rum and whisky are set out to arouse the negroes to the pitch that will carry them out to the vessels bound for the plantations.

All day the men stream into the town, traveling barefooted along the sandy roads, swept in by the sailors, singing their song of riches to be had for the asking. Ahead of the men walk their women, toting heavy boxes on their heads, while the men are dressed in their best, with a cocky straw hat perched on one ear, swinging a dandy cane and carrying their shoes in their hands. At the outskirts of the town they put on their shoes and swing gayly up to the open air bars on the beach.

The women lug the big boxes down to the beach and wail at being left alone until they, too, become filled with the excitement of the scene and urge their men folks on. The men hang back and laugh and drink and deny that they are going.

"Is you goin', Big Tawm?"

"Naw, Ah ain' goin'. Ah jus' come tuh see."

"Yas, yo' is goin', Big Tawm. Git in dat boat."

"Come on heah, boy. Ya, ha!"

And all the time the rowboats, loaded to the gunwales, are plying back and forth between the shore and the sloops. By sundown the beach is swept clean and six little sloops and a schooner make sail and drift out of the harbor on a dying breeze, loaded down with a thousand black men and women, who will wake in the morning with a raging thirst. Then woe be to the captain who has not filled his water casks, for there is sure to be at least one body to be given to the sharks after the fight around the butts!

When the vessels drop anchor off Macoris the plantation foremen come off and look over the cargoes and pay the shipmasters $2.50 each for passage money for the negroes. Then the blacks are herded ashore and are credited with 30 cents a day for a month for working from sunrise to sunset in the cane fields. By that time the $2.50 passage money is paid back. Then they receive their 30 cents a day in cash for the next six months until the cutting and grinding season is over, when the sloops show up again and take them to their homes for $2.50 each, paid in advance.

The foremen collect from the plantation owners 63 cents a day each for pay for the black hands, but with their share of the money the negroes can live for a year and a half before they have to think of doing another day's work. And they do it. Year after year the trade is plied, and the islands are combed for men for the plantations, and year after year the negroes return home to eighteen months of lazy joy.—New York Tribune.

Groundhog.

Teacher was telling her class little stories in natural history, and she asked if any one could tell her what a groundhog was. Up went a little hand, waving frantically.

"Well, Carl, you may tell us what a groundhog is."

The Harder Part.

"It is hard to teach an old dog new tricks," quoted the wise guy.

"Yes, it's hard to find the new tricks," added the simple mug.—Philadelphia Record.

Courtship in the North.

The old Eskimo lit a cup of walrus oil and peered over the sealskin curtain.

"Aurora," he called, sharply, "is that young man down there yet?"

"Yes, pa," answered the Eskimo belle.

"Well, I want you to cut him out, understand?"

"Er—you'll have to do it yourself, pa. He has been here so long he is frozen to the snow, settee."—Success Magazine.

LOSE JOY OF LIFE

HUSBANDS AND CHILDREN NOT FOR MILL GIRLS.

Have Little Choice But to Become Old Maids—One Girl Because She Misunderstood the Meaning of License.

There were four Carroll girls, all over 18. Their father, a small, white-haired, dignified man, was in the room and smiled a timid welcome. The girls were still in black for the mother who died a year before, says Rheta Dorr in the Broadway Magazine. "It is much harder for us now that mother's gone," said Sallie Carroll. "But she made us promise on her deathbed that we'd keep things just as she always had and we're certainly bound to do it. We all work in the mill. We are weavers, except Nannie there, the youngest. She is a warper. We don't let father work any more. We make enough for us all and him, too, and somebody's just got to be at home to look out for things or else where's your home?"

"Why do poor folks have such big families?" demanded Nannie Carroll, indignantly. "They've got no business to. Why do poor folks marry at all?"

"Don't you expect to?" I asked.

The faces of all the girls were sober. "We can't figure out that there's any choice for us between breaking up our home and being old maids," said the oldest Carroll girl. "It may be a disgrace to be an old maid. People say it is, but at least we are comfortable and happy. Why, what would become of father if we married?"

I instantly thought of a girl I knew in Fall River. She was a weaver, too, and earned $11 a week, which made her an object of desire to more than one young man in the town. But at 25 she was still single. In the course of a confidential talk I asked her why she had never married and she told me with much laughter the reason.

"When I was 18," she said, "I was foolish enough to fall in love with the timekeeper in the clothroom at the iron works mills. He was better looking then than he is now. Well, he asked me to marry him and I said I would. Then he said we ought to go and get the license. 'What license?' I asked, flaming mad. You see, we girls had a dog we were awfully fond of and one day the poundkeeper came around and said we'd have to take out a license or he would kill the dog. So we skimped and saved and went without carfare until we had enough to pay for the dog's license.

"Well, somehow, the word license seemed to me to be connected with a dog. I didn't know that people had to have licenses. I told my young man that if he couldn't marry me without a license, as if he were paying for a dog, I wouldn't marry him. He argued and argued and we both got madder and madder, and finally we broke it off. Mother was glad enough. She always hates to have one of us marry. Less money carried home, you see." She added thoughtfully: "Of course, I was a silly goose, but somehow, when I see him with his wife, she looking ten years older than she is, with care and raising children whose only future is in the mills, I think a marriage license and a dog license are not so very different."

TREASURE PROTECTED BY MUD.

Effort to Be Made to Reach Stored Riches in India.

A good story of hidden treasure comes from India on the authority of the late tutor to the heir apparent of Bhopal.

In the hills of Amarkantak, in the central provinces, close to the sources of the Narbada and the Son, there stands an old deserted fort called Ran Bakalli, wherein, so tradition says, are collected vast stores of treasure and jewels formerly the property of the Hindu rajahs of the country, but for ages no one has been able to gain access to the fort because it is surrounded by miles of impassable mud.

The late Sir Richard Temple when lieutenant governor of Bengal tried to reach it, but his elephant stuck deep in the mire and he was forced to abandon the quest. It is now suggested that a syndicate should be formed to exploit this treasure house by means of balloons, and a Calcutta capitalist has promised a large subscription toward the enterprise.

The question which puzzles most people is how this ocean of mud ever came to invest the fort. An effort will be made to enlist the co-operation of the maharajah of Rewa, the ruler of the district, who is said to be an enlightened prince, though how it comes that he has not already taken steps to solve the mystery is not stated.

INTO SERE AND YELLOW LEAF.

Eighteenth Century Women Seem to Have Willingly Settled Down.

In an English novel of the eighteenth century the author thus refers to a certain woman: "She had reached the age of 35, an age beyond which no woman can hope either to feel or inspire deep affection." In one of George Meredith's early novels he refers to a character as a woman "on the criminal side of 30." A Boston woman in the last century, after reaching the age of 30, put on, over her abundant natural hair, a false front and a cap. These were the outward and visible signs of the matronly maturity she had reached. She gave up at the same time all the gayer forms of social intercourse. She confined herself thereafter to the mild and elderly variety. She had "come out" into Boston society at 15. After two years of social gayeties she had married. At 30 she was the mother of eight children. She had lived the active part of her life. In accordance with the conventions of her time she settled down to a life of vegetating domesticity. She was not an exception. She was the normal woman of her day, registering its customs just as a good thermometer registers the temperature.—Appleton's Magazine.

George William Sellers, the western cricketer, described in Chicago his attempt to teach cricket to the men on his Indiana estate.

"Cricket is, of course, a more leisurely game than baseball," said Mr. Sellers. "We played it on my place in the proper leisurely manner, and all my men seemed pleased. Our first match was with Concord.

"One of my men—his name is John—seemed particularly pleased. John did full justice, before the match, to the lunch served in the marquee on the lawn. He enjoyed, too, the meat tea that pleasantly interrupted the afternoon's play. At each inning he was on hand when the drinks and cigars and sandwiches were passed about.

"During the open-air dinner that wound up the first day's play, I turned to John and said:

"'Well, old man, what do you think of cricket?'

"'Mr. Sellers,' said he, 'it would be a grand game if it wasn't for all this [illegible]

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making the Blade worth many times the price of subscription.—one dollar a year.

LOMBARD PIANOS
The Pianos With The Sweetest Tone

Praised by Press and Pulpit

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Sieker, [illegible] Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairdy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Patsod, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

SUFFERED EVERYTHING

For Fourteen Years. Restored To Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Elgin, Ill.—"After fourteen years of suffering everything from female complaints, I am at last restored to health. "I employed the best doctors and even went to the hospital for treatment and was told there was no help for me. But while taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to improve and I continued its use until I was made well."—Mrs. Henry Leiseberg, 743 Adams St.

Kearneysville, W. Va.—"I feel it my duty to write and say what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered from female weakness and at times felt so miserable I could hardly endure being on my feet.

"After taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and following your special directions, my trouble is gone. Words fail to express my thankfulness. I recommend your medicine to all my friends."—Mrs. G. B. Whittington.

The above are only two of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which show clearly what great things Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound does for those who suffer from woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Tea's Conquest of Rome.

Of all the conquerors that have come to Rome no one has gained such a complete victory as tea has won in the Italian capital. Twenty years ago the British and American tourists who came to Rome were catered to in the matter of tea in a rather shamefaced manner in the strangers' quarter near the Piazza di Spagna, and "English Tea Rooms" was the legend to be seen in a few windows hard by Cook & Sons' offices.

Nowadays the palm lounges of the Grand and the Excelsior hotels at tea time are two of the sights of Rome, for all Roman society drinks tea abroad in the afternoons, and there are as many uniforms at 5 o'clock in the big hotels as there are at sundown on band days on the Pincian hill. All the big pastry cooks' shops in the Corso and the other principal streets now have "Afternoon Tea" in gold letters on their plate glass windows.

CAREFUL DOCTOR

Prescribed Change of Food Instead of Drugs.

It takes considerable courage for a doctor to deliberately prescribe only food for a despairing patient, instead of resorting to the usual list of medicines.

There are some truly scientific physicians among the present generation who recognize and treat conditions as they are and should be treated, regardless of the value to their pockets. Here's an instance:

"Four years ago I was taken with severe gastritis and nothing would stay on my stomach, so that I was on the verge of starvation.

"I heard of a doctor who had a summer cottage near me—a specialist from N. Y.—and as a last hope, sent for him.

"After he examined me carefully he advised me to try a small quantity of Grape-Nuts at first, then as my stomach became stronger to eat more.

"I kept at it and gradually got so I could eat and digest three teaspoonfuls. Then I began to have color in my face, memory became clear, where before everything seemed a blank. My limbs got stronger and I could walk. So I steadily recovered.

"Now after a year on Grape-Nuts I weigh 153 lbs. My people were surprised at the way I grew fleshy and strong on this food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

"There's a reason."

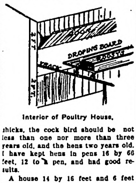
Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest. Adv.

POULTRY

FOR BEGINNER IN POULTRY

Two Dozen Hens Are Plenty to Start With for One With No Experience—American Breed Best.

For one who has had no experience with poultry two dozen hens are plenty to begin with. It is better to begin with one of the American or Asiatic breeds. The Mediterranean breeds are weak when small because of feathering so fast. Free range is best, writes William Zimmerman of Selma, Okla., in the Farmers' Mail and Breeze. If they must be put in pens, 12 hens and a cock to each pen is about right. For good, strong chicks, the cock bird should be not less than one nor more than three years old, and the hens two years old. I have kept hens in pens 16 by 66 feet, 12 to a pen, and had good results.



Interior of Poultry House.

A house 14 by 16 feet and 6 feet high at the eaves is large enough for three dozen hens. I am keeping about 100 in one of that size. My house is built facing the south and all the south side is made of lath one inch apart. The east, west and north sides are boxed tight, but there is a door across the north end for a cleaning off the sliding drop board. I use no curtain in front of the roosts, and I have no frozen combs or sick poultry.

As a feed to make hens lay there is nothing better than wheat and Kafir in equal parts. If the hens are kept in pens feed all they will eat. Throw the grain in straw or hay. Don't dose your hens to make them lay, and if onie gets sick, separate it from the flock.

KEEPING AND STORING EGGS

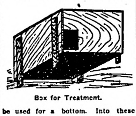
Well Dissolved Solution of Water, Slaked Lime and Salt Is Recommended—Don't Crack.

There are many plans suggested for keeping and storing eggs, but a very simple one appears in a recent exchange: To every three gallons of water add one pound of fresh slaked lime and one-half pint of salt. Have it well dissolved. Drop in your eggs one at a time, but mind do not crack them. If you wish to keep them one or two years you can do so. But you must use them as soon as taken out or they will spoil. When you put in all you wish, take a thin piece of board and put on top, and on that put a little salt and lime that the top may be as strong as the bottom. If these are kept at sea and in different climates, why not keep on icnd in a cool cellar? Should you wish to keep to transport, dissolve sufficient gum shellac to make a thin varnish in alcohol, let them dry, then after giving each egg a coat pack them in bran or sawdust. When wanted wash off the varnish and they are ready to be cooked.

TREATMENT FOR BROODY HEN

Unique Plan Is to Provide Wooden Boxes With Screen Bottoms—Fowl Soon Cools Off.

A unique plan for curing broody hens is carried out by making a few boxes with screen bottoms with legs attached to keep the box up from the ground and allow free circulation of air, says the Iowa Homestead. Common window screen is all that should be used for a bottom. Into these place the old hatchers until they give up hatching. Several days in such airy quarters cool them off and they go to laying.



Box for Treatment.

Kerosene.

Kerosene is sure death to lice if applied as a spray. Spray the walls, roosts, corners and nestings and the oil will kill all vermin. Sprinkle the bottom of the nests with it and cover with a heavy coating of straw.

Kerosene is also very valuable in preventing and curing scale disease in fowls. If it is used freely on the roosts once a week you will have no scaly legs. It promptly destroys the red louse that preys on the fowls at night, sapping their very life blood and retires to the roost poles during the daytime.

Stops Work of Lice.

The poultry department of Ohio Agricultural college is recommending a lice powder which it is said poultrymen will find effective in ridding the poultry of parasites.

Directions for making the powder are: Put 2½ pounds plaster of paris into a pan. Then mix ¾ pint gasoline and ¼ pint cresol. Stir the plaster of paris while adding the liquid. When ready the mixture should be rather crumbly. After drying it should be sifted, when it will be ready for use.

POINTERS FOR DUCK RAISERS

Pekin Is a Great Layer, but Does Not Possess Firmness of Flesh of the Aylesbury.

The market price for duck feathers is about half that for goose feathers.

In France the term "duckling" is applied to birds hatched the previous season, and not the present year, as in this country.

In England it is claimed that while the Pekin is not a great layer, it has not the fineness of flesh nor the early maturity of the Aylesbury.

The Cayuga, the only American variety, furnishes a meat of fine flavor, but on account of its black plumage makes a very unattractive appearance when dressed. The French epicures greatly appreciate the high quality of the Cayuga. This is about the only American product that we are not overly proud of.

The great secret of fattening ducklings is to begin early, and this can only be attained by keeping the stock duck young. In practice it is not profitable to keep the stock ducks more than two years.

COMBAT POULTRY-YARD FOES

Great Amount of Loss and Much Annoyance Caused by Insect Parasites—How to Control.

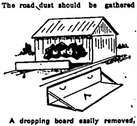
(By GEORGE M. TURPIN.)

Insect parasites are the cause of a great deal of annoyance and loss to poultrymen. Some essential measures for their control are:

Have the poultry houses separated from all other farm buildings.

Have all of the interior fixtures of the poultry houses, such as roostpoles, nest boxes, feed hoppers, dropping boards, etc., removable so that every part of the interior can be readily cleaned and sprayed.

Keep a good dust bath to which the fowls may have access at all times of the day. Common road dust with fine ashes and powdered sulphur or air-slacked lime added is excellent. The road dust should be gathered during dry weather for use during the winter.



A dropping board easily removed, cleaned, sanded and replaced without going into the hen house.

A. Dropping board proper.

Spray the coops and fixtures with a good whitewash twice each year, adding two pounds of salt and one-fourth gallon of crude carbolic acid to every fifty gallons of the spraying mixture.

Setting hens should have access to a good dust bath such as mentioned above. If lice are found later on the chicks, rub lard in the feathers of the head and throat, and in bad cases, also under the wings.

TURKEYS THRIVE ON ALFALFA

Two Hundred Acres of Land in Nebraska Utilized by Ranchman for Breeding of Birds.

A Nebraska ranchman has more than 200 acres of wild land, too dry for cultivation without irrigation, and makes a good living by raising turkeys.

A small creek runs through the place and along its sides grow some cottonwood trees.

About 200 acres of this farm has been sown to alfalfa, and in spite of the absence of much rain it thrives very well.

The old ranch owner raises from 800 to 1,200 turkeys every year, and about the only care he gives them is to feed them alfalfa.

Chicks on Restricted Runs.

When chicks must be crowded together in small quarters and in small runs they will need much more care than those having more range. Extra care will go a long way towards making up for lack of room, but it is risky business and plenty of room should be given if possible.

Giving Grass to the Hens.

One way of supplying poultry in confinement with green food through the summer is to give them clippings from the lawn. Even an ordinary sized lawn will suffice if only just enough is cut each day to meet the fowl's wants—that is, what they will eat up clean—and no more.

POULTRY NOTES

Desirable eggs are said to weigh about 24 ounces to the dozen.

If hens develop the feather-pulling habit send them to market at once.

It is as an egg producer that the Indian Runner duck has gained the most fame.

Poultry balance their own rations if they are given a wide variety of feeds to select from.

Eggs that cost 25 cents per dozen will bring $7 to $8 when hatched and sold as broilers.

A hen over two years old is fit only for the pot and to mother chickens. She is past her profitable laying days.

All young stock on hand now that you do not intend to keep through the coming winter should be marketed.

After hens are through laying they should be sold to the butcher unless they are needed for breeders next season.

Goose eggs require from twenty-eight to thirty-two days to hatch, according to variety and method of hatching.

Hens, when thye cease laying, fatten very easily and a fat hen is a thrifty candidate for all kinds of poultry diseases.

Eric the Red, the Scoundrel Who May Have Caused America's Discovery

ERIC THE RED

A NORSE pirate — fiery of hair and temper; shaggy, gigantic, cruel — committed a murder that led indirectly to America's discovery. Here is the story:

Eric the Red was a Viking; chief of a band of sea robbers and all around ruffians, whom he held in check by a brutality even greater than their own. He was born in Norway about 950 A. D., and was the son of a Jarl, or Earl. In the intervals between his voyages of piracy he ruled a group of barren farms and fed at his table a throng of hard drinking, loud voiced Vikings who had sworn allegiance to him.

Laws were few in that land, and age of violence. Human life was cheap. Yet Eric committed a murder so revolting as to shock even the hardened Norsemen. To save his own life he was forced to flee from the country.

Homeless, an outlaw, a price on his head, Eric the Red sought for headquarters far enough from civilization to make a safe abiding place for him. He and his men scoured the northern seas in their serpent-prowed galleys, until at last, after doubling Cape Farewell, they came upon a vast tract of ground covered with high green grass, on which thousands of reindeer were feeding. Here Eric landed and founded a city. He named the country "Greenland." Rumors of its whereabouts had come to him from another Viking.

Nor was Greenland the only strange country of which wandering Vikings had told Eric. These sea robbers in their restless journeys in search of plunder were often swept out of all known routes by storms. More than one survivor of such voyages had spoken of having sighted a great land far to the westward.

Eric was uncertain how long Greenland might prove a safe asylum for him, and he was ever eager to find new haunts for loot and pillage. So he decided to explore this strange westward country and establish a colony there. In the year 1000 A. D., or thereabouts, he bade his son Lief to join in the expedition.

Lief was wellnigh as fiery and brutal as his father, but he had many finer qualities as well. He was high in the service of King Olaf of Norway and was known as "The King's Guardsman." His constant good fortune had also won for him the nickname of "Lief the Lucky." Like the rest of King Olaf's court, he had embraced Christianity, forswearing the heathen Norse gods and forcing his followers to do the same. Eric was furious at his son's conversion. A fierce quarrel arose between the two, but their differences were at last patched up and they made ready for their joint voyage of discovery.

As the Vikings hastened down to the waiting ships Eric rode at their head. His horse, according to the story, stumbled and threw him just as they reached the water's edge. To Eric's superstitious mind this seemed an omen of disaster. He refused to go on the expedition and sent Lief as its commander. This filled the Vikings with joy, for they hated Eric and loved his gallant son.

After a long sail westward Lief came to a gloomy, cloud-wrapped country (probably Newfoundland) and sailed southward looking for less forbidding shores. He found them. He is supposed to have landed somewhere along the southeastern New England coast. The place seemed a paradise to these men from the bleak north. The soil was rich and verdant. Wild grapes grew everywhere. Lief, because of the multitude of grapes, called the country "Vinland," or "Wineland."

Here he is supposed to have founded a colony before carrying back to Greenland the news of his wonderful discovery. Other Norse colonies are believed to have followed him to New England, but their fate and their very existence is shrouded in doubt.

Jonathan Wild, Founder of the "Thief Trust"

JONATHAN WILD was a thief who never stole, a business man with no legitimate business, a scoundrel who helped the law, and a man of the law who helped scoundrels. He was founder of one of the queerest monopoly on record—a "Thief Trust."

Wild was born in 1682. He was a Birmingham buckle-maker by trade and came to London as a young man to improve his fortune. A life of dissipation quickly landed him in prison for debt. There he stayed four years, becoming acquainted with almost every thief in London and gaining a strong influence over most of them. By the time he had scraped together enough money to buy his freedom he had already outlined his future career. He saw that crooks never really succeed in life. So he decided to stay "technically" honest, and to profit by others' crimes. Renting a low waterside tavern, he made friends with more outcasts and at last had a large enough following to take up the profession he had planned.

Calling to him a number of notorious thieves, Wild made them a little speech. He explained that the new laws had made life hard for robbers. Theft was not only a "hanging offense," but the receivers of stolen goods were so closely watched that they dared not do business. So he suggested an improvement on the old methods. Any one committing a theft was to come at once to Wild and tell all about it. Wild in turn was to get to the person robbed, and, on the latter's promise to ask no questions, was to offer to return the stolen articles—in payment of a substantial reward. This reward he would give to the thief in exchange for the plunder, keeping one-third as his own commission.

It was a simple arrangement. The victim would get back his property by paying a certain sum; the thieves would make more money than by dealing with regular "receivers" or "fences." Wild, with no danger to himself, would reap a tidy commission on every robbery.

From the first his business prospered. He himself stole nothing, nor did he in any way come within reach of the law. A house, for instance, would be robbed of $2,000 worth of valuables. Wild would go to the owner and tell him that for $600 he would find the lost goods. The money was paid and the goods were returned. Wild clearing $200 on the deal. The work was profitable to him and to the thieves alike. By the world at large he was regarded as a shrewd detective, who was singularly fortunate in tracing lost property. Most people were glad enough to get back their belongings without insisting on the thief's arrest. Wild grew rich, bought a big house and was highly respected. He even added smuggling as a "side line" to his business.

He managed to get thieves wholly in his power by hunting up evidence which (should he place it in the hands of the law) would hang them. By holding this threat over their heads, Wild made the great army of crooks give him slavish obedience and deal exclusively with him. It was a regular "Trust." Once in awhile some stubborn rogue would disobey an order or would refuse to dispose of his booty through the trust's agency. Then Wild, as a reputable citizen, would lay his evidence before the police and would help personally in the capture. Sometimes these arrested slaves of his would turn on him. His body, in fact, was covered with wounds, and in one tussle his skull was fractured. But these cases of rebellion were uncommon.

Robbery throve as never before. At last parliament was forced to pass a law making it a felony for any one to take money on pretense of restoring stolen goods unless he should also produce the thief. Wild was rich enough to have retired, but the spirit of graft was too strong for him. Hitherto he had been on the right side of the law. Now he found himself on the wrong side of it. He continued to wring thieves' ill-earned money from them and to betray such as failed to follow his orders. At last, in 1725, he was arrested, tried, convicted and sentenced to be hanged.

As the hangman's cart bore him to Tyburn (London's place of execution) the crowd mobbed him, yelling "Judas!" and stoning the trembling old rascal, leaving little work for the executioner to do when the cart at last reached Tyburn.

Threaded for the Season

Great Author, Confronted With Problem, Solved It in a Characteristic Way.

Henrik Ibsen, although not a man to be defeated by a difficult problem, faced one once that, according to Erik Lie in "The Reminiscences of Jonas Lie," puzzled him sorely. The amusing way in which he met it is characteristic.

Ibsen and Jonas Lie were both spending the summer at Berchtesgaden. Appearing one morning at Lie's house, Ibsen, with solemn countenance, begged for an interview with Mrs. Lie. Although somewhat mystified by Ibsen's strange manner, the lady gladly granted his request.

"Under no circumstances must your husband be disturbed," Ibsen began, when they were alone. "He had better know nothing at all about the matter. It's only a trifle that has been worrying me—a button has come off, and I have to sew it on again. I have bought the needle and thread—"

"But let me sew it on for you," interrupted Mrs. Lie, whose wonder had been steadily growing.

"No, no!" said Ibsen, hastily. "I should really rather do that myself."

"What do you wish of me, then?" the lady asked. She still could not understand why the poet should have consulted her upon this weighty affair.

"I only wanted to ask you to thread the needle. Again and again I have tried it, and the thread simply won't go in. I shall have to admit that it is an art I could never have believed so difficult."

Smiling, Mrs. Lie helped him out of his difficulty. A week later she asked him, as a joke, what luck he was having in threading his needle.

"I shan't have to trouble you again for your services," Ibsen answered, in his most serious manner. "You see, the needle is threaded now, and I took very good care that the thread should be long enough to last the whole summer."—Youth's Companion.

A CHECK TO RHEUMATISM

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Build Up the Blood and Overcome the Rheumatic Poisons.

Rheumatism defies any treatment that does not build up and purify the blood. The poisons of rheumatism are in the blood and it is only through the blood that the disease can be fought successfully.

Unless the blood is weak and impure, rheumatism cannot get a foothold. When it does the thin and impure blood is not strong enough to overcome the poisons alone. It must be strengthened and purified. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are the best blood-building medicine you can take. They make new blood with every dose and promptly check further progress of the disease. They make the blood so pure and strong that not the least trace of rheumatism remains.

Mr. A. Hamann, a farmer on R. F. D. No. 2, Eldridge, Iowa, says: "I used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People for indigestion and rheumatism from which I suffered for over six years. As these attacks came on every spring, I think they were caused by impure blood. The rheumatism was always more severe in my ankles and knees and especially in my arms, when I had been husking corn or working hard. The pains were so severe that I could hardly sleep at night. I used liniments of many kinds, but they didn't do more than drive the pain to some other part of the body and I did not get any relief from the doctor's medicine.

"When I read about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People in our weekly paper I made up my mind to try a medicine that had actually cured some one else. A few boxes cured me and I think so much of the pills that I keep them in the house to use as a tonic. My wife finds them strengthening and we think the pills are the best medicine for the blood."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are the blood's greatest aid in overcoming rheumatism, headaches, anæmia, chlorosis, and after-effects of the grip and fevers.

A valuable booklet, "Diseases of the Blood," will be sent upon request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes, $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Adv.

"The neighbor wrote back:

"'Friend Jones: I would be glad to lend you my saw, but same has just got stuck in a canteloupe.'"

HOW TO TREAT PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

For pimples and blackheads the following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores, the common cause of pimples, blackheads, redness and roughness, yellow, oily, mothy and other unwholesome conditions of the skin.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston."

A HIDDEN DANGER

It is a duty of the kidneys to rid the blood of uric acid, an irritating poison that is constantly forming inside.

When the kidneys fail, uric acid causes rheumatic attacks, headache, dizziness, gravel, urinary troubles, weak eyes, dropsy or heart disease.

Doan's Kidney Pills help the kidneys fight off uric acid—bringing new strength to weak kidneys and relief from backache and urinary ills.

1904 CONTRIBUTIONS

SHELDON SAYS ARCHBOLD, MORGAN, FRICK AND GOULD GAVE $100,000 EACH.

DIXON CRIES "UNFAIR."

Probers Deny Charge—Senator Tells of Amount Spent for Roosevelt Cause in 1912.

Washington, Oct. 4.—Four contributions of $100,000 each from John D. Archbold of the Standard Oil company, J. P. Morgan & Co., H. C. Frick and George J. Gould were made to the Republican national campaign fund of 1904, according to records of the late Cornelius N. Bliss which passed through the hands of George R. Sheldon, treasurer of the 1908 Republican committee who has just testified before the senate committee investigating campaign expenditures.

Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Bliss gave him a detailed statement of the 1904 funds; that he noted "these large contributions," and that he was positive no record appeared of the $100,000 Archbold contribution having been returned. With equal positiveness he swore that the records showed the disputed Edward H. Harriman fund of $240,000 had been received by Mr. Bliss for the New York Republican state committee, headed by B. B. Odell, Jr.

Mr. Sheldon's statements were made during a lull in a day of wrangling between Senator Joseph M. Dixon, manager of Colonel Roosevelt's present campaign, and members of the senate committee. Senator Dixon charged the committee with concentrating its activities upon the Roosevelt funds, and ignoring financial activities in behalf of all other candidates, Republican and Democratic alike.

Charge Is Denied.

Committee members heatedly denied this, declaring that arrangements for the investigation had been left entirely in the hands of Chairman Clapp, a strong supporter of the Progressive national candidate, and that managers for all candidates had been subpoenaed to testify.

J. P. Morgan will appear before the investigating committee at once to be questioned as to his financial participation in the 1904 or other national campaigns.

Based on demands made by Senator Dixon, Charles P. Taft may be called to testify as to his contributions this year in support of the president's campaign for renomination. Senator Dixon declared he had heard that the president's brother spent $600,000.

Published statements of Governor Wilson and Senator La Follette that they did not receive $70,000 contributions from Charles R. Crane, testified to Wednesday by E. H. Hooker, will result in the calling of Mr. Crane as a witness at an early date.

Senator Dixon accounted for over $96,000 more of Roosevelt funds used in the fight before the Republican national convention at Chicago. This was collected and expended by him personally, he said. He had kept no accurate records, he said, the money "going out as fast as it came in;" but over $52,000 was spent in the conduct of campaign activity from the Washington headquarters.

Names Heavy Contributors.

The fund handled by Senator Dixon was largely contributed by George W. Perkins, Frank A. Munsey and Dan R. Hanna. The senator said he tried to distribute the burden equally among the three men, and thought each had given about $25,000; while William Eno gave $10,000, and others smaller amounts.

This fund of $96,000 was in addition, he said, to the $163,000 handled by E. H. Hooker at New York for the city primary fight and the New York branch of the national Roosevelt committees and the $102,000 given by William Flinn in Pennsylvania. The amounts contributed by Mr. Perkins, Mr. Munsey and Mr. Hanna were also in addition to their contributions to the New York fund.

Cure Frauds to Be Denounced.

New York, Oct. 3.—From thousands of pulpits in all parts of the United States, fake cures for consumption will be exposed and denounced on Tuberculosis Day, Oct. 27. This is part of the program for the movement announced today by the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis. Literature giving information on fraudulent and alleged "cures" for consumption will be sent to clergymen all over the country, and an organized crusade against the traffic be instituted.

SNELLING IS INSPECTED.

Henry C. Stimson and Party Go Over Fort.

Minneapolis.—After a most rigid inspection of the pumping station, the officers' and men's quarters and the general condition of the buildings at Fort Snelling, Henry C. Stimson, secretary of war, and Lieut. Gen. Wood, chief of staff United States army, held a conference with Governor Eberhart, Congressman Stevens and various officers of the post at which the future of Fort Snelling was discussed. While Secretary Stimson would in no way commit himself concerning the probable action of the war department in connection with Fort Snelling, he did state that the government was not contemplating any radical move at the present time.

Congressman Stevens, of St. Paul, acted as spokesman in behalf of the citizens of the Twin Cities and declared that it was the duty of the United States government to maintain the army post on its present site, owing to the strategic situation it occupies in event of an invasion of an outside power. He also pointed out its advantages as a recruiting station and its influence on the national guard of both Minnesota and Wisconsin.

Congressman Stevens gave a brief history of Fort Snelling, reviewing the incidents that bind it close to the sentiments of citizens of the Twin Cities, and declared that the people here liked the military aspect and the military atmosphere which the post had established. He also reviewed the railroad facilities, which he declared were outrageous at present, and promised to take the matter up with the interstate commerce commission, the state commission and the civic and commercial bodies of the Twin Cities and assured Secretary Stimson that the freight rates into the post would be adjusted in the near future.

In answer to the plea made by Congressman Stevens, Secretary Stimson said that, in regard to the probable disposition of Fort Snelling, he could give no answer at present, as the present tour was simply for the purpose of getting a line on the situation as a whole and that the war department had contemplated no move whatever, nor would it consider a move until the whole situation had been discussed and a plan determined upon.

Secretary Stimson spoke in complimentary terms of the Minnesota National Guard and attributed its efficiency to the field from which its recruits were enlisted.

With Secretary Stimson and Lieut. Gen. Wood at the post were: Brigadier General Crozier, Lieut. John C. Lee, personal aide, Major W. Lassiter, Governor Eberhart, Brigadier General George H. Harries and Col. Charles W. Taylor, commandant of the post.

NELSON'S LEAD 24,714.

State Canvassing Board Finally Completes Its Count.

St. Paul. — United States Senator Nelson's vote at the recent primaries was 88,145, against 63,431 for his lone rival, James A. Peterson, of Minneapolis. This is the finding of the state canvassing board, whose count has just been completed.

For railroad and warehouse commissioners the 86 counties of the state gave Judge Mills 71,067 and Canfield 63,646. These two are rivals for the four-years term.

In the contest for the six-year term J. F. Rosenwald gave C. E. Elmquist, the incumbent, a hard race through to the finish. According to the official canvass, Mr. Elmquist finishes with a trifle over 1,000 majority to his credit. The vote was: Elmquist, 67,733; Rosenwald, 66,428.

For congressman-at-large James Manahan, the winner, received 53,595 votes. His nearest rival was Frank Eddy, who pulled down 35,873 votes. The others follow: Dehnel, 10,965; Eustis, 27,715; Thorp, 28,475.

Secretary of State Schmahl at noon today hurriedly worked out the elimination process on a second choice basis and gives the finish as 46,384 for Manahan and 41,453 for Frank Eddy. The final count on governor and the other officers is expected tomorrow. Early this morning two counties were missing and they were received at noon.

$60,000 Fire Near Beaudette, Minn.

Beaudette. — The property of A. E. Engler Lumber Sawmill Co., located one mile north of Beaudette, was destroyed by fire. The loss is about $60,000, covered by insurance.

Road Loses Tax Case.

Duluth.—Judge Cant, justice of the district court handed down a decision in which he affirms the assessments made by the county taxing officials against the Duluth Street Railway company. The case is known as the 1910 personal property tax enforcement case and involves unpaid personal property taxes with penalties and interest, about $60,000. The company protested against the figure set by the local taxing board in 1910 and a tender of an insufficient amount was refused.

CUYUNA MINES GOOD

Former Governor Lind Looks Over His Properties.

Brainerd.—Ore in large quantities is being hoisted by the Rogers, Brown Ore company. In one day the Kennedy mine at Cuyuna and the Armour No. 1 and Armour No. 2 mines at Ironton hoisted 2,000 tons. At the Kennedy a new shaft is being sunk fifty feet from the old abandoned shaft of the Oliver Mining company.

Emil Ahre is drilling for Frank Edson in section 28, township 44, range 31. Charles W. Potts, formerly of Superior, is reported to have struck ore in the southeast quarter of section 3, township 46, range 28, where he is drilling for some Superior men. His drill is on what is known as the old Bailey farm. At the Adams mine at Oreland the new section of the shaft is to be forced to ledge by the use of large hydraulic jacks which will get a purchase on the old shaft which has lodged fast.

Former Governor John Lind was on the range last week and examined some of the property he is interested in. With F. E. Kenneston of the Minnesota Land & Colonization company, John A. Oberg and Frank Oberg, of Deerwood, Mr. Lind is a fee owner in the north half of the northeast quarter of section 33, township 47, range 29. The land is considered valuable, being near the Iron Mountain Mining company holdings.

RETAIN BENJ. LONGLEY.

He Is Reappointed Superintendent of St. Paul District.

Worthington. — Despite opposition recently developed among some Methodist laymen in St. Paul against Benjamin F. Longley as superintendent of the St. Paul district, his reappointment to this office was announced here among other assignments at the Minnesota conference, the sessions of which were concluded Sunday.

Some time ago, it is said, the Methodist Laymen's association of St. Paul discussed the matter of Rev. Mr. Longley's retention and also considered the advisability of bringing the matter to the attention of Bishop W. A. Quayle, who then was in Oklahoma City, where he was formerly stationed.

DREAM WARNS OF DEATH.

President of Bank Tells Startling Experience.

Minneapolis. — S. E. Forest, the president of the Commercial National bank, put the most unusual incident of his life on record when he heard that Guy C. Landis, cashier of the bank of which he is head, had been found dead in his bed at home.

Only three hours before Mr. Forest's telephone rang and he was told that his cashier was dead, he had dreamed that he was at the Landis home attending the funeral services of Mr. Landis. The news of the banker's sudden death stunned Mr. Forest because of its unexpectedness and mystified him because of the premonition he had in the dream.

Third Ginseng Farm Robbed.

Mankato.—The third robbery of a ginseng farm in this county this week occurred when three beds owned by G. H. Schendel in Rapidan were dug up and carted away. The roots stolen included some fine seven-year-old ones, and the loss is from $250 to $300. Some young men returing at 4 a. m. from a dance at the county fair encountered a man in a roadcart and driving a gray horse, going westward, and this is a clue that Sheriff Osten and his deputies are working on. In the three robberies this week, at Lake Crystal, Garden City and Rapidan, ginseng to the value of $1,000 has been stolen or destroyed.

Blackhand Threats.

Minneapolis. — Someone possibly with a long-nursed, secret grudge against the family of "Dad" Warren, department superintendent for the Northwestern Telephone Exchange company, has evolved a plan of revenge by which Mr. Warren's children are kept in an agony of fear for the safety of themselves or their property. The various members of the family are constantly receiving vague threats of a "blackhand" order.

State Returns Canvassed.

St. Paul.—When the state canvassing board had completed its work a table was compiled which shows Governor Eberhart's majority in the race to succeed himself, on elimination was 17,444. Mr. Eberhart's total vote at the close of the elimination was 66,557; while that of Mr. Lee, the next highest man, was 49,113.

Fergus Falls. — E. S. Ferguson has just returned from an extensive trip across North Dakota, where he has been looking over the grain situation in the interest of a terminal grain firm. He states that Beach, N. D., a village of 2,000 people, two and a half miles from the Montana border, is going to be the largest primary grain market in the United States this year, which means that it will be the largest in the world. It is estimated the place will receive 3,000,000 bushels of grain direct from the men who raised it.

In Minnesota.

Important Happenings of the Week Briefly Told.

Park Rapids.—Arthur Broadwell of Osage, accidentally shot and seriously wounded Lewis Flood.

Fergus Falls—Governor John Burke of North Dakota will open the democratic campaign in this city. The local committee is planning to give him a big reception.

Heron Lake.—Will Eastin of Brandon, S. D., a brakeman on the Omaha road, was crushed between the bumpers of two freight cars in the local yards and killed.

Jackson. — Several contests have been started as a result of the vote cast at the primary election. There is a difference of only twenty votes on county attorney, fifteen on county treasurer and three on coroner.

Winona.—P. J. Barth of this city has been appointed district deputy for the Knights of Columbus for the third district, embracing the counties of Winona, Wabasha, Houston, Olmstead and Dodge. The appointment was made by Neil M. Cronin of Minneapolis, state deputy.

Cambridge.—The fall term of court convened here this week, Judge A. E. Giddings presiding. The grand jury brought in nine indictments, four being against Ben Katy for disposing of liquor illegally, and four against Philip Pleason. There are nine cases on the civil calendar, all of minor importance.

Winona.—Felix Riska, a former Winona resident, was killed at Red Wing while attempting to board a night train to come to Winona. The young man caught hold of the train after it had started and attempted to board it, but lost his hold and was dragged, sustaining fractures of the right leg and jaw bone as well as internal injuries.

Cloquet.—E. N. Robinson, formerly with the park commission of Los Angeles, has been secured as physical director for the Cloquet Y. M. C. A. The first open house of the association under the new management of E. S. Davis, formerly of Bisbee, Ariz., will be on Friday evening. A musical program will be given under the direction of J. R. Medley.

Mankato.—Senator S. D. Works of this city has purchased a 3,000-acre grain and stock farm near Carrington, N. D., including horses, 150 head of cattle and everything on the farm for a price between $70,000 and $80,000. His brother, Robert Works of Salt Lake City, Utah, has purchased an interest and will take the management of the farm.

Hector.—Forty boys between the ages of 10 and 18 from fifteen school districts took part in a seed corn gathering contest. The prize money was furnished by the associated school board. Each boy was given a sack and allowed one hour to go into the field to select the best ten ears. The contest was held under the supervision of Professor O. M. Kisu.

Jackson.—Thomas Clipperton, who was injured in a runaway accident Sunday afternoon, died here. He was born in England in 1836, and came to the United States in 1854, and to Jackson in 1870. He served through the Civil war in Company C, Tenth Minnesota infantry, and was an honored member of John A. Meyers post, No. 60, G. A. R., He leaves a wife and five children.

Hutchinson. — With some original teepees and soldiers' tents about the public square in the heart of the city Hutchinson took on a martial appearance to celebrate the semi-centennial anniversary of the Sioux Indian massacre. The square marks the site of the famous stockade which was built to protect this city in September, 1862.

Winona.—William A. Buggs, for six years county superintendent of schools as a Democratic nominee for the office, failed to file for renomination under the non-partisan provisions of the new law, preferring to let both the candidates in the field, A. C. Loomis and C. H. Wood, get the nomination. He is now circulating petitions for his nomination and will get on the ticket for the general election by petition, thus avoiding a campaign at the primary election and assuring a three-cornered fight at the general election.

Little Falls.—When four saloonkeepers made deposits at the banks here Monday they found they had been victimized for $20 each. In every case the liquor dealer had a check made payable to H. Fleming and cashed by a person of that name, the check purporting to be issued by J. K. Martin, cashier of the First National bank of this city. The alleged forgeries were committed Saturday after banking hours. Fleming left the city Saturday night and has not been located.

Le Sueur.—The threshing engine and separator of Lewellyn Hayford broke through the iron bridge near the Weyl farm and fell to the bottom of the creek bed. Mr. Hayford jumped and sustained only a slight injury.

Grand Rapids. — Candidates for county and legislative offices held their meeting under the provision of the new state law and Thomas Ward was elected chairman of the Republican county committee and Andy Nelson secretary. The Democrats elected Hugh McEwen chairman and Dr. D. Costello secretary.

Pipestone.—Rev. H. F. Ackerman, for several years pastor of the Methodist church here, has tendered his resignation and a new minister will be appointed for the church at the conference now being held at Worthington.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions.

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Potteries Prospering.

The output of the pottery industries of the United States had a value of $34,518,560 in 1911, according to the United States geological survey chart of clay products production, by states, compiled by Jefferson Middletown. The pottery collection for 1911 was greater than for 1910, when the output was valued at $33,784,678, the increase being $733,882. Of the total production Ohio was first, with an output valued at $14,775,265; New Jersey second, with $8,401,941; West Virginia third, with $2,880,202; New York fourth, with $2,178,364; Pennsylvania fifth, with $2,156,817, and Indiana sixth, with $1,004,737. The output of no other state had a value in excess of a million dollars.

HARD TO SEE.

Even When the Facts About Coffee are Plain.

It is curious how people will refuse to believe what one can clearly see.

Tell the average man or woman that the slow but cumulative poisonous effect of caffeine—the alkaloid in tea and coffee—tends to weaken the heart, upset the nervous system and cause indigestion, and they may laugh at you if they don't know the facts.

Prove it by science or by practical demonstration in the recovery of coffee drinkers from the above conditions, and a large per cent of the human family will shrug their shoulders, take some drugs and—keep on drinking coffee or tea.

"Coffee never agreed with me nor with several members of our household," writes a lady. "It enervates, depresses and creates a feeling of languor and heaviness. It was only by leaving off coffee and using Postum that we discovered the cause and way out of these ills.

"The only reason, I am sure, why Postum is not used altogether to the exclusion of ordinary coffee is, many persons do not know and do not seem willing to learn the facts and how to prepare this nutritious beverage. There's only one way—according to directions—boil it fully 15 minutes. Then it is delicious." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Courteous Officials

The election returns from the farmers of this county show that it pays for a county official who wants to hold his job to be a little courteous to the farmers when they go to the court house to do business, not only just before election, but the year around. Take the cases of Clerk of Court Ives and Treasurer Trovaten, for example. When some of the farmers asked for instructions how to vote, the first name they inquired for as soon as they got into the booth was Trovaten. Why? Because they wanted to be sure to vote for him. The reason was that he had been kind to them and helped them to straighten up some business at the court house and they wanted him to stay there. The same could be said of Ives. When he came out in his announcement and said he would give his personal attention to the office if he was reelected, the farmers said, "We guess we had better keep that fellow, for he comes in handy to help us when we have business at the court house." He not only has done that, but he has never refused to help a farmer to straighten out a land deal, whether it was in line with his duties as clerk of court or not. In fact, since "Harry" has been in that office he has been "sawing wood," and he had the satisfaction of seeing the sawdust fly on September 17.

The same can be said of County Auditor Fasel, who had no opposition for the nomination, which was a credit to the good judgment of the fellow who might have liked to have the job, that he had brains enough to not try to get it, and saved his money. A better man for the position cannot be found, and the farmers will hunt up his name in November.—Sunbeam.

Blaming the Town

"This is surely a one horse town,' the shiftless man asserts; then takes his seedy gripsack down and packs his socks and shirts and to some other village goes to seek the shining plunk; there he accumulates new woes and says the burg is punk. In every town, however slick, you hear the failures say: "This wretched hamlet makes me sick; we'll chase ourselves away. The poor men has no chances here; he finds no open door, the whole corrupted atmosphere makes head and bosom sore." From town to town the failures drift and find each one the worst, until at last the peelers lift them to the jug feet first. All towns are good if you will work and try to reach the top; all towns are fierce if you're a shirk, whose mission is to yawp. Select a man whose heart is bold, whose courage never slumped, and he will gather fame and gold, no matter where he's dumped. Though planted in the virgin woods or on an island bare, you'll see him coming with the goods, and both feet in the air. And when you hear a pilgrim wail and blame things on his town, you may be sure that he would fail whene'er he settled down.—Walt Mason in Duluth News-Tribune.

Just Common Sense

Fly and the world will cheer you,
Fall, and you're down and out,
A trip to the sky sends your spirits high,
But a dip may make you doubt.
Soar, and the winds uphold you,
Sink, and you're lost in air;
And with all your pains to control the planes,
They may land you anywhere!
Drink what your folks drink with you,
Refuse what you'd drink in fear;
With your kith and kin you are safe from sin,
Using golden grain belt beer.

Republicans Organize

The committee named by the republican candidates to take charge of the coming campaign held their first meeting last Tuesday and proceeded to business at once by electing Lars Bakke, chairman; Bernhard Knutson, secretary, and Olaf Hamstad, treasurer.

The personel of the committee is as follows:—At large, Bernard Knutson and Olaf Hamstad; First district, John T. Lattimore; Second, Lars Bakke; Third, Sander Engebretson; Fourth, Dr. O. Swanson; Fifth, James R. Larson.

Little business was transacted other than the naming of committeemen for each voting precinct in the county. The following were named in the third and fourth districts:

Third commissioner's district—Town of Black River, Felix Anderson; town of Sanders, August Crause; town of Bray, Emil Larson; town of Norden, G. J. Nordhagen; town of Numedal, Louis Olson; town of Polk Center, Hjalmar Johnson.

Fourth commissioner's district—Town of North, Ruineshad; town of River Falls, August Swanson; town of Rocksbury, Swan Wiborg; St. Hilaire, K. O. Gigstad.

Blowing Up the Locks.

Would it be easy to blow up and destroy a lock canal by the malicious use of dynamite or other high explosive? The question has been debated much in connection with the Panama canal. The Engineering News calls attention to the fact that an attempt made in 1900 to wreck the Welland canal in this way produced surprisingly small results. After two weeks' examination the two men concerned selected lock 24, and each lowered a satchel containing dynamite and a fuse to the water behind the gate at each end of the lock. Both charges were exploded, but the dynamite failed to carry away the gates. Although the explosives blew a hole about a foot in diameter through each gate and loosened the hinges, the gates remained in position, holding back the water.

THE SPENDTHRIFT.

He left so little, did you say?
He had so brief a time to stay
'Twas hardly worth his while to gather
Dross of our little earthly day.

The things that other people prize
He gave to others, being wise;
Being so heavenly foolish, rather,
That kept his gains for paradise.

Hardly a keepsake did he leave,
And all his gold was fugitive.
He kept those things that will not perish
For him the widow and orphan grieve.

He gave with a light laugh, indeed,
As he and gold were ill agreed.
Held it the poorest thing to cherish,
Save that it filled another's need.

He had his pilgrim's scrip of hope
And living waters in his cup,
The staff of faith that still suffices
The stumbling soul to lift it up.

Being so soon a traveler,
Of earthly things he had no care,
But on the road that's paradise's
He went the lighter, being bare.
—Katharine Tynan.

A Small Horror.

The weasel is one small horror. Astonishingly strong, apparently fearless and as persevering as an ant, when once he has settled to the track of a rabbit that particular bunny is indeed in grave peril. The rabbit seems to know it, too, and the knowledge to half paralyze him, for he seldom attempts the one saving chance—a straightaway, long sustained run at top speed. And the end of the patient, if-we-do-but-wait-the-hour sort of pursuit! 'Tis indeed bloody murder. The fiend within angel garb finally toils within deadly distance. There is a snakelike stroke, most likely aimed at the big vein near the butt of the rabbit's ear. Once there, the brute sticks leechlike to the blood, sucking, while the trembling, wailing rabbit totters aimlessly about till its drained body falls limply to pay its tax to mother earth.—Edwin Sandys in Outing Magazine.

Selling by Candle Time.

"It did me good," observed a young girl who had just returned from England, "to see in real life one of the old customs my grandfather used to tell me about—the burning of the time candle at an auction. In Berkshire the old custom still prevails, and when an auction is in progress and an article is put up for bidding a short length of candle is lighted as the bidding begins. The shouting continues until the candle burns out, and the last bid before it flickers its last is the one that takes the cake. I don't know but what it has an advantage over the 'Going, going, gone!' variety, but it is fearfully slow and un-American."—Exchange.

MODERN CHAIRS.

Evolution of Our Seats With Arms and High Backs.

Chairs with high backs and arms, after coming into general use with the renaissance, began to be ornamented with an amount of carving and gilding that has hardly since been equaled, which came naturally from the artistic tastes of the period. Their size, form and the amount of decoration lavished on them indicated the rank, fortune, authority or social position of their possessors. Bishops and abbots had seats corresponding with their dignity, while those below them sat on stools or benches. Only the king and queen and persons of high rank could be seated on chairs with arms and backs in the time of Catherine de Medici, and her sons, courtiers and favorites sat about them on stools called taborets.

This manner of expressing difference of rank prevailed under Louis XIV. and his successors down to the French revolution. To the chairs elaborately carved succeeded the armchair, so called in these times, which, with unimportant variations, is much the same as in the reign of Louis XIV. Specimens of the stools used by the favorites and ladies of honour of the king and queen may still be seen in the royal palaces of France. They were changed into the modern parlor chair by simply adding a back, which has hardly made them more comfortable. —Westminster Gazette.

Courtship in the North.

The old Eskimo lit a cup of walrus oil and peered over the sealskin curtain.

"Aurora," he called, sharply, "is that young man down there yet?"

"Yes, pa," answered the Eskimo belle.

"Well, I want you to cut him out, understand?"

"Er—you'll have to do it yourself, pa. He has been here so long he is frozen to the snow settee."—Success Magazine.

Arming Safes with Deadly Gases.

A chemical company has devised a grenade or glass receptacle, filled with a chemical compound, as a means of making it impossible for safeblowers to rob a safe after breaking it open.

It is an inoffensive-looking article, about two inches in diameter and five inches long. Inside of the exterior tube are seven smaller ones, each filled with a different chemical. When the door of the safe is blown, or the safe is jarred heavily, the grenade explodes, and the air is filled with the deadly fumes. It is claimed that these fumes, which, so far as effect is concerned, are not unlike the gases from the deadly Chinese "stink pots," are powerful enough to make breathing impossible and to force all persons near the safe to retreat or be almost instantly suffocated.

The grenades are made with a lasting effect of from six to ten hours, depending upon the size, and are placed just back of the locking mechanism of the safe doors.—Popular Mechanics.

Hadley Points Out Danger.

President Hadley of Yale writes: "In the year 1789 the whole French people was in a state of political excitement. They seized eagerly upon everything sensational. A young journalist named Camille Desmoulins shared this feeling and took advantage of it. He wrote a series of articles called 'Lamp Post Talks to the People of Paris,' in which he urged that anybody who was not a friend of the people ought to be taken to the nearest lamp post and hanged. He was not himself a bloodthirsty man. He chose his title chiefly because it sounded so picturesque. After a time he saw that they were executing a great many innocent men and women, and began to tell men so. Then they said that he was not a friend of the people any longer, and hanged him. This story has a moral for us in America to-day. It shows the dangers that come to a people which reads newspapers for the sake of excitement, instead of for the sake of information.

"To What Base Uses."

Big Brother (to young sister who has acquired an unaccountable habit of borrowing his razor)—I know you have borrowed my razor again. It's not where I put it.

Young Sister (scrambling around in the bathroom)—Oh! here it is, Bob—just where you left it, I am sure!

Big Brother—No such thing. And this is the third time you have misplaced it. Now, miss, you will tell me what you use it for. Were you ripping the sleeves of your last winter's coat?

Young Sister (doggedly)—No. You never will forget that!

Big Brother—Well, what then? (shaking her by the shoulders) Answer me.

Young Sister (tearfully)—I was just splitting up a little light wood to kindle the fire, and I just think you are a horried, selfish old thing not to want to even lend your things—so there!

The Useful Hen.

"Country constables who make a living arresting speeding automobiles wouldn't have half so much trouble stopping the scorchers if they used a little ingenuity," says one of the offenders. "Chains across the road and moving vans blocking the highway are all right to accomplish the purpose, but they're cumbersome. My idea for causing a prompt slow-up is to scatter a lot of grain in a road and turn a lot of hens loose. They would block the road all right, and if there's one thing that will make a chauffeur slow up it's a hen. Dogs are bad enough, but a hen always runs the wrong way, and if the machine is going at any speed usually ends up under the wheels. Hitting a hen will sometimes throw the front wheels out of line and cause the car to swerve, so drivers almost invariably slow up and give poultry a chance to get out of the way. A hen speed trap is a great idea, to my way of thinking, and, of course, if one of the birds were killed the cost could easily be added to the driver's fine."

Card by Mr. Trovaten

Thief River Falls, Minn., Sept. 20, 1912.

I wish to thank my supporters for the republican nomination for county treasurer and also my opponent and his supporters for the clean, gentlemanly manner in which they conducted the campaign.

On account of my official duties I shall not be able to make much of a personal campaign for the November election, but will do all I can for all the republican nominees by the primary last Tuesday, because they are all good men, so far as I know, and were fairly nominated by our party.

I believe it would be bad for our county should our party be defeated, especially so far as congress and the legislature are concerned.

Very sincerely,
ANDREW TROVATEN.

Thanks

I wish to thank all that supported me at the primary and hope you will do so again at the general election.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

D AKOTA EVELOPS

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. 350 D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 500. All Fargo banks and 685 others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school offers such endorsement.

B USINESS RAINS FOR

Our $60 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $95 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association), supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters), trains court reporters and high grade stenographers. The stenographers for the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. graduates. Do other schools offer this PROOF of superior training?

C OLLEGE CASH

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (350,000 cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 100 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. Our pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using aluminum money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C."

THE
TOLEDO BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO

The Best Known Newspaper in the United States
Circulation 340,090
Popular in Every State

No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making the Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

LOMBARD PIANOS
The Piano With The Sweetest Tone

Praised by Press and Pulpit

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sent me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

Raw Chickens.

Rose Pastor Phelps Stokes, in an address on behalf of a New York country-week charity, told a quaint story.

"A little slum girl," she said, "stood for the first time in her life in a barnyard, with its ricks, its lazy cows, its yard, with its ricks, its lazy cows, its plows and harrows, and what-not.

The slum girl drank it all in delightedly, then gasped half to herself: "'An' jes look at the chickens—all runnin' around raw!"—Washington Star.

Swallow's Home.

The teacher in natural history had received more or less satisfactory replies to her questions, The Delineator asserts, and finally she asked:

"What little boy can tell me where the home of the swallow is?"

"Well, Bobbie, where is it?"

"The home of the swallow," declared Bobbie, seriously, "is in the stummick."

CHARLESTON, CITY OF CHARM

Her House and Gates Fair and Gracious, and Typical of the Beautiful South.

Charleston, S. C.—Every house in Charleston faces seaward. It frequently happens that the streets do not adjust themselves to this disposition of the house-plan—in which case the street line is calmly disregarded and the house is built so that it shall square with the four points of the compass. The result of this is curious and most interesting—at times disconcerting, but frequently as pleasing as one of Whistler's audacious and unexpected color schemes.

As in the mansions of old Virginia, the general form of the Charleston houses is very simple, and they depend for their beauty upon the fine balance and spacing of doors and windows, the character of the cornice, and above all upon the dignified beauty of the classic porticoes and galleries which adorn one side of each structure.

Picturesque Charleston Houses.

But Charleston has another and quite unique architectural feature in the arched and ornate walls of moss-grown brick which close in all of the fine residences, and the highly decorative wrought-iron gateways which give access to the private grounds. In a city which was at one time the port of call of all the pirates of the Spanish main—where one day it was found advisable to bury forty of these worthies under the sea-wall of the city; where half-civilized negroes formed always an overwhelming majority of the population, it was the part of common prudence to erect a strong barrier between the streets and the private demesnes of the better-class residents. Out of this necessity grew the infinite number of gates and grillages of twisted iron, which are the chief pride of Charleston today, and whose only rivals are the far-famed gates of Seville. These marvels of wrought and beaten iron were all the work of local smiths. I was told that no two gates of the city were of similar design, and I certainly saw no single example which was not in itself beautiful.—Birge Harrison in Art and Progress.

PASS LIFE AMONG LEPERS

Rev. Charles Kellar Will Devote Talents to Possible Discovery of Cure for Disease.

Cambridge, Mass.—After he completes a post-graduate course at Harvard this fall, Rev. Charles Kellar, a Catholic priest, who was graduated in June from the American Medical college of St. Louis, will go to Honolulu and pass the rest of his life among leprosy patients of the Hawaiian islands. He will share their hardships and expose himself to infection from the disease with the end in view of possibly discovering a cure for leprosy, the goal of scientists for centuries.

Father Kellar is forty-eight years old. He resigned his pastorate at Kahoka, Mo., because a throat trouble made it impossible for him to preach. His voice was restored by an operation in St. Louis, and then the priest entered the St. Louis University of Medicine. After a year Father Kellar changed to the American Medical university.

Father Kellar won the highest class honors when he graduated from the American university last June. He studied nervous diseases six weeks at the Alexian Brothers' hospital and then went to Harvard. He expects to depart for Honolulu November 1.

WOULD USE HEAT OF SUN

Prof. Cinmician Tells Chemists of Big Substitute for the Failing Coal Supply.

New York.—The possibility of using the energy of the sun as a substitute for the failing coal supply was the subject of an address by Prof. Giacomo Cinmician of Bologna, Italy, at the concluding session of one of the sections of the International Chemists' congress here. The speaker said that, since the earth's supply of coal is limited, it is not too soon to consider the possibility of getting power from other sources.

He outlined a plan of putting the sun's rays to work by a chemical process, after the manner of plants. In conclusion he said:

"If we should become able to utilize the energy of the sun in the way I have described, the tropical countries would be conquered by civilization, which would in this manner return to its birthplace.

"On the arid lands there will spring up industrial colonies without smoke and without smokestacks; forests of glass tubes will arise everywhere; inside there will take place the photochemical processes that have hitherto been the guarded secret of the plants, but that will have been mastered by human industry, which will know how to make them bear even more abundant fruits than nature, for nature is not in a hurry and mankind is."

A BLESSING IN DISGUISE

Nervous Breakdown Is a Warning That You Must Heed to Avoid Something Worse.

Nervous exhaustion, or breakdown of the nerves, is more often a blessing than anything else. The nerves have rebelled and you should be thankful it is no worse than it is. Let it serve as a sharp warning to relieve the strain and to take a treatment that will build up your nerves.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are a real nerve tonic. They supply plenty of nourishing red blood to the exhausted nerves and do not excite and urge them on to do work which they have already shown they cannot do. Medicines which whip on the tired nerves do more harm than no medicine at all. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People not only start in immediately to give relief but continue to strengthen the nerves until they are able to do their work once more.

Mrs. J. E. Udelle, whose address is Box 130, R. F. D. No. 1, Osseo, Minn., says: "I was so completely worn out from overwork and nervousness that I was unable to continue at my work as dressmaker. I was very weak and my back ached continually. My stomach was so weak that I could eat nothing but light food and even then I would have pains like cramps. Gas formed on my stomach. I was short of breath and had palpitation of the heart. I was in bed for three months. At Davenport, Iowa, I was under doctors' care but received only temporary relief so gave it up. I then used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. When I began using the pills I had no strength at all and had lost a great deal in weight. I did not have to take the pills long before I felt better. I gave the pills a fair trial and was entirely cured."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are guaranteed to be free from any harmful or habit-forming drugs. They have given the most gratifying results in nervous headaches, neuralgia, nervous dyspepsia, St. Vitus' dance, and even in partial paralysis and locomotor ataxia. Write for the free booklet, "Diseases of the Nervous System."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Adv.

GAVE WORLD UMBRELLA

JONAS HANWAY, ENGLISH MERCHANT DESERVES CREDIT.

Braved Storm of Ridicule in Introducing Article That Is Now in Universal Use—Bi-Centenary Is Just Being Celebrated.

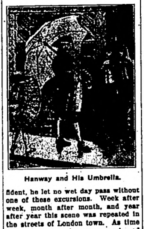
By E. W. PICKARD.

London.—Two hundred years ago—to be more exact, in August, 1712—Jonas Hanway was born in Portsmouth, England.

In the encyclopedias he is classed as a philanthropist and traveler, and he was both of these. Having been apprenticed to a merchant in Lisbon, he became interested in trade with the east and journeyed through Persia, enduring many hardships, after which he spent five years in St. Petersburg. In the way of philanthropy he was active in the help of foundlings, fallen women, the poor and prisoners. But the one thing he did that makes his fame everlasting was to introduce the use of the umbrella to England and Europe generally.

The umbrella for centuries untold had been used in one form or another by the people of the far east, and Hanway in his travels became a warm advocate of that shelter from the rain and the sun. After he had retired from business to London he had made for himself an umbrella not differing materially from those of today. One rainy day, when those who were so unfortunate as to be compelled to go out in the streets, were hurrying miserably along, bedraggled and dripping, out stepped Jonas Hanway, opened his contraption, and strolled leisurely along Fleet street, dry as a bone and happy. At least he would have been happy if his umbrella had warded off ridicule as it did rain. For his appearance created almost a riot. Forgetting the downpour, men, women and children first stared, then hooted and at last gathered in a mob that followed the bold merchant along the street, laughing and jeering. Doors were thrown open and windows were flung up and it seemed as if the entire population of that part of London came out to make fun of Jonas and his umbrella.

The Britisher was conservative by nature, then as now, and this especial innovation did not please him. For centuries he had got wet when it rained, and why should he now change and keep dry? So Jonas retired to his house somewhat discomfited. But he was persistent, so on the next rainy day he reappeared with his umbrella. Once more the jeers and laughter. Once more the trailing, dripping crowd. This time Jonas extended his walk and staid out as long as he wished, and growing more confident, he let no wet day pass without one of these excursions. Week after week, month after month, and year after year this scene was repeated in the streets of London town. As time went on the people grew accustomed to seeing the eccentric Jonas and his umbrella, but it was fully thirty years before any considerable number of them could bring themselves to follow his example.



Hanway and His Umbrella.

And now look at them! Wherever the Englishman is found, there is the umbrella, as surely as the tea pot and the marmalade jar. Other nations, too, were slow to adopt the article, and for years the British tourist with his inevitable umbrella was an object of ridicule. He carried it to all parts of the earth, and today in lands where there is seldom any rain it is in continual use as a sunshade. Mexico, South America, the entire South Pacific, Hindustan, and many another country are dotted with white umbrellas carried by European and native alike. No one ever saw the baboo of India without an umbrella, for it is an essential part of his English education.

The crude and clumsy umbrella that Hanway carried, of course has given place to the neat, close-rolled affair of today, with silk covering and handle of beautiful and expensive wood; but the latter probably does not shed the rain any more surely than did the former, and if Jonas had not been so persistent we might still be without the blessed umbrella.

So all honor to the memory of Jonas Hanway, English traveler and philanthropist, whose bicentenary has been forcibly brought to the notice of the people of his native land by rains and floods that have made the summer the worst on record in the tight little isle.

Factory Owner Poses as "Judge," While Toilers Compose the "Jury."

Eugene, Ore.—Taking the law into his own hands, F. J. Schofield, proprietor of a chemical works, administered a punishment of fifteen lashes with a rawhide on the back of James Daughty, one of his employes, who was alleged to have been caught stealing a small sum of money from him.

Daughty was tried before a jury consisting of other employes of the factory and Schofield acted as judge. He was found guilty. The "judge" then administered punishment.

Afterward Daughty was given three hours to leave the city.

ARRESTING FLIGHT OF TIME

German Scientists Advise the Eating of Egg Shells by Those Who Approach Old Age.

Two Germans, deep thinkers—Professors Emmerich and Loewe—state that eggs shells eaten increase the power of resistance against "the withering blight of time," add weight to the body, activity to the brain and strength to the heart; that they destroy injurious bacilli, prevent inflammation and disease and lend courage and energy. This reminds me, Philip Hale writes in the Boston Herald, of the preparation advertised in London thirty or more years ago as removing superfluous hair, being an excellent substitute for table butter, none genuine unless stamped on the blade. Eustace Miles, the English court tennis player and vegetarian, says he had an old nurse who used to eat egg shells and crunch them joyfully between the teeth that happened to meet, and she said she ate the shells because they "shaved the hair off inside of the throat." The discovery of the German scientist is peculiarly welcome to dwellers by the ocean, for it is a well known fact that if you do not break egg shells the witches will put out to sea in them to wreck vessels, and if you burn the shells the hens will cease to lay. Furthermore, as eggs are now absurdly high—even case eggs—in the neighborhood it seems a pity to waste any part of them.

BABY IN MISERY WITH RASH

Monroe, Wis.—"When my baby was six weeks old there came a rash on his face which finally spread until it got nearly all over his body. It formed a crust on his head, hair fell out and the itch was terrible. When he would scratch the crust, the water would ooze out in big drops. On face and body it was in a dry form and would scale off. He was in great misery and at nights I would lie awake holding his hands so that he could not scratch and disfigure himself. I tried simple remedies at first, then got medicine, but it did no good.

"Finally a friend suggested Cuticura Remedies, so I sent for a sample to see what they would do, when to my surprise after a few applications I could see an improvement, and he would rest better. I bought a box of Cuticura Ointment and a cake of Cuticura Soap and before I had them half used my baby was cured. His head is now covered with a luxuriant growth of hair and his complexion is admired by everybody and has no disfigurements." (Signed) Mrs. Annie Saunders, Sept. 29, 1911.

Cuticura Soap and Ointment sold throughout the world. Sample of each free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. L, Boston." Adv.

Nothing More to Live For.

Without question, the Scots curler of whom Lord Lyveden tells in Fry's Magazine, placed the proper value on his sport.

During a recent curling-match in Switzerland, the skip of one of the teams, who happened to be a Scotsman, was so delighted with the accurate shot of one of his team, that he was heard to address him in the following manner: "Lie down and dee, mon; lie down and dee. Ye'll never lay a finer stane nor that if ye live to be a hundred."

Point for Sherlock Holmes.

Somebody wondered how long a certain woman who had just left the room had been married.

"About 15 years," said the jeweler.

"How do you know?" asked the jeweler's wife. "You never saw her until tonight."

"I can tell by the size of her wedding ring," he replied. "The width of wedding rings changes about every five years. The kind she wears was in style 15 years ago."

Almost Entirely.

"Dick" Quay, at the Congress hotel in Chicago, was talking about a notorious politician.

"And he's worth eleven millions," Mr. Quay ended.

"And is an entirely self-made man, too, I believe," said a correspondent.

"Entirely so," Mr. Quay answered, "except for nine thick coats of whitewash that have been applied to him by various investigating committees."

Like Mushrooms.

As they emerged from the subway station they were confronted by a giant skyscraper rising into the blue. "What building is that?" she asked, not being an habitue of the downtown district. "I don't know," he replied. She looked at him in surprise, this quarter of New York being his daily locale. "No," he insisted wearily. "I don't know. It wasn't there yesterday."—New York Press.

Wanted a Bite.

Oh, yes; it was raining—had been all day. But they didn't mind that so much; you see, they were fishermen. All the same, they were trudging home, with weary steps and very weary-looking faces.

Their baskets were empty, and, to be candid, they were in a very bad temper.

As they entered the little village a large dog ran at one of the party The dog had a ferocious look, and was barking furiously. But the fisherman did not take much alarm at the animal. He just kicked it away carelessly.

"Aren't you afraid he'll go for you?" inquired another of the party, somewhat anxiously.

The one who had kicked at the dog looked at his companion in a sorrowful manner.

"I only wish he would!" he replied. "I'd chance almost anything to be able to go home and say I'd had a bite!"

Thoughtful Wife.

"Think I'll go to the ball game today."

"All right. Is there a telephone at the grounds.

"There's one there. Why?"

"If the home team loses, I want you to telephone me, so that I can take the children and go over to mother's until you get your temper back."

How About This?

"Geese are supposed to be symbolic of all that is foolish."

"Well, go on."

"But you never see an old gander hoard up a million kernels of corn and then go around trying to mate with a gosling."

One occasionally meets a man who gives a direct answer in reply to a simple question. But most of them want to make a speech.

The average girl can love almost any one—except a stepfather.

EFFORTS TO STOP WAR FRUITLESS

MONTENEGRIN DETACHMENT REPORTED ANNIHILATED BY TURKISH TROOPS.

TURKS ARE MASSACRED

By Armed Invaders Rumored—Servia and Bulgaria Join in the Hostilities.

London, Oct. 10.—Intervention of the European ambassadors at the porte in the Balkan situation cannot now have any effect, it generally is conceded here, and widespread warfare in the near east appears inevitable.

A dispatch from Constantinople states that a Montenegrin detachment, which crossed the frontier, has been annihilated and that 4,000 Albanian troops have invaded Montenegro.

Skirmishes also are reported to have occurred on the Servian and Bulgarian frontiers and one dispatch says that a strong force of Bulgarian troops has started for Mustapha Pasha with a view of forcing the road to Adrianople, where the Turks are concentrated in great strength. King Ferdinand is said to be hurrying southward to take command of the allied troops.

A massacre of Turks has occurred at Turtukai, in Bulgaria, near the Rumanian frontier, according to a dispatch It is reported that armed Bulgarians attacked the Turkish quarter of the town at dead of night, pilaged the houses and massacred the inhabitants, not sparing even women and children.

It is believed everywhere that if Servia and Bulgaria have not already declared war on Turkey as reported from Paris, they are on the point of joining their mobilized armies to that of Montenegro, whose troops are believed to be quite generally engaging the Turks along the frontier.

Greece appears for the present to be holding back. She made today her last protest to the powers against the seizure by the Ottoman government of Greek vessels in Turkish waters.

Greece Recalls Minister.

London. Following Montenegro's example, it was reported here today that Greece has recalled its minister from Constantinople.

Bulgaria Reported at War.

Paris.—A strong rumor was current here that Bulgaria had declared war on Turkey, but neither the Ottoman embassy nor the Bulgarian legation has received any confirmation.

More Fighting on Frontier.

Saloniki, Turkey.—Serious fighting continues between the Turkish and Montenegrin forces at the Montenegrin frontier.

Turks Express Confidence.

Constantinople.—The Turkish government awaits coming events with calm assurance, according to Noradundghian Effendi, the Ottoman foreign minister.

War News Depresses Market.

London.—The stock exchange was somewhat more affected by the Balkan situation owing to the weakness of continental bourses and principally in Paris, from which market selling orders were rather liberal.

Paris. The bourse at the opening was demoralized.

Berlin.—The bourse was increasingly nervous in connection with the Balkan situation.

ABSENCE IS REQUESTED.

Deposed Secretary Distributed Pamphlets Attacking Women.

Des Moines, Ia., Oct. 10.—H. G. Gue, deposed secretary of the joint equal suffrage political campaign committee, was asked to leave the hall where the members of the women's state association were holding their meeting.

The request to leave was made by Miss Mary Hafford, president, following the distribution of pamphlets by Mr. Gue making attacks upon several prominent women. As a sequel of the trouble an order was made later in the day for the incorporation of the state suffrage association, the members desiring to attain a basis where it would be possible to hold property, sue and be sued.

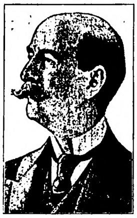
Express Rate Hearing Opened.

Washington, Oct. 10.—All the large express companies, many of the great railroad systems and numerous organizations of express shippers and commercial bodies were represented before the interstate commerce commission at the opening of the arguments upon new express rates proposed by the commission.

Clark and Wilson Campaign.

St. Louis, Oct. 10.—Speaker Clark and Gov. Woodrow Wilson campaigned together in Illinois and Missouri—the two states which preferred Mr. Clark by a heavy vote in the primaries for the Democratic presidential nomination. Cheers and great enthusiasm greeted the two men as they appeared in Springfield, Granite City and East St. Louis in Illinois, and at St. Louis in Missouri. "I am now for Governor Wilson for the presidency as every true Democrat ought to be," declared the speaker.

KING GEORGE OF GREECE



Unless the intervention of the powers proves effective, King George may have to lead his subjects against their ancient enemies, the Turks.

MINNESOTA GREEKS ARE LOYAL

HUNDREDS OF NATIVE SONS TO FIGHT.

Volunteer Reserves Only Await the Word to Start for the Front.

Minneapolis, Oct. 10.—With hundreds of cheers for Christianity and hisses for the Mohammedan Turks, 500 Greeks of Minneapolis and St. Paul pledged their lives for their native country and promised to return to Athens at once to assist the Grecian troops and the soldiers of the Balkan republics in their war against Turkey.

The oldest Greek residents of Minneapolis declared that never before in the history of the Greek community had there been such enthusiasm. Within 20 minutes after the close of the speeches more than $2,000 was pledged for the cause of their country.

"This war is not a war of conquest," declared each of the eight speakers. "It is a war for Christ and Christianity. For many centuries the Christian countries of the world have been humiliated by barbarian fanatics of Turkey. They have massacred the Christians and spat in the faces of those who do not believe in Mohammed. This war is a religious war, like our forefathers fought centuries ago."

The reserves were called on to return to their native land first. There are about 150 reserves living in Minneapolis who have had previous military experience. They had not completed their military service for Greece, but were given permission to leave the country on the promise to return should their service be needed.

The first party of these reserves will leave Minneapolis for New York, where, where they will take ship for Athens. It is not known for certain how many will be in the party. When names were called everybody apparently was anxious to go. One old man who looked to be 80 years old, jumped on a chair and with cheers for the king of Greece yelled: "I am too old to fight, but my blood boils when I think of the outrages that have been committed against our country and religion."

There was almost a riot at the meeting to see who would be the first to sign a paper indicating his desire to return to Greece at once. The honor finally went to Captain Dookakos, who is a veteran of the war with Turkey in 1897.

OFFICERS DISCHARGED.

Chicagoans Lose Jobs Owing to Escape of Robbers.

Chicago, Oct. 10.—Police Captain John J. Mahoney and Lieutenant Bernard J. Burns of the Maxwell street station were discharged from the Chicago police department by the civil service commission because of the escape from Chicago, Sept. 10, of two of the bank robbers who robbed the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B. C. The civil service commissioners decided that both officers were guilty of incompetency and neglect of duty.

Burns attempted to arrest the two bank robbers single handed in a south side saloon and was beaten nearly to death.

Damaged Steamer Proceeds.

Duluth, Oct. 10.—The Kinsman steamer Onoko which was beached on Basswood island of the Apostle group early Monday morning to prevent her from sinking has been released and has proceeded to Buffalo to discharge her cargo of grain.

North Dakota Bank Raided.

Williston, N. D., Oct. 10.—Three men rode into the town of Springbrook, twelve miles east of Williston, and blew the safe of the Bank of Springbrook and rode away without molestation with $1,000 in cash from the institution's strongbox. There was a series of three explosions which awakened the citizens of the little town. It was then too late to organize resistance or make an attempt to capture the bandits. The bank building, as well as the safe, was wrecked.

ADMITS SOLICITING A BRIBE

OHIO SOLON IMPLICATES MEN "HIGHER UP."

Sentence Probably Withheld Until the Grand Jury Reconvenes.

Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 10.—After the making of a full confession, in which he implicated other legislators and men "higher up," to Attorney General Hogan last Sunday in the presence of Prosecuting Attorney Edward C. Turner of Franklin county and a court stenographer, Dr. George B. Nye, representative in the legislature from Waverly, pleaded guilty to having solicited a bribe for his vote on the Kimball bill.

The indictment to which he pleaded guilty, charged that he solicited a bribe of $1,000 from B. F. Kimball, the author of the bill, on April 18, 1900. The bill provided for the redistricting of the Pike and Adams county judicial districts. Dr. Nye was not sentenced and probably will not be until after the grand jury is reconvened.

Eddy Will Trust Void.

Boston, Oct. 10.—A trust, estimated at $2,000,000, created by the will of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy, founder of the Christian Science church, for the benefit of the denomination, has been declared void by the Massachusetts supreme court. The court holds, however, that a charitable trust has been created and that new trusts may be appointed to administer it. The trust was to have been administered by the directors of the mother church in Boston, but the court decided that the trust provisions were nullified under the statute limiting the amount of the income from bequests to religious organizations to $2,000 annually.

Blacking Deal Disastrous.

Minneapolis, Oct. 10.—Fred O. Blazier, formerly of Kansas City, but who has been living here since Oct. 1, was arrested by Minneapolis detectives on a warrant sworn out in Kansas City, charging him with obtaining $700 from two business men there. He represented that he had made $15,000 in Portland, Ore., by manufacturing shoe polish from secret formula he had obtained from one manufacturer of a well known polish. The complainants invested $700 in the business.

Refuses to Meet Strikers.

Duluth, Oct. 10.—After making a statement Tuesday offering to take back all old employes who had not participated in the rioting incident to the present car strike here, Manager Warren of the Duluth Street Car company declared that he would not meet a committee of the men. The committee declared that the strikers are ready to go back to work on Manager Warren's announced terms and ask Mr. Warren to receive a committee before they will return to work.

Scores the Harvester Trust.

Des Moines, Oct. 10.—The harvester trust of which George W. Perkins is said to be one of the principal stockholders and who is alleged to be the financial backer of Col. Theodore Roosevelt's campaign by Gov. Thomas Marshall of Indiana, came in for its share of condemnation at the hands of the Democratic vice presidential candidate in his address in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium here.

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Oct. 10. — Wheat showed strength today on account of growing fear of a general conflict in the Balkans. The market, however, was not one-sided, the selling at times being somewhat aggressive. Cold unsettled weather northwest aided the bulls. Opening prices were unchanged to ⅛c higher. December started at 91⅞@92⅛c, a gain of ⅛@¼c, reacted to 91⅝@91¾c and rallied to 92c.

A sharp advance ensued after reports came that Russia had mobilized troops on the frontier. Closing prices were strong, with December 1⅛@1¼c net higher at 93@93⅛c.

Rainstorms had a bullish effect on corn. December opened ⅛c to ⅛@¼c up at 53⅝@53¾c to 53⅞c, touched 53¾c and climbed to 53⅞@53¼c.

Afterward prices remained firm with wheat. The close for December was ⅛@⅜ above last night at 53⅝c.

Active export inquiry lifted oats. December started the same as last night at 32½c, and rose to 32⅝c.

200,000 Swedish Petition.

New York, Oct. 10. — The United Swedish society, representing 200,000 residents of New York state of that nationality, will forward to Governor Dix a petition signed by the officers of the various societies which make up the united organization asking that a pardon be granted Folke Engel Brandt, the former valet of Mortimer Schiff, who is serving a thirty-year sentence for burglary. The petition charges that the sentence given Brandt is cruel and inhuman.

More Than 125,000 Bushels Seed Potatoes.

Minneapolis.—More than 125,000 bushels of seed potatoes from Minnesota will find a market in Oklahoma this year, according to Professor James A. Wilson, director of the Oklahoma agricultural experiment station at Stillwater, Okla. Professor Wilson, who has graduated in the class of 1900 at the agricultural college, was visiting on the farm school campus and investigating the new silo constructed by the dairy department. He contemplates building one after the Minnesota pattern at the Oklahoma experiment station.

"Minnesota is known over the country as the bread and butter state," said Professor Wilson. "Besides getting practically all our seed potatoes from this state, Oklahoma gets a large quantity of butter and flour from Minnesota. We have but five co-operative creameries in Oklahoma, compared to more than 800 in Minnesota. The next session of the legislature will be asked to enact a law similar to Minnesota's in the regulation of co-operative creameries.

"The Minnesota potato has proven the best seed for our climate and soil. The product is healthy and coming from a cooler climate, is a hardy product. Not only is the Red River potato in demand, but seed grown in all parts of the state commands a premium market."

In a conference with Dean T. L. Haecker of the dairy department late yesterday, Professor Wilson went over the dairy laws of Minnesota and with friends will present similar acts before the next session of the Oklahoma legislature. Plans for silo construction also be used by the Oklahoma experiment stations.

TRY TO WRECK TRAIN.

Soo Line Passenger Runs Into Open Switch.

St. Paul.—What is said by the railroad officials to have been a plan to wreck No. 4 passenger train on the Soo line in North St. Paul, occurred when the train, running at a speed of 35 miles an hour, ran into an open switch and collided with a boxcar on the siding. The engine of the passenger train was slowed down before it struck the freight with much force and aside from shoving it down the track a short distance, no damage was done.

When M. J. Wilson, engineer of the train, climbed down from the cab to examine his engine, he discovered that the switch had been tampered with by some one who had thrown it open purposely. While he was making an examination of the switch a rock was thrown through the mail car door. A moment later another rock crashed through the door of the baggage car, missing the head of one of the men by only a fraction of an inch. Members of the train crew made an effort to locate the perpetrators of the deed, but without success.

Minnesota Greeks Await the Word.

Minneapolis.—Members of the Minnesota Greek colony are on the qui vive, awaiting the official declaration of war between Turkey and the Balkan states, but so far have taken no definite steps toward sending men to Greece to assist their country. Lieutenant Forches of the Greek-American Volunteer company said last night no meetings would be held until it had been definitely decided that there is to be a war. "It would be useless for us to ask men to go to Greece if there is to be no war," he said. "The moment we hear definitely that a clash is to come, we will make our arrangements."

Milkmen Arrange Defense.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis milk men arrested recently on warrants from the county attorney charging them with forming a trust, held a meeting for the purpose of engaging counsel and to discuss the situation leading up to their arrest. The meeting was held in the office of the Minneapolis Milk company. Those who attended it said the meeting was called to determine whether to reduce the price of milk or not. "That question is beyond discussion," said A. R. Ruhnke,

RAID "RAILWAY OFFICE"

An Extensive "Get-Rich-Quick" Scheme Alleged.

Minneapolis.—In the recent raid on the Minneapolis headquarters of the North & South Railroad association, capitalized at $2,500,000, located in a hall room at the Fairmont hotel, Ninth street and Hennepin avenue, and the arrest of John M. Wiley, president and treasurer; Fred Breckley, secretary and chief engineer, and A. I. Buell, an associate, the postal authorities have broken up, they say, what they charge is one of the greatest and farthest reaching "get-rich-quick" schemes that has developed for years. By a series of moves extending from Friday night to yesterday, the entire official staff of the association and the records were taken into custody.

The plan of the three promoters was the construction of a railroad from Winnipeg to New Orleans, the exact location of which, through Minnesota, shifted from time to time, Assistant United States District Attorney Joel M. Dickey said, according to the willingness or unwillingness of particular localities to buy stock. For some time past, acting upon reports from Little Falls and elsewhere that the men were using the mails for fraudulent purposes, Rush D. Simmons, chief postal inspector, said the government had been after the men.

The bail of John M. Wiley was fixed at $5,000, and that of Fred Breckley and A. I. Buell at $2,500 each by United State Judge Page Morris.

Moorhead to Send Delegation.

Moorhead.—Secretary Wright of the Moorhead Commercial club has asked for twenty-five reservations for local business men and manufacturers for the "get-after-new business" special train, which has been arranged for by the Commercial club of Fargo for the purpose of making a trip over the Surrey-Minot cutoff of the Great Northern. Moorhead was invited to participate and join the commercial men of Fargo in making social calls on the busines men in the new towns. One of the invited guests of the Fargo club is S. G. Comstock of this city.

Beveridge Goes to Duluth.

Duluth.—Albert J. Beveridge spoke Monday night in Duluth instead of in Minneapolis, as first planned by the progressive party managers in the state. Mr. Beveridge was billed originally for Duluth, but when word came late Friday that Theodore Roosevelt would be in Duluth Oct. 10, Hugh T. Halbert decided to transfer Beveridge to the Twin Cities. The proposition was put up to the Minneapolis committee, which decided against it because the time was too short to get up a proper meeting. Meanwhile, Duluth was insisting on both Beveridge and Roosevelt.

Mankato Man to Prison.

Mankato.—Judge Pfau in district court sentenced H. G. Brewer to Stillwater prison for an indeterminate period up to five years, for robbing ginseng growers of this county of their growing plants, having last week taken nearly $1,000 worth. He said he had turned it all over to officers. He gave as an excuse for his crime that he needed money to be operated on for goitre and so committed the deed for which he was charged.

Auto Purloiner Man's Own Son.

Albert Lea.—O. J. Connors' stolen automobile was located at Wells by Sheriff Subby and the guilty party proved to be no other than Mr. Conners' son, 15 years of age, who had been away from home for several weeks. The boy was placed under arrest in Wells and was brought back here, but he may not be prosecuted by his father. The car had not been damaged and the youth of the lad may have a bearing.

Search for Lost Hunter.

Eveleth.—About fifty men left here for Zim to search for J. H. Corbett, 65 years old, the Adams mine captain who disappeared Sunday while hunting partridges with two companions in the Stone lake country. It is feared he is lost in the big swamp in that locality and may starve. His two companions fired guns all night, and came across the place where he had camped last night.

Mining Leases Cancelled.

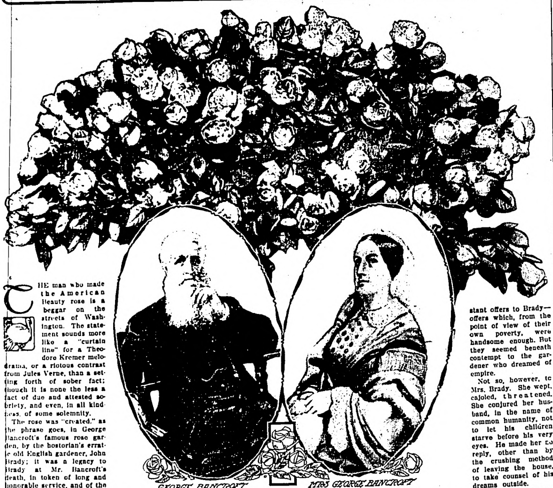
Brainerd.—The Oliver Iron Mining company, which is a subsidiary of the United States Steel corporation, has cancelled more than a dozen mining leases on property at the west end of Mesaba range near Grand Rapids.

Minister Urges Death Penalty.

Minneapolis.—That the old capital punishment should be re-established in states where it has been abolished and that a failure to execute murderers is a dishonor to God, were statements made by Dr. Earle V. Pierce, in a sermon preached at the Central Baptist church. Dr. Pierce concluded a series of sermons on the general theme of "The Rights of the Individual and of the State Over Human Life." The text was, "Has the State the Right to Execute Murderers, and if so, is it Expedient?"

TRAGEDY OF THE AMERICAN BEAUTY ROSE

MAN WHO CREATED IT IS BEGGAR ON THE STREETS OF WASHINGTON



THE man who made the American Beauty rose is a beggar on the streets of Washington. The statement sounds more like a "curtain line" for a Theodore Kremer melodrama, or a riotous contrast from Jules Verne, than a setting forth of sober fact; though it is none the less a fact of due and attested sobriety, and even, in all kindness, of some solemnity.

The rose was "created," as the phrase goes, in George Bancroft's famous rose garden, by the hostorian's erratic old English gardener, John Brady; it was a legacy to Brady at Mr. Bancroft's death, in token of long and honorable service, and of the fact that Brady had brought it to perfection only after years of inexhaustible patience and care; and it was sold for a pittance, but that is getting ahead of the story.

Once upon a time, in 1889, to be precise, after George Bancroft had returned from long diplomatic service in Germany, and had settled down to a tranquilizing old age in his home in Washington, there grew up among the flower enthsiasts of England, America and the continent a zealous quest for a red rose which could be made to bloom in winter.

Mr. Bancroft's ascendency as a rose culturist in this country had been beyond dispute for half a century.

At the time of the inauguration of Abraham Lincoln, Mrs. Lincoln despaired of pleasing herself in the arrangements of the White House garden, so she called on Mr. Bancroft for help. This she received in such good and flowing measure that, in acknowledgment of her debt, she sent to the historian a splendid bouquet of japonicas. In reply he wrote her that "for magnificence, the bouquet was a fair counterpart of Mr. Lincoln's brains."

What of official recognition then was still lacking for Mr. Bancroft's genius as a rose grower was supplied by Herr Bismarck, who so admired the American minister to Berlin that he supplied him with roses and rose cuttings from the great Bismarck estates in Pomerania.

But all this while, despite the genial international co-operation of rose growers, diplomats and statesmen, the red rose refused to grow in winter. Its wintertime behavor was, in fact, exasperating beyond all words. If, after months of herculean effort, a branch could be made to put forth a bud some fine morning, it was a sickly purple by noon, and brown by sunset.

Little yellow roses had thrived, time out of mind, and these, with camellias and japonicas, were the sole reliance of those who would have flowers for winter decoration.

Matters were in this state when Mr. Bancroft moved to Washington, bringing into his charming old house on Lafayette square two trusted servants: Herman, who came from Berlin, and John Brady, the gardener, from England.

John Brady was installed in the quaint L-shaped garden, which ran back to Seventeenth street, and he was instructed, among other things, to reap the glory of creating a tractable red rose.

The task was one which jumped with his own desires. The Bancroft garden was scarcely less a personal pride to Brady than to Bancroft, and both secretly believed that no praise of it could be really to extravagant. It became a rendezvous for Washington's most distinguished persons; how much so, one can guess from President Arthur's dictum that "The president is permitted to accept the invitations of members of his cabinet, Supreme court judges, and—Mr. George Bancroft."

Dozens of times John Brady seemed on the eve of being able to announce the success of his red rose ventures. Once a friend from France brought Mr. Bancroft a cutting of a red rose called "Madame Ferdinand Jemain," which, although it had failed at home, was thought to have possibilities in an American climate. Brady nursed it along with a fair degree of conscientiousness, none too pleased, likely enough, that France had been so premature in this honorable business. But the little alien rose bush sickened and died, and was thrown aside, presumably at the end of its history.

Then came the shocking news from England that William Francis Bennett had won the red rose race. He had had an astonishing luck with his plants, and had finally established their hardihood and their permanence of color. Bancroft and Brady mourned in secret. True, there was still the American championship to be tried for, but the first fine careless rapture of success had been already captured.

A rose culturist in New York had the good fortune, about this time, to make a new flower, which he promptly named the "George Bancroft," but this was not compensation enough, either for the historian or his gardener. So back they went to the seedling beds, with renewed determination.

In the face of such a touching faith and such abounding energy, the fates were bound to be kind. And so, one morning, a delighted yell from his gardener brought Mr. Bancroft scurrying into his garden, to find that in a bed of white and yellow seedlings there stood a strange red rose, looking for all the world as if it had come to stay. Its stem had a stiffness the like of which had never before been seen. Its petals looked to have the hardihood to weather a hundred disasters.

Where it had come from nobody could find out. It might have been a stalwart seed left from the scored and discredited "Mme. Ferdinand Jemain," and it might have been just that mysterious freak which the rose culturist has come to take for granted under the name of a "sport."

At any rate, there it was, and it remained to be developed.

For it must be known at the outset that getting a single bloom is the least of the rose culturist's troubles. In fact, it merely marks their beginning.

All new brands of roses are grown from these curiosities called "sports." In a bed of seedlings, about once in so often, an orphan rose will appear which will bear no trace of its parentage, and will usually be found to have neither longevity nor the ability to reproduce after its kind. Its seeds will revert to type.

So John Brady set forth on the uphill climb to perfecting his little red "sport." In due time he did it. And when he had three bushes which he could personally guarantee to reproduce red roses after the original pattern he placed them in the garden where they would likeliest be seen. He had not to wait for the clamor of approval. Guests for tea in the afternoon were led into the garden by Mr. Bancroft for a "private view" of the coveted red rose.

"Oh, that must be Bennett's new rose, the English beauty," said the first woman to spy it.

"Not at all, madame," said Bradly, proudly, "that is the American red rose."

"Then it is the American Beauty," said the lady, not to be outdone.

And then and there the name originated, and not all of Brady's stormiest persuasions could ever dislodge it. For the rose's maker had already decided that it should be named for Judge Hagner, a warm friend of Mr. Bancroft, and Brady's bright particular star, and to have the choice of its name and the christening ceremony swept out of his reach at one fell swoop would have tried the patience of a saint.

Brady finally made the best of it, and contented himself with assuring Judge Hagner that things would have been different if he had had any say in them.

From this time on, however, the history of John Brady and his precious rose begins to take a somber turn. Mr. Bancroft died in 1891, bequeathing the American Beauty to Brady as a testament of his affection and appreciation. The famous gardens passed into other hands, and Brady moved, with his large and hungry family and his handful of American Beauty rosebushes, into a little house outside of Washington.

Things went rapidly from bad to worse. Brady had neither money nor the knack of picking up odd jobs. His eldest son was still too young for responsibility, and the ages of the others, in regular succession, diminished punctually by a year. His wife was frail, out of patience with poverty, and worn to exhaustion with the care of children.

Brady survived the first part of this bleak period by observing the Spanis proverb, "Patience, and shuffle the cards." No stress of want could make him part with his rose bushes, though his wife, regarding him as a sort of monomaniac on this subject, put her noblest persuasions into the task of undoing his resolve.

To his reiterated tales of the fortune that would come to him some day through the American Beauty rose Mrs. Brady reasonably replied that she and the children were hungry that very day and hour, and that more than her soul was sick with hope deferred.

But some prescience of the inherent value of his rose kept Brady obdurate to appeals, domestic or professional.

The world of fashion had all but forgotten the interregnum of the American Beauty in the Bancroft gardens. Rose culturists had thought, many of them, that it had never outlived its heyday. Only a few of the more observant had remembered that the treasured bushes had been a legacy from Bancroft to his gardener.

One of these last was the elder of the Field Brothers, wholesale florists on the old Seventh street road, outside of Washington. They made constant offers to Brady—offers which, from the point of view of their own poverty, were handsome enough. But they seemed beneath contempt to the gardener who dreamed of empire.

Not so, however, to Mrs. Brady. She wept, cajoled, threatened. She conjured her husband, in the name of common humanity, not to let his children starve before his very eyes. He made her no reply, other than by the crushing method of leaving the house, to take counsel of his dreams outside.

It was on one of these forlorn occasions that Mrs. Brady's patience snapped and her loyalty faltered. She seized the pampered rose bushes, made haste to Field Brothers, and sold them, one and all, for scarcely more than the price of a single meal.

When this was told to Brady, he touched the hour of his supreme tribulation. His world fell away from beneath his feet. Not once in the 18 years since then has the stupor which came upon him lifted for long enough for realization of his misery to sift through.

Matters went merrily with the rose he made. Field Brothers, by skillful advertising, were able to sell their exclusive right to its reproduction for $5,000. Within a year ten times that amount was being paid for it by enthusiastic purchasers here and abroad.

For ten years past a moderate estimate of the amount of money spent annually all over the world for American Beauty roses is $25,000,000.

John Brady is still homeless in Washington. His wife and the famished children have died, one after another. He himself is the recipient of constant small charities from Washington florists, any of whom will give him bits of work, spraying, or cutting, when his mind can be held to his task.

At the funeral of William R. Smith, the famous old Scotch superintendent of the National Botanical gardens, who had, at eighty, the reputation of knowing more public men—diplomats, statesmen, and politicians—than any other person then living in the United States, there was an assemblage of men aggregating almost incalculable personal distinction. Into the midst of them crept a shabby, bent old man, who, with averted eyes and bowed head sidled into a corner and wept with unmistakable suffering. He was without any doubt the most humble and obscure sorrower at the funeral ceremony. He was John Brady, maker of the American Beauty.

Mercifully he does not feel the infinite pathos of his lot. His real tragedy ended 18 years ago, when, having nothing left to hope, he had nothing left to fear. If you search him out and question him, you will find him curiously apathetic.

"Me? I am nothing—nobody," he will say to you. "My rose? Yes, that was my fortune, but they took it away from me. I cannot make another—I am nothing."

And he will tell you this with the most exquisite manners, learned, perhaps, in the Bancroft gardens. His eyes will lighten, his voice will intone gently and courteously, and for an instant before the lethargy steals over him again you will glimpse the power that could drag from earth and make permanent the most wonderful rose she gives.

He has kept, or perhaps got back, an impressive sweetness of nature. One thing only stirs him to overt flashes of rebellious misery—it is to be asked to see or handle an American Beauty rose.

TO ADD TO MENTAL ENERGY

It took a German scientist to invent the intellectual pill. The basis of this is a drug called antikenotoxin, which has the quality of neutralizing the poisons which are said to be the cause of mental fatigue. Doctor Weichardt, professor at the University of Erlangen, recently demonstrated that the muscles of animals suffering from physical or mental weariness secrete a certain poison, to which he gave the name kenotoxin. Then it was shown that anti-kenotoxin injected into a man increases physical and mental vigor. This led Professor Lorentz to think of utilizing antikenotoxin to stimulate work. He considered that errors of calculation, for example, should be set down to fatigue. He found that problems given to his class in mathematics at the beginning of the lesson was solved in five minutes by three students; in eight minutes by thirty-three; in ten minutes by sixteen. Other similar problems, given at the close of the lesson, were solved in five minutes by one student; in eight minutes by twenty-seven; in ten minutes by twenty-three. Evidently, said the professor, it is mental fatigue that causes the slower work. On a subsequent day, Professor Lorentz vaporized antikenotoxin in the classroom first before the close of the period and then set his pupils problems as before. The result was that they were solved in three minutes by three students; in four minutes by thirty-one, and in ten minutes by one. And the solutions contained fewer errors than usual. This was the origin of Doctor Lorentz' intellectual pills! European physicians are still a bit sceptical, saying the pills must be subjected to more thorough tests.

So It Seems.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Where Caddies are Girls

One of the pleasing features of the golf links in Germany is the girl caddie. She is picturesquely dressed, attentive to her duties and generally more intelligent than the boys usually employed in other lands. The custom of having girls for caddies is now spreading in France and Great Britain. Our illustration shows a group of caddies on the Thuringen golf links in Saxony.

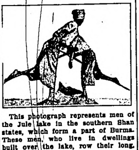
TINY BUSINESS BUILDING

What is believed to be the smallest business "building" in the world is located at 2 Light street, Baltimore, Md. This building, for it is a building inasmuch as a building permit was required from the city authorities before it could be erected, stands on a triangular shaped lot, has a frontage of 2 feet 7 inches, a depth of 1 foot 5 inches, and is 6 feet tall. The ground upon which it stands is a remnant left when Light street was widened following the great fire of 1904. At that time the city bought all of the lots fronting on this street, as it was then, took what land was necessary for the reconstructed street, and sold the remnants at public auction. The remnant upon which the smallest "building" stands was sold to Joseph P. Jarboe, who, in common with adjacent owners, enjoys the privilege of using a portion of the area way in the rear. Otherwise his "property" would be of little use to him.

POPULATION OF THE OCEAN

A striking proof of the vastness and variety of the population of the sea is furnished by the results of explorations made by a committee of the zoological department of the British association in that part of the Irish sea surrounding the Isle of Man. Out of 1,000 species of marine animals collected, 224 never before had been found in that region, 38 were previously unknown as inhabitants of British water, and 17 were entirely new to science; indeed, they were animals whose existence had never been suspected.

ROWING WITH THEIR LEGS



This photograph represents men of the Jule lake in the southern Shan states, which form a part of Burma. These men, who live in dwellings built over the lake, row their long, narrow boats with their legs, keeping up a good speed for a long time.

GERMANY'S WOMAN OFFICIALS

Germany has 11,000 women filling honorary offices in cities and on charity boards. In 185 municipalities 7,000 women are in active service for the care of the poor and orphans. In 115 towns there are women serving on the school boards. The Union for Motherhood Protection is said to be the only woman's organization which receives the approval of the kaiser. This society was founded by Frau Stoecker and numbers its members by the thousands, including every class and condition, men and women, in Germany.

TO REBUILD NOTED THEATER

Once more the Pergola theater of Florence is to be rebuilt. It was originally erected in 1652, and was the property of a society of aristocrats. In 1775 it was torn down and replaced by a building made of more substantial material than wood. It then had 2,000 seats, besides 114 boxes, and gradually became the leading opera house of Italy. In it many first performances were given of operas by Puccini (the rival of Gluck), Paisiello, Gimarosa, Cherubini, Donizetti, Rossini, Verdi, and many others.

WEARS IRON FALSE TEETH

S. P. Munday of Fort Worth, Tex., prides himself as being the only man living with cast-iron teeth. He wears a set of upper teeth made of iron, cast by a metal company in Fort Worth. They weigh 4¾ ounces. He says they are as satisfactory as ordinary false teeth and demonstrated their solidity by sounding the metal on a piece of steel. The plate and teeth are in one solid cast.

LONDON'S ABDUCTION CLUB

Clubs spring up with and without reason. One of the strangest on record was the Abduction club, organized in 1706 by some well-connected Irish youths in London, who banded themselves together to abduct heiresses and good-looking young women of gentle birth. As there was a large membership, many forced marriages took place in consequence of their exploits. The evil became eventually so serious that a special act of parliament was passed making abduction a capital offense. Two of the members were executed for the abduction of two wealthy sisters in 1779, but the club was disbanded till 1802.

GROUSE BROKE THE GAME LAW

C. E. Donaldson went to Tillamook one day recently looking for Game Warden Leach, for the purpose of filing a complaint against himself for assisting in the suicide of a grouse. It seems that while Mr. Donaldson and helpers were hauling hay from the field to his barn, they disturbed a flock of grouse, frightening the birds considerably, and one of the birds, crazed by fright, flew at Mr. Donaldson, who was on a load of hay, and struck him in the neck, knocking him down and nearly off the load. The force of the blow broke the bird's neck.

OLDEST SHIP IN SERVICE

The oldest ship in point of service is said to be the British steamer Edina, whose fifty-eighth birthday was recently celebrated in Melbourne and Beelong, and she is still going strong, with no sign of prospective superannuation. Originally she was a stoutly built sailing vessel, and as such was employed as a transport and dispatch boat between England and the Crimea. After the war she was purchased by an Australian ship-owning firm, and she has been working at the Antipodes ever since.

A COLLEGE GIRL OF EIGHTY

Mrs. A. D. Winship of the University of Wisconsin, in Madison, is no doubt the oldest "college girl" in America, if not in the world. She became a student at the University of Ohio when she was seventy-eight years old, and is now eighty. She expects to receive her diploma from Wisconsin in two years more. Her interest in the world and in life in general is as great as that of a woman with the greatest part of life ahead of her.

GREAT SPRING IN ARKANSAS

Arkansas has the largest spring in the world, Mammoth spring, entering into Spring river, a full-sized stream at its very source.

POOR MAN'S BRICK IN MEXICO

A crude but valuable art in Mexico is the making of adobe, sun-baked brick. If it were not for this crudely molded slab of sun-cured mud half the people of the Mexican republic would be shelterless. The rich and those of the middle class, who can afford it, build of stone. When the Spaniards came they denuded the forests to the extent that vast tracts were left treeless. Lumber is thus one of the rare commodities of Mexico.

The implements used by a Mexican mud-brick maker are of the most primitive kind; earthen jars to hold the water needed in the mixing, a wooden [illegible] in which the mud square[illegible] shaped, and his own deft palms. Some Mexican builders make only the walls of their homes of the adobe, and thatch with straw, palm fronds or banana stalks. Others, again, form both walls and roof of the adobe. When this is the case the adobe roof is supported by beams. As will be readily supposed, the adobe is of enormous weight, and if it is not well supported it is likely to collapse upon its owner's head.

When covered by a thick coat of cement, another production of Mexican art, the adobe walls stand for years without showing the least sign of crumbling. There are buildings in Mexico today, some of them public buildings, the cement-coated adobe walls of which were constructed fully a century ago.

CELLAR TRAP FOR TRAMPS

Mrs. Leroy Parton, wife of a homesteader living nine miles east of Keota, Cal., devised a unique system of keeping tramps away from the place when she entrapped one of them in her cellar and gave him such a fright that he promised to leave and never visit that part of the country again. The cellar, a large hole in the ground some distance from the house, is frequented by snakes. It has not been used for some time. When the tramp appeared and begged for food she told him that he could have a meal if he would get milk from the cellar. When he was inside the woman slammed down the door and sat on it. After the man had gone Mrs. Parton shot two rattlers in the cellar.

ACROBATIC FIRE BRIGADE

Japan in most ways is as modern as any other country and Tokio has a fire department that is quite up to date. But the old-time fire brigade of the city is still maintained as a spectacle, for its members are trained acrobats who do remarkable stunts on ladders and poles of bamboo.

CHANGING THE CAT'S FUR

A remarkable transformation of a cat's fur by temperature has been reported. A black cat was accidentally shut in the refrigerating chamber of a mail steamer in Sydney harbor, Australia, and was not discovered until about 32 days later, when the ship was off Aden. The cat was scarcely recognizable, the fur having become long and thick, changing to white on the back. Brought out in the intense heat of the Red sea, the heavy white coat rapidly fell out and the normal coat was restored.

Physical Culture on Beach

During the summer months at Hastings, England, classes in physical culture are maintained on the beach, attracting much interest and arousing the admiration of visitors. The pupils are all children, and they are put through their exercises dressed in bathing suits.

WHAT SHE WANTED

And Woman-Like, Miss Nancy Got It.

By JEANNE O. LOIZEAUX.

As Nancy, followed by young Tenny, came up from the lake and across the veranda of the inn she noted that her Aunt Ann's busy chatter to Mrs. Ordway ceased, and judged that she had been the subject under discussion. Aunt Ann was always hushing herself at Nancy's approach, and the girl had determined to find out why. Now, instead of going up to change her dress for a game of tennis she turned summarily on the good-looking, bronzed young fellow as they stood together in the hall.

"I'm going to change my mind instead of my dress, Mr. Tenny. Will you mind if I don't play until tomorrow?" He did mind, but said he did not, as politeness demanded.

"But you'll still go on the lake with me tomorrow?" he asked, as he prepared to go. She nodded her brown head with its close braids, and and he thought how adorable deep blue eyes were, and a smooth tanned face with an odd dimple in the left cheek, and a little boyish figure.

Rid of her shadow, Nancy deliberately entered the almost unused inn parlor and sat down near the open window to hear what her aunt, just outside, was saying about her. All summer the well-preserved old dame had worn an indefinable air of secrecy. Also she had ceased to persecute the girl with arguments why she should marry and settle down. Why?

"If at twenty-four a girl doesn't know what she wants she never will. I'm letting her alone to see what she will do. I've given her every advantage since her mother died when she was sixteen. She's had attention enough for a dozen normal girls, and has made no use of it. She shies away from a decent marriage like a skittish colt! Now she can have her head! John Norton is coming up next week—"

"She seems at least to know what she doesn't want," snapped Mrs. Ordway. "John certainly has had summary treatment at her hands!"

"And seemingly just because he is in every respect eligible. It would be just the thing any other girl in her set would be wild to do. This winter when I reminded her that a younger man would have the wild-oats period to go through, and that he had passed it, she coolly said that if there was a wild-oat crop in her family she'd help sow as well as help reap it. Well, he's coming for another try with her."

"And—young Tenny? Who is he?"

"Nobody—that is, a cousin of the Fosters. A civil engineer without a cent to his name—going to South America this fall, practically an adventurer—but a gentleman. Therefore, Nancy finds him fascinating. Well, this summer is the end. If she refuses John Norton, I'm going to give her the little $5,000 her mother left her and wash my hands of her. Let's dress for the afternoon. Isn't it time?"

As the old dames lumbered toward the front door, Nancy made a swift, silent flight to her own room and sank into the first chair with both hands pressed to her burning cheeks.

"And—I let myself be managed, spied on, discussed like this!" A little thought roused her to planning a course of action. At least she would not be on hand "next week" to give Mr. Norton "his chance" before the assembled multitude! She would demand her little $5,000, put it in the bank, and study either nursing or medicine, as she had begged to be allowed to do when she left college three years before. She would be happy to fall out of the circle of doleassness and chatter.

As she dressed for lunch she felt a new life shaping itself for her. Eastman Tenny would—advise her. He was a man of action. At thirty he was beginning to do things, if his preparation had been long. She would ask him.

At the stair's foot he was waiting and asked to lunch with her, and afterwards led her to the porch and with an odd look on his face said:

"Will you do me a favor? I'm going to South America day after tomorrow. Just have a telegram. Will you—give me all day tomorrow?" Something seemed to drop a weight upon her spirit. He was going!

"Why, of course! I'd like to," she answered.

"Dress in tramping things, and go where I say—without your aunt?"

"Anywhere!" she replied with her steadfast comradeliness.

The next day found Nancy and the young engineer tramping the miles to a rough half-mountain, lunching over a campfire, enjoying themselves hugely like two children with no mention of past or future. The present was enough. In the early afternoon they reached the wind-swept top and looked down on a world glorious with late September colors, a glow of splendor.

"'The world and the glories thereof,'" he quoted. "Nancy, just sit down and let me show you something."

She obeyed, and he seated himself beside her. All he produced was a thick package of kodak pictures, but wonderingly she looked at them.

They were pictures of bridges he had helped build, then of wild South American scenery, of gangs of men at work, men in rough clothes doing rough work, of mountains and deserts and rivers.

"This is a sort of panorama of my life," he explained whimsically. "I love it. I love to do things. The Fosters have given me the first summer-resort-polite-society time I have had since my people died when I was eighteen. I am free to say that I'd rather die than live as they do. I want real work and real people. And I want what I want. I am on the way to get it, too—save the greatest thing. I don't know about that yet." He paused, and somehow she had nothing to say.

"Finally," he said, "here is the roost where I spent last year and must spend this." He placed before her a picture of a mountain cabin, set amid splendid heights and spaces, with small cabins about it.

"This is—home, Nancy. It has a few rugs and books and things, a cupboardful of blue dishes, and a kitchen. There are the men's cabins—some of the men have wives and children. They have only me to look to, and I can't do—a woman's work. There is no school for the children, there is no one to show them a higher standard of living. And this," he concluded soberly, "is the real workaday I—I." It was a kodak of himself in work clothes, tall and strong and unconventional. He rose, and taking her by the hand, helped her to her feet.

"These pictures represent all I am and all I have, except a few thousands in bank. I have no relatives nearer than the Fosters. I brought you out here in the wild to tell you of my wild life before—I offered you the whole outfit. Do you want it?"

Something compelled her to look up at the serious, resolute face, and yet she couldn't answer.

"You know I want a wife, a comrade, a helper—not a toy or a mere ornament, though heaven knows you're sufficiently ornamental for—a king's court! It's wicked to ask you—but I do—want you, Nancy. Do you know yet—just what you want?" His voice was whimsically tender.

Nancy remembered her aunt's words, and smiled as she stood facing this big young fellow and his odd fashion of offering himself.

"Oh," she said suddenly, truth and courage coming with a rush to her lips, "I—do know what I want! I want you! and all the things you have, and what you do and—what you are! You—must know I want you!"

As the went happily back to the inn she said amusedly: "I wonder what auntie will say to a twelve-hour notice for a wedding? I'm afraid I haven't been exactly a comfort to her."

The man laughed. "From her conversation on the porch after I left you this noon I gather that Mr. John Norton will not have his 'last try.'"

Nancy looked at him reprovingly. "Were you listening, too. I went purposely into the parlor. I heard it all. Did you? Did that make you tell me?"

"You were due to be told sooner or later—but it didn't make me any slower about it!"

They looked at each other and smiled.

Bulldog Attacked Horse.

An extraordinary occurrence was witnessed at Castleford, Yorkshire England, not long since, a bulldog making an attack upon a valuable mare, and having to be killed to rescue the horse. The dog was a valuable one, belonging to the landlord of the North-Eastern hotel. When the animal was passing along Station road, near the hotel, the dog suddenly flew at its throat, but failed to get hold. The animal was driven on towards its stable, but the dog could not be induced to leave it, and followed down a couple of streets until the shop was reached. There the dog got hold beneath the mare's body. It was impossible to free the unfortunate animal, and the dog was finally dispatched with a pole-ax. The dog had never before, it is said, shown any sign of mischief, and had, in fact, been so good-natured that children had been allowed to play with it. Its owner recently refused a good offer for it. The horse is recovering.

Queer People.

"These artists are a queer lot."

"How now?"

"One of them wanted to paint an old stone bridge on my place. I thought I'd do him a favor, so I had the bridge all fixed up and put into thorough repair."

"Well?"

"Darned if he didn't get grumpy."

NEW TYPE OF WORKINGMAN

Elevation of the Race Assured When the Finest in Literature Is His Preference.

The type that counts is the young collier who goes in for economics. . . . Searching the Mid-Rhondda shops for strike literature, the writer brushed shoulders with one of these young colliers. You might have imagined by his dress, by his cloth cap, pulled down until its peak almost covered his eyes, by his muffler, that his interests were easily guessed. Such as he, you would have said, supported the numerous amusement halls of this dreary valley, made up the crowd that excited itself over football and boxing. We were looking over the shelves where the "remainders," "second hand," and new and old reprints were delightfully mixed. Here were the fat "World's Classics," before their thin paper days. . . . . My neighbor picked out the first volume of Buckley's "History of Civilization," and mused, openly, "I think I'll have a bob's worth of this." Then he looked up at me, inviting conversation. "Good enough," he said, "for a day like this, eh?" I ventured to suggest that Buckley was a bit discredited today. He laughed. "Oh," he replied, "perhaps he is a little antiquated, but he'll help to pass away a few hours." So he paid his shilling, and, slipping the thick little volume into his pocket, he went.—Cambria Leader.

Don't Get Up in a Hurry.

Don't jump up the first thing your eyes are open. Remember that while you sleep the vital organs are at rest. The vitality is lowered and the circulation not so strong.

A sudden spring out of bed is a shock to these organs, especially to the heart, as it starts pumping the blood suddenly. Don't be in such a hurry. Stretch and yawn and yawn and stretch. Stretch the arms and legs, stretch the whole body. A good yawn and stretch is better even than a cold bath. Take time. It will keep you young and add years to your life.—From the Family Doctor.

CATCHES GAME FOR QUARTER

Bradley Kocher of Detroit Tigers Is Called From Grandstand to Earn Munificent Sum.

Had the manager of the Easton team of the now defunct Atlantic league refused to give Jack Kocher, now second catcher of the Detroit team, the 25 cents that he paid to witness a game at Easton in 1909 the Tigers would probably be without one of the best young backstops in the game. That was the only condition on which he would catch for Easton when he was picked out of the stand after the only catcher that team had was crippled by a foul.

It is the merest bit of luck that gave Kocher his start in baseball. It happened this way. Kocher lived at White Haven, near Philadelphia, and a short distance from Easton. A big, husky farmer's boy drifted into Easton to visit his cousin, said boy being Kocher, on a day when the Easton team was playing a double-header against Sunbury, another Atlantic league team.

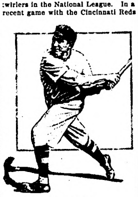
The cousin suggested that they spend the afternoon at the ball game and Kocher, who was something of a catcher in White Haven, agreed to go along. In the seventh inning of the first game Catcher Barret was put out with a bunged finger and the game was about to be called off when the cousin tipped the manager off to the fact that Kocher could catch.

Kocher didn't want to catch a game that he had paid to see, and so informed the manager, making the proposition that he would catch if he received his quarter back. An agreement reached, he put on Barret's uniform and caught eleven innings of star baseball. The following day Lave Cross, the old Athletic and Washington third baseman, came to Easton with his Mount Carmel team. Kocher threw to all the bases with such speed and ease that Cross told Connie Mack and Kocher has had a job ever since.

PITCHER LOSES LITTLE TIME

Brooklyn Twirler Accomplishes Notable Feat in Recent Game With Cincinnati Reds.

Pitcher Ragon of the Brooklyn Dodgers is one of the fastest working twirlers in the National League. In a recent game with the Cincinnati Reds but one hour and ten minutes were needed to enable Ragon to defeat the westerners. Ragon omits all unnecessary flourishes and keeps right at work all the time he is in the box, never taking a breathing spell, nor allowing his catcher any rest.



Pitcher Ragon.

Triple Play Unassisted.

First Baseman William Rapps of the Portland Baseball club of the Pacific Coast league made a triple play unassisted in a recent game between Portland and Oakland. Oakland runners were on first and second bases. The batsman hit a low liner toward first and the base runers, thinking the ball could not be fielded, sprinted ahead. Rapps scooped up the ball with one hand before it touched the ground. He touched first base before the runner could get back and then raced to second in time to get the third man.

Good to Tesreau.

They had to strain a point to make a no-hit game for Jeff Tesreau at Philadelphia on September 6, but not because the Big Bear did not do his part. The disputed hit was a short fly hit by Paskert. Both Merkle and Wilson went after it and let it drop between them. It was first scored as a hit, but Merkle afterwards declared without batting an eye that he touched the ball and took an error, so that Tesreau's hit column might be a blank.

Arties in Mix-Up.

Artie Hofman and Artie Butler did the Alphonse and Gaston act on a fly recently, and were roasted for being boneheads, but Manager Clarke came to their rescue with the explanation that it was due to both having the same names. Wagner shouted "Artie," for Butler and Carey shouted "Artie" for Hofman. The result was that both Arties ran after the ball and stopped to avoid a collision.

World Tour Unsettled.

The world tour of the Giants has not been settled definitely. McGraw called on Chairman Herrmann of the National commission, while the New York team was in Cincinnati, and got permission from that official to go ahead provided there was no objection from President Brush. The commission has assumed full charge of all postseason tours.

Mack Denies Story.

Connie Mack denies that he offered the position of assistant manager of the Athletics to Harry Davis, and says he thinks Davis will soon be leading another major league club, for he is still confident that Davis has the goods to deliver if he can get things to breaking right.

Great Work by Richie.

Lou Richie of the Chicago Cubs has done great work in the box for the team this year. He is only a pick-up pitcher, but his splendid twirling has helped mightily in putting the Cubs in the pennant race.

BRIGHT FUTURE FOR BIG JEFF TESREAU

Jeff Tesreau of New York Giants.

Of all the pitchers who broke into the major leagues this season Jeff Tesreau of the Giants looks the most promising. His no-hit game against the Phils recently stamps him as a man possessing the goods.

Tessy has the gigantic build and the strength of a mighty twirler. Like Ed Walsh he is ideally constructed for a spit-ball hurler. Unlike Walsh, he came, into his own the first year—it took Walsh about two seasons before he really got going.

During the early part of the season Tesreau was a delight and a despair to McGraw. "He seems to have everything a pitcher should have, yet he don't seem to be coming across," the Giant boss is reported as saying. But today Tessy is McGraw's chief reliance.

Like other wise managers, this McGraw can spot budding talent and is patient during its development. Look how he waited two years while Rube Marquard was getting back into his stride. He was willing to wait that long or longer for Tesreau, but this is one time he didn't have to hang around.

Some day Tesreau probably will be called the "King of Pitchers," a proud title held the last ten years by Messrs Mathewson, Brown, Walsh, Johnson and Wood in the order named. The kings of former days are fewer—because they stretched over a longer period of time. Look 'em over—Radbourne, Spalding, Clarkson and Rusie. Perhaps we have missed a dozen or so, but no harm is done in the telling.

HOW JENNINGS GOT STARTED

Leader of Detroit Tigers Worked His Way From Pennsylvania Coal Mine to Bar.

Hughey Jennings came out of a coal mine without much education or much of anything else. He saw in baseball a chance for something better and he worked both on and off the field to improve himself and his people.

After he got through playing ball because his arm wore out he coached Cornell, studying law at the same time, and eventually graduated. When he is not leading his team and tearing up grass on the base-lines he is the head of the firm of Jennings & Jennings, attorneys at Scranton, Pa., near where he crawled out of an anthracite mine to become leader of two great baseball clubs.

Hugh Jennings.

He is quite a skillful lawyer—and they say when he sticks up one leg, doubles his fists and yells "e—yah" at a jury the opposing attorney quits.

Wants No Pitch-Outs.

Ainsmith, who catches Walter Johnson with such excellent results, has discontinued the call for pitch outs entirely. He argues that the runner as a rule is only bluffing when he dances off first, and that it is simple foolishness to waste balls upon him. Ainsmith has perfect confidence in his ability to nail him, and he usually does.

Getting Away From Superstition.

Parson Nickolson, a former second baseman for Detroit, says one of the chief differences between ball players of today and those in his time is that the modern players are getting away from superstition. That's one of the best comparisons, without hitting either side, we've heard in many a day.

Hard Hitting Pitcher.

Bill McCorry, pitcher, made two hits, one a double, the other a single, in one inning, when sent in as pinch hitter for the San Francisco team recently.

NOTES of the DIAMOND

Boston fans now want to buy Jake Stahl an auto.

Butler, who went from St. Paul to Pittsburg, made good in fine style.

Larry Lajoie says Walter Johnson is a better pitcher than Joe Wood.

Carrigan's throwing to second is about as perfect as a human arm can make it.

Gonzales, the Cuban, who has been signed by the Boston Nationals, can't speak English.

Herzog of the Giants is going to attend the agricultural school at Cornell this winter.

Hughie Jennings is spending much of his time telling how he missed having Jeff Tesreau.

Critics say the Giants don't like speed and especially are weak against a fast one with a hop to it.

The trainer who had "a second Ed Walsh, but didn't know when, in Tesreau" can pretty nearly guess the date now.

Mike Mowrey of the St. Louis Nationals is sure to be traded before spring if Roger Bresnahan has his way.

Lee Magee is improving wonderfully in his fielding and batting, and should be a great help to the Cardinals next year.

The applause that greeted George Stovall every time he appeared on the Naps' field this summer broke Davis' heart.

Ban Johnson is after George Hildebrand from the Pacific Coast league to join the American league staff next season.

Bill Everett, who has been managing the Cairo team in the Kitty league, has been fired and is looking for a new job.

Only two left-handers have pitched no-hit games in the American league. Hamilton of St. Louis is one and Jess Tannehill is the other.

The Giants have seven batters batting better than .300, while the Red Sox have but four. Tres Speaker leads them all with .391.

The Highlanders' new third baseman, Del Paddock, is a natural left-handed batter, but switches when hitting against a southpaw.

Fred Walker, the "Mysterious Mitchell" that caused so much talk on the Pacific coast a year ago, is now a member of the Cincinnati Reds.

It is said that the assessment of $18 membership dues is likely to cause a number of ball players to keep away from their newly formed organization.

Experts who sized up Pitcher Schegg, the Nebraska Indian whom Clark Griffith sent to Atlanta, declared that he had nothing but a wind-up.

John Connahan, general manager of the White Sox affairs, is wearing a broad smile because he is now a grandfather. It is a new experience for him.

TRIFLES THAT TEMPT

DELICACIES SUITABLE FOR DESSERT OR AFTERNOON TEA.

Colonial Cake Something That Any Hostess May Be Proud to Serve—Swedish Nut Wafers an Excellent Appetizer.

Colonial Cake.—Mix one teaspoon salt with one cup white corn meal, scald it with just enough hot water to dampen it. Then add enough cold milk to form a very stiff batter (almost a dough). Stir it well and drop in cakes about three-quarters of an inch in thickness on a buttered pan. Bake in a hot even for 25 minutes. Split open and butter while hot. Serve with sirup.

Walnut Custard Pie.—Prepare crust as usual and make custard as follows: One pint milk, two eggs, one-half cup sugar, salt, one-half teaspoon vanilla and one-half cup walnuts chopped quite fine. The nuts will rise to the top and form a thin crust, giving a delicious flavor.

English Apple Pie.—Butter a shallow agate dish. Slice apples into dish to fill it. Sprinkle on one cup sugar, one-half teaspoon salt and a little grated nutmeg. Put on two teaspoons butter in little bits, two tablespoons water and cover dish with pie paste in which has been cut several slits. Bake about 40 minutes. Serve hot with cream.

Prune Pie.—Take a tender crust and line the pie plate. Soak three-quarter pound prunes and cook tender with four tablespoons sugar and one-half cupful of grape or other fruit juice. Press through a colander, add two tablespoons of cholocate and two or three tablespoons more of the juice. Cover with lattice strips and bake.

Swedish Nut Wafers.—Cream one-fourth cupful of shortening, using butter and lard in equal proportions, and add three-fourths cupful of sugar gradually, while beating constantly; then add one egg, well beaten, two tablespoonfuls of milk and one teaspoonful of vanilla. Mix and sift one and one-third cupfuls of flour and one teaspoonful of baking powder and one-half teaspoonful of salt, and add to first mixture. Spread evenly on the bottom of a buttered inverted dripping pan, using a caseknife. Sprinkle with finely chopped nut meats and bake in a moderate oven 12 minutes. Cut in strips three-fourths of an inch wide by four and one-half inches long, and shape over a rolling pin. If strips become brittle before shaping is accomplished, return to oven to reheat. Repeat until the mixture is used. From one-third to one-half cupful of nut meats will be required.—Woman's Home Companion.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

If your floor matting has faded, but is not worn, give it a coat of varnish in any desired shade of varnish stain, and it will wear longer and look fine.

To take out the mark sometimes left after cleaning a garment with gasoline, lay over the place a piece of clean white tissue paper, and press with a hot iron. This will at once remove all trace of the stain.

If shoes have been thoroughly wet don't attempt to dry them near the stove. Rub in plenty of vaseline or plain lard and let stand in a cool place several days, and much of the original oil will be restored.

If the bedstead is really brass, a piece of flannel moistened in salt and vinegar will clean it. Slightly touch the spots, then with a clean flannel rub the entire surface of the brass, using a little whiting on a dry flannel as a final polish.

Don't pass hours each week blacking your stove. Ten cents' worth of stove enamel, which can be applied in a few minutes, will last six months, and all it needs is a daily wiping off with a damp cloth. Besides, it looks much better than blacking.

If you are troubled with black beetles in your rooms, make a paste of red lead, flour and water, roll out thinly with a glass bottle, and put on a hot baking sheet to dry. Strew around pipes and corners that they frequent. These wafers are highly poisonous, so must not be placed where children or household pets can get at them.

Household Hints.

The way to launder a round centerpiece and keep it flat.

Wash it with white soap in the usual way, wring out the centerpiece, have a piece of white muslin or a sheet spread upon the carpet, then take the centerpiece and spread it on the sheet or muslin, which should be larger than the centerpiece, pin the centerpiece all around the edges, and see that it is smooth. After it is pinned out put a cover over it to keep it clean while it is drying. This is an easier and better way than ironing. Be sure that the centerpiece is dry before taking it up.

Boiled Potatoes With Onion Sauce.

Boil potatoes in their jackets with bacon and onion sauce. The potatoes are cooked soft in boiling water and sent to table smoking hot, still in their skins, with a bit of salt sprinkled over them. Each person peels his own potatoes and eats it with this sauce. Get half a pound of smoked bacon, not too fat, remove the rind and chop into small dice; fry until they begin to crisp, then add an equal amount of chopped onion, mix and cook slowly, stirring occasionally until the onion is a fine yellow color, but not blackened; serve hot in gravy boat. It has a delicious flavor and it not as indigestible as it sounds.

Dried Sweet Corn.

Select good, plump ears, husk and silk, cut with a sharp knife very thin. Be sure and don't cut into the cob, but scrape the cob after cutting off the corn. Cook over water until all the milk is cooked in, then put in clean flour sack, some in each end, hang over a line so one end will be higher than the other, shake once in a while. Bring it in at night. This will also be nice and white, with all the flavor of fresh corn.

WHEN A TONIC IS NECESSARY

If You Are Run Down and Debilitated the Health Can Only Be Restored by Building Up the Blood.

When the body is weak and the blood thin it is sometimes difficult to find the cause unless a wasting illness has preceded the decline in health.

Obscure influences, something unhealthful in one's surroundings or work, may lead to a slow impoverishment of the blood and an enfeeblement of the whole body. When a serious stage has been reached there seems to be nothing that will account for it.

In such cases a complete change of climate or of work will sometimes effect a cure. It takes a long time, however, and for the great majority of sufferers is out of the question.

Mrs. G. P. Boutwell, of Clear Water, Minn., whose husband is a hardware merchant there, says:

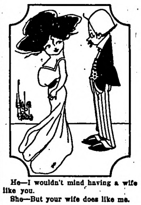
"About two years ago, when I was living at West Union, Iowa, I was all run down through hard work and worry. I called a doctor who said I was suffering from general debility. He treated me for some time but was unable to do much for me. I had cold chills all of the time and seemed to be nearly bloodless. I could not keep anything on my stomach and lived on eggs and milk for some time. My stomach was sour and the gas on it kept me from getting much sleep at night. The doctor's medicine made my stomach feel worse.

"My father had used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills with benefit and advised me to try them. After a week or so I could notice a change. I soon became stronger, my appetite came back and the headaches disappeared. I was then able to eat without distress and began to do my work. I had a good color and gained in flesh. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cannot be praised too highly."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are a general tonic and are useful in all diseases arising from poor blood or weakened nerves, such as sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, pale and sallow complexions and many forms of weakness.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or will be sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N.Y. A booklet, "Diseases of the Blood," will be sent free upon request. Adv.

ALREADY ACCOMPANIED.



He—I wouldn't mind having a wife like you.

She—But your wife does like me.

He Knew.

"'Where there's a will there's a way,'" avers Taylor Holmes, appearing in "The Million. "The way, however, varies, as in the case of a certain pickpocket, who was convicted and promptly fined.

"The lawyer of the pickpocket took the fine imposed upon his client very much to heart.

"'Twenty-five dollars!' he expostulated. 'Your honor, where is this poor, unfortunate man to get $25?'

"His honor did not know, or if he did he refrained from saying so, but the prisoner was less discreet.

"'Just let me out of here for ten or fifteen minutes,' he said 'and I'll show you!'"—Young's Magazine.

Getting Along Fine at School.

Now that school has been "goin" several weeks parents are beginning to inquire of their young hopefuls as to their progress. The other day a mother out on Harrison boulevard, while eating luncheon with her 6-year-old, asked:

"And how are you getting along in school, Dorothy?"

"Oh," replied Dorothy between mouthfuls of bread and milk, "just fine! I and Frances Smith are the smartest and best dressed girls in the school."—Kansas City Star.

IT'S THE FOOD.

The True Way to Correct Nervous Troubles.

Nervous troubles are more often caused by improper food and indigestion than most people imagine. Even doctors sometimes overlook this fact. A man says:

"Until two years ago waffles and butter with meat and gravy were the main features of my breakfast. Finally dyspepsia came on and I found myself in a bad condition, worse in the morning than any other time. I would have a full, sick feeling in my stomach, with pains in my heart, sides and head.

"At times I would have no appetite, for days, then I would feel ravenous, never satisfied when I did eat and so nervous I felt like shrieking at the top of my voice. I lost flesh badly and hardly knew which way to turn until one day I bought a box of Grape-Nuts food to see if I could eat that. I tried it without telling the doctor, and liked it fine; made me feel as if I had something to eat that was satisfying and still I didn't have that heaviness that I had felt after eating any other food.

"I hadn't drank any coffee then in five weeks. I kept on with the Grape-Nuts and in a month and a half I had gained 15 pounds, could eat almost anything I wanted, didn't feel badly after eating and my nervousness was all gone. It's a pleasure to be well again."

Cornelius Bliss had a theory that the right to contribute secretly to a presidential campaign fund was "as sacred as the right to a secret ballot."

It may be worse than ever for the opponents of progressivism if the Clapp committee concludes its sessions without taking up the funds of the other candidates. If no disclosures are made, the public is apt to imagine the situation worse than worse than it really is.

A proposed change in the system of assessment has been worked out by the state tax commission. It is proposed to do away with the local assessor and have a county assessor whose term of office shall be four years and whose entire time shall be devoted to appraising the property of tee county and informing himself on taxation questions.

Emil Seidel, socialist candidate for vice president, in an address in Omaha recently, declared that should his party come into power the government would assume control of all the farming land of the country, either by confiscation, purchase, or taxation. One wonders how the farmer voters appreciate that kind of political argument.

See if it doesn't come about, that Frank Day will be chief lineman for the democrats in the 1912 campaign. Before the close of the campaign Frank will have the democrats wondering why Ringdal was not nominated for the presidency instead governor. Of course Day has a lot of enemies in his own party, but these will be pacified, shelved or "knocked into a cocked hat" by his mesmeric manner of laying on the hands—and salve.—Blue Earth Post.

The short ballot and the nonpartisan ballot, both for state and county offices, offers the best solutions of our election problems. In republican counties like Rock the democrats had to vote the republican ticket or else be disfranchised as far as county officers are concerned. Had the county contests all been on a non-partisan ballot, there would have been no reason for a democrat or prohibitionist asking for a republican ballot. And when it came to voting for state officers not one in twenty here or elsewhere knew anything about the candidates for more than two or three of the offices. Let the people elect the governor and lieutenant governor; have the other officers appointed by the governor and hold him responsible for their actions, as the president appoints his cabinet; and there will be less confusion and groping in the dark at elections and better administrative results. Judges of courts should be elected. The time may not be ripe yet for non-partisan state tickets, but it is ripe for the short ballot and for non-partisan county tickets.—Luverne Journal.

One-Mill Road Tax Amendment

The constitution of the state of Minnesota provides that the legislature may levy an annual tax upon the property of this state not to exceed one-quarter of a mill to be used in the construction and improvement of public highways (the term "highways" includes bridges.) At the last regular session of the legislature an amendment was proposed, changing this section so that the legislature might provide for an annual tax levy of one mill instead of one-quarter of a mill to be used in the construction and improvements of public highways. The change is a simple one. It increases the tax levy for the purpose mentioned only three-quarters of one mill. The present law provides for a road tax of one-quarter of one mill and this produces a little more than $300,000 a year. A one mill tax levy would raise approximately one million, two hundred thousand dollars annually to be expended by the state upon the highways and bridges, and in a manner that would not be felt by any taxpayer. The pending amendment increasing the levy from one-quarter of a mill to one mill becomes vitally important for the reason that the only manner in which aid may be obtained from the state for the construction of highways and bridges is through the state highway commission.

The rule governing the adoption of amendments to the constitution of the state of Minnesota makes it necessary for the amendment to receive a majority of all the votes cast at the election at which the amendment is submitted. It is not sufficient that more voters vote for the amendment than vote against it. To illustrate—suppose there are 300,000 votes cast at the general election in November, 1912, and suppose that only 200,000 vote upon a given constitutional amendment, 101,000 would be a majority of the 200,000 voting upon the amendment, but this would not adopt the amendment. In fact, it would be lost. For the amendment to carry and be adopted, it would be necessary that it receive affirmative votes amounting to a majority of 300,000 votes, the total number cast at the election. For instance, 151,000. Many persons not feeling that they understand the amendment fail to vote at all upon it. Such failure to vote at all counts as a negative vote just as effectively as if the voter had voted no on the amendment. This rule places the burden upon the advocates of all constitutional amendments, a burden much greater than is planned upon the advocates of a certain person for election to office. For a candidate to be elected governor or any other office within the state it is only necessary that he receive more votes than any other candidate for the same office. It is not necessary that he receive a majority of all the votes cast at election. Thus it will be noted that it is made much more difficult to adopt a constitutional amendment than to elect any officer within the state. Friends and advocates of the one-mill tax amendment should fully understand and bear this rule in mind in their efforts to secure the adoption of this amendment at the coming general election.

The object of this tax is so meritorious and the amount thereof to be borne by the average voter is so very insignificant that every one should be especially interested in securing the adoption of this amendment. All public spirited citizens; all associations having for their object the development of the state; all commercial clubs and similar organizations in the state are solicited to take up a campaign in favor of this amendment, to the end that the voters thoroughly understand the purpose of the amendment before the November election.

The First Mail

The first mail between New York and Boston was established in 1672. The letters were carried by a messenger, who was directed to "go and return as often as once a month." This monthly service seems to have been sufficient for some thirty years, when it was changed to a fortnightly service. In 1693 a well organized system of postoffices was established in Pennsylvania and in other localities. The first beer was made before the Christian era, but it was so unlike the modern golden grain belt beers as to be unworthy the name. Alex Thompson, agent, Crookston

MOORISH SOLDIERS.

Their Methods in Battle and Their System of Signals.

At fighting on horseback the Moors are adepts and extremely mobile. But they are incorrigibly lazy and seldom indulge in night attack. When they attack in force the horsemen usually give a lift to the foot soldiers who accompany them or allow them to run alongside and hold on to a stirrup iron. The mounted men then make a charge, wheel round and retire and make way for the footmen, who crawl along the ground, almost invisible, and who rise to the attack if they come within striking distance of the enemy. As a rule, the Riffians prefer to lure detached parties into an ambush or defile and thus inflict heavy loss upon them. The mounted men seldom dismount to fire, and their firing, being from the saddle, is very inaccurate. Should the advance of the white troops be slow or hesitating the Moors effect a bold combination between horsemen and footmen and generally succeed in inflicting heavy losses on their enemy.

The prime tactics of the Moors are to delay the advance of an enemy as much as possible by mounted rifle fire until they can discern its extent and direction and subsequently to try enveloping the advancing force. The tribes also indulge in sniping, but not to a very great extent, and they also fight individually. They do not neglect opportunities for stratagem and can effect some very clever ruses. They are also guilty of abusing the services of the white flag in action.

The Moorish intelligence system is an excellent one, and the tribes are seldom without information regarding the movements of an enemy. They have also an excellent system of signaling at night by means of small fires dotted about the hills and ravines, which are obscured and revealed in accordance with an ingenious code of signals known to themselves.—Chicago News.

SIRES AND SONS.

J. L. Orcut of North Monmouth, Me., has served for forty years in the local church choir.

Secretary of War Dickinson gave up a $35,000 job as attorney for the Illinois Central for a $12,000 cabinet place.

Frederick W. Carpenter, private secretary to President Taft, was born in Minnesota in 1872. He weighs 120 pounds.

R. J. Gleason, town clerk of Waitsfield, Vt., is said to have served longer than any other similar official in Vermont. He has served fifty-three years and is now eighty years old.

Lord Clifford of Chudleigh is one of the wealthy Roman Catholic peers of England and lately bought the old abbey of Marmountier, in Touraine, to save it from conversion into a factory.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, associate justice of the supreme court and son of the illustrious author, is sixty-eight years old, with prospects of living beyond the age of retirement. He was wounded three times in three battles in the civil war.

Wilbur and Orville Wright, the American aeroplanists, in recognition of their practical solution of the problem of aerial flight, have been honored by the Technical High school of Munich with the honorary degree of doctor of technical sciences.

Dr. Samuel A. Green, ex-mayor of Boston, librarian of the Massachusetts Historical society and secretary of the Peabody Education fund, has just celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday. Dr. Green is a physician, historian and author. He has written a number of historical pamphlets on Boston and surrounding territory.

The Lowly Singer.

The humble poet goes about
In very modest raiment.
If he could coin his tuneful words
He'd gladly make a payment
On rugs that glisten as the sun
And raise an awful holler,
But now he has to be content—
He hasn't got a dollar.

For him the sun unfolds its light,
For him the stars are gleaming,
And so he cannot waste his time
On profit bearing scheming.
He must remain content to get
The robin's morning greeting
And not disturb his high flown thoughts
With vulgar things like eating.

Were he disposed to drop a peg
And lower his profession
Things might be drifting round his way
In quite a long procession.
Would he write ads. instead of songs
Extolling pills or bacon
He'd rake in coin; but, oh, his art
Would have to be forsaken!

No; he will go along his way,
Wrapped in his inspiration.
Let sordid poets sing of soap;
His theme is all creation.
So take him gently by the hand
And lead him to the table,
And then the poet's appetite
You'll find was but a fable.

His Dreadful Price.

"I have just had some swell photographs taken."

"I hope that they do you justice."

"Thanks, awfully, but that's not what's troubling me."

"What is?"

"How I am ever going to do the photographer justice?"

An Oversight.

"The constitution is a grand old document."

"Yes, but they wrote it too soon."

"Why so?"

"They should have waited until automobiles had been invented and made it unconstitutional to run a fellow down."

ONE STONE FENCES FARM.

Missouri Man Has Land Where No Wheel Ever Rolled.

Jasper, Mo.—Within sight of this town a settler has a farm which probably is unlike any other in the world.

This farm occupies the tableland on the summit of a ridge and is inclosed with a fence which no animal has ever broken through. It does not rise above the surface of the farm, but falls sheer from the edge a distance of many feet. The man who homesteaded the tableland had a hard climb up the face of a perpendicular cliff to reach the comparatively level summit.

At one point a ledge extends out a few inches and along the face of the cliff at an upward grade. By following this ledge and making use of occasional points of rocks and of shrubs growing in the fissures the discoverer pulled himself to the summit and found a surface well covered with a soft and luxuriant vegetation.

Gradually he improved the ledge until he could carry up tools and feed. By blasting and drilling he cleared a narrow trail, up which he was able to take first some pigs and then a cow. Later on he took up a horse.

And that to-day is the condition of this curiously protected farm. No vehicle has turned a wheel within its limits of palisades. The live stock has multiplied and consumes the grain raised. Some stones thrown across the trail completely fence in the hogs and cattle. When the farmer has stock to sell he drives the animals down the private trail and strikes the road to Jasper.

CATERPILLARS HALT TRAIN.

Three Times Within Mile Crew Shovels Them Off the Tracks.

St. John, N. B.—Moths, caterpillars and other like pests have made their appearance in great numbers in many sections of this province, particularly in York county. There they have caused considerable inconvenience, and several amazing stories are told of experiences when they have met in large bodies. Trainmen manning a freight between Fredericton Junction and McAdams are authority for a statement that appears incredulous. They say that the heavy freight train was stopped three times within a mile by caterpillars which swarmed over the tracks in such numbers as to effectually impede the progress of the train. It was necessary to arm the entire train crew with shovels and scoop the thousands of pests off the tracks, and smother those on the roadbed by shoveling gravel over them. They report every tree and bit of foliage along the line as being denuded of green.

More Fitting.

The brass band was serenading the candidate who, according to the early returns, had been elected.

As he appeared on his front porch to acknowledge the compliment a boy handed him a telegram.

He opened it and read it.

"Boys," he said, raising his hand to command silence, "oblige me by turning that 'Hot Time' business into a dirge.'"

Australia's Wild Oysters.

Oysters are sometimes regarded as dangerous but they are not usually considered savage. A Queensland judge, however, has decided that they are wild beasts. Before a royal commission on the pearling industry, which has been sitting at Brisbane, a witness stated that eight years ago he had laid 100,000 shells in the neighborhood of Friday island. The Japanese stole the shells, and the district court judge held that as pearl shell oysters were wild animals there was no penalty for stealing them.

I wish to thank my supporters [illegible] the republican nomination for county treasurer and also my opponent [illegible] his supporters for the clean, [illegible] manly manner in which they conducted the campaign.

On account of my official duties I shall not be able to make much of a personal campaign for the November election, but will do all I can [illegible] the republican nominees by the primary last Tuesday, because they are all [illegible] men, so far as I know, and were [illegible] nominated by our party.

I believe it would be bad for [illegible] county should our party be defeated, especially so far as congress and [illegible] legislature are concerned.

Very sincerely,

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. 250 D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 500. All Fargo banks and 983 others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school offers such endorsement.

Our $40 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $65 course in Commerce and Banking tendered by Bankers' Association, supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters) trains court reporters and [illegible] the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. [illegible] Do other schools offer this PROOF of superior training?

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (250,000 cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 100 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. Our pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using [illegible] books. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C." Next term begins soon. For booklet, write

TOLEDO, OHIO

The Best Known Newspaper in the United States
Circulation 340,090
Popular in Every State

No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is unusual and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it unquestionable right of claiming to be greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making the Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

Hed-Gigstad

The K. O. Gigstad home was the scene of a quiet wedding on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, when Miss Josephine Gigstad became the bride of Mr. Alvin J. Hed. Rev. Aastad of Thief River Falls read the service in the presence of immediate relatives.

The decorations in the home were autumn foliage and red flowers, the vows being spoken in the living room beneath an arch of autumn leaves from which was suspended a large white wedding bell. After the ceremony refreshments were served in the dining room, where pink and white was the color scheme, festooning and roses being the decorations.

The bride's gown was of white crepe de chine. She wore a tulle veil caught with lilies of the valley and carried a shower bouquet of bride's roses and lilies of the valley. She was attended by her sister, Miss Huldah Gigstad, who was daintily attired in pink. For traveling the bride wore a blue chiffon broadcloth suit with hat to match. Mr. Theodore Nelson of Erskine attended Mr. Hed as best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Hed left on the afternoon train for the Twin cities. Their trip will also include a visit to Randolph, Minn., where Mrs. Hed has a sister, and to Winthrop and Lafayette, Minn., where Mr. Hed has relatives and friends. They will be at home after November 15.

Died

At his home in St. Hilaire on Wednesday, October 9, Torger A. Nash, at the good old age of 80 years.

Mr. Nash had been a resident of this section for the past six years. He leaves three sons—Albert, Ole, and Knut, all of whom reside in this vicinity. The mother died six years ago, since which time the deceased had been cared for by his sons.

Funeral services will be held today at 2 o'clock at the United church, Rev. M. S. Gjerde officiating.

Miss Amelia Duddy of Bagley is visiting friends in town.

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

King John, Who Did a Great Deed in Spite of Himself

KING JOHN

A LEAN man, clad in royal robes and walking with with a shambling gait, entered his palace on the afternoon of June 15, 1215, followed by a crowd of laughing courtiers. He and his attendants seemed vastly amused over something that had just happened and which they professed to regard as a fine joke.

But the moment the regally clad man reached his private apartments in the palace, away from the eyes of the public, his mask of false gayety was cast aside. He hurled himself upon the floor, screaming, raving and howling fearful blasphemies, foaming at the mouth and biting like a mad dog at the rushes that strewed the floor.

Nor was this burst of insane fury without an excuse. For the man was a tyrant, and that day had been forced to sign the death-warrant of tyranny. He was John, king of England. More than a century and a half had passed since William the Conqueror had won England, beginning the blend of Norman and Saxon races and giving the English a new line of kings and nobility. Henry II., king of England, had several sons, all of whom hated their father and at various times conspired against him. John was the youngest.

During Richard's absence from England John had tried to seize the crown for himself. On Richard's return he had to fly for his own life before the wrath of the brother he had striven to supplant. Richard, however, forgave him and named him as heir to the throne. On "Lion Heart's" death John became king of England in 1199. Some of the nobles tried to make his nephew, young Prince Arthur, king in John's place. Civil war broke out. John was victorious. Arthur was captured and thrown into prison. John is said to have had the sixteen-year-old boy's eyes put out and then to have murdered him. The king of France made war on John to avenge this alleged murder, and seized nearly all England's French possessions.

John, forced thus to confine his tyranny to his own country, proceeded to make his people's lives miserable. He seized at will the few possessions of the poor and laid heavy taxes on the rich. He insulted and ill-treated the clergy, defying the pope himself. The church thereupon placed an "interdict" on the blackguard and his realm. His holiness also called upon the Christian rulers to unite against John. This last danger scared the cowardly tyrant into submission. But he refused to make his people's hardships lighter.

Then it was that the powerful barons, led by Stephen Langton, archbishop of Canterbury, presented a code of laws for the betterment of the people and for the curbing of oppression. They called this document the Magna Charta (Great Charter). Among other reforms, the charter provided fair trial for every prisoner, authorized the nation to resist unjust royal demands and put the will of the people ahead of a mere king's wishes. The church's liberty was to be respected and no man's possessions were to be wrongfully seized by the crown.

John was asked to sign the Magna Charta. He refused. The barons and the common people combined to force him to sign it. Frightened by their power and his own weakness, John at last consented. Thus was English liberty born and the rights of man were established. John met the barons at a meadow, near Runnymede, on June 15, 1215, salved his vanity by pretending to make a jest of the matter, signed the charter and—safe in his palace—gave way to a fit of maniacal rage.

Though he had been coerced into performing an act of splendid justice by signing the Magna Charta, John had not the faintest idea of keeping his promises to the barons. He called on foreign hired soldiers to help him crush his rebellious subjects. The English retaliated by asking a French prince to come over and be their king.

The land was once more rent by civil war. John showed no mercy to his own country, but desolated and wrecked it wherever his armies could find a foothold. At the climax of the struggle his mind gave way. He sickened and, on October 19, 1216, died. Some historians believe he was poisoned.

Pizarro, Licensed "Hold-up Man"

PIZARRO

A YOUNG swineherd—born in Estramadoto, Spain, in 1476—heard vague rumors of the New World across the Atlantic which Columbus had lately discovered. He heard of boundless wealth, mountains of gold and silver, rivers and caverns flashing with priceless gems—all of which were supposed to be found for the searching, everywhere in America.

The swineherd—Francesco Pizarro by name—had perhaps never in his short life seen a single gold piece or eaten a hearty meal. The tales of riches made him suddenly discontented with his own humble routine. He was ignorant. To his latest day he could never manage to learn how to read or write.

Leaving his swine Pizarro sailed with a company of seedy adventurers to the West Indies. There was much work and small reward at first. But he kept on. Through trade and robbery he had picked up enough money by 1515 to settle near the new city of Panama as a farmer. It was a laughable anti-climax to his visions of wealth. But Pizarro was not the sort of man to be laughed at.

As soon as he could scrape together a little capital he formed a partnership with another adventurer, Amalgro, and a priest named Luque, and went in search of fortune. The expedition was a failure. But in the course of it Pizarro heard of a southern country—Peru—where gold was said to be as cheap as iron. He raided the Peruvian coasts, but gathered scanty spoils.

Nevertheless, he believed he was at last on the right track. He went to Spain to get money and royal authority for further explorations. In Seville he was thrown in prison for debt. His career seemed to be at an end. But he managed to interest the king of Spain in his schemes. The king released him and gave him a royal commission to conquer Peru. He set forth and, in 1531, began his invasion of the gold land.

Using a civil war in Peru to help on his adventure, he at length found his way to the palace of the Inca (emperor). Entering the palace as a trusted guest, Pizarro made the Inca a prisoner, and under threat of death by torture forced the luckless prisoner to pay for freedom by a strange ransom.

This ransom was no less than a huge roomful of gold. To gain this sum it was necessary to strip the sacred Peruvian temples of their golden ornaments. The full amount, when it was at last turned over to Pizarro, was worth more than $17,000,000. Having secured this, he calmly murdered the Inca.

The vile act set all Peru buzzing about the Spaniard's ears like a nestful of enraged hornets. But Pizarro paid little heed to the danger.

Wealth—wrung by torture and treachery—flowed fast into his coffers. He had found no literal mountains of gold and caverns of gems. But he had discovered how just as great riches could be annexed through cruelty. His partner, Amalgro, shared to rome extent in the prosperity and new-found power. This did not suit Pizarro. There were quarrels, and Amalgro was induced to lead an expedition against Chili. This was in July, 1535. The Indians took advantage of Amalgro's absence to attack Pizarro, but were unable, in spite of their vast numbers, to overcome him.

When Amalgro came back new quarrels broke out. And the two former comrades at last came to open war. Amalgro was captured by Pizarro's troops and was put to death. But his followers kept up the strife.

On Sunday morning, June 26, 1541, a band of these men burst into Pizarro's palace at Lima. Pizarro sprang up from his breakfast table, half armed, and flew at his assailants like a wild beast. He was of gigantic stature, and despite his sixty-five years he was still a dangerous foe. A fierce battle waged. Three of the conspirators were slain by Pizarro before he fell, mortally wounded, under a score of sword thrusts.

Reunion That Was Perfect

Prodigal, Though Only a Yellow Mongrel, Was Very Evidently Among His Own.

After tea he strolled down the drive, the yellow mongrel escorting him.

The pair passed out of the great gates on the gray road.

John Blunt was subdued as the autumn evening, beautiful about him.

An old couple were driving slowly toward him in a gig. Directly they saw the yellow mongrel they began to gesticulate.

"'Tis!" cried the old woman.

"Tis's, I tell thee!" shouted the old man, yet jobbed his reins and drove apace.

"'Tis!" screamed the old woman, and scrambled from the cart, bundled down the road, screaming Gyp! Gyp!"

The yellow mongrel pricked his ears. For a moment he crouched with quivering tail and whimpered, uncertain clearly what his reception was going to be. Then suddenly sure, he was in her arms, smothering her with kisses, dabbing for her rough old chin, whining with delight.

Certainly there was never a happier meeting in heaven than that of these three.

John Blunt drew up in the ditch to let the gig by. The yellow mongrel sat esconced between the old two who were all he knew of God, set high in heaven above him.

They laughed and chuckled, their red faces wreathed in smiles, and toothless gums showing as they looked down on the Prodigal Son returned to them at last.

He sat between them, his eyes uplifted to theirs and loving.

The old man, seeing the big gray-bearded stranger at the roadside watching them, thought their emotions needed explanation.

"We lost him," he shouted. "Been away a fortnight. A valuable dog."

"Glad you found him," called John Blunt after them.—Alfred Ollivant in "The Taming of John Blunt."

THE BOUDOIR
Dame Fashion's Diary

IN BLACK AND WHITE

CONTRASTING COLORS POPULAR FOR MILLINERY.

Charming Shoulder Wraps May Be Copied From the Approved Fashionable Designs — Combination Petticoat in Vogue.

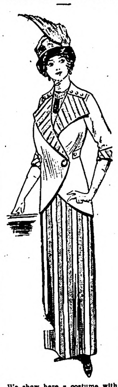
Velvet and plush hats are de rigueur for dressy one-piece gowns worn in the street, but generally only the top of the hat is covered with these materials. The facing of the hat is of satin—white, if the top of the hat is black, and the reverse for the other arrangement—and the shape is larger than those worn with coat suits, the custume calling for more dressiness than the suit. The single ornament still bedecks these dashing hats, a pair of Mercury wings perched lightly at the brim edge or in front of the hat, a silk cockade at the front or side, or silk and velvet quills of enormous height put anywhere. The broad hat with rolling brim and round shallow crown, with a flat cockade of some sort, is a favorite with those who can wear the youthful and smart style. Colored hats in the same fabrics and styles also appear, but black and white reigns over every other scheme.

In a little importing shop on a side street are being shown some shoulder wraps of a specially charming sort, and here the woman with a sewing gift often appears to pilfer ideas for cheaper things. One wrap, with something of the graceful quaintness of the old time talma, is called the "Coralie," and it is made of numerous wool fabrics and of satin and silk. If you wish one, get a yard and a quarter of double-width goods and divide it exactly in two down the fold at the middle; sew the two pieces together, making a straight scarf two yards and a half long. Then double the length with a soft, harmonizing silk, hemming this down neatly about a quarter of an inch from the edge. Then take a loop in the middle back of the scarf—this about eight or ten inches deep—sewing on a hook and eye to hold it together. When on, the straight scarf sinks into the lines of the shoulders and arms, this adaptability to the figure and the loop at the back giving it the appearance of a shaped garment. The same smart throw on could be made of silk gauze, deeply bordered at the bottom with velvet, edged in turn with a strip of marabout.

With the continued scantiness of skirt it follows that the petticoat receives more and more attention, and now a wonderful freak of the combination sort is being shown for the finer costumes. This slimming garment, which owes its being to French ingenuity, is called a "pantalon jupon," and, with its top part made after the manner of a corset cover and wide drawers, its bottom hangs in ankle-length legs, hung with a single flounce of quilled lace, or lace over chiffon. Some of the more practical jupons will be made of fine silk in the same two-legged manner, and nobody need fancy that this bit of under-raiment is immodest or ugly. When worn it has all the appearance of a princess petticoat, and despite the growing vogue of the panier such garments are needed for the good fit of the skirt.

MARY DEAN.

NOVEL WALKING COSTUME



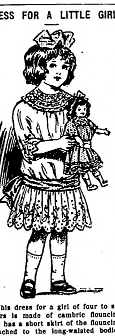
We show here a costume with the skirt of one material and the coat of another.

For the skirt, blue and gray striped delaine is used, and for the coat, plain blue; this is semi-fitting and has a belt of material taken round back to sides; for the revers and cuffs, the striped material is used.

Hat of blue with a brim of black satin, trimmed at side by a wing.

Materials required: Four yards striped and three yards plain delaine 28 inches wide; eight buttons.

DRESS FOR A LITTLE GIRL



This dress for a girl of four to six years is made of cambric flouncing and has a short skirt of the flouncing attached to the long-waisted bodice under a colored sash.

The bodice is Magyar and has a round yoke of strips of insertion edged with lace.

Material required: 2½ yards of flouncing 27 inches wide, 1½ yard insertion, ¾ yard lace, 2 yards ribbon for sash.

PLAID SILKS AS TRIMMINGS

Their Use in Collars, Girdles and Sleeves Brightens Up the Dark Colored Dresses.

Dark-colored serge dresses in seal brown, navy and black are often brightened up by the use of plaided silks for the waist, or the introduction of these bright-colored patterns for the collars, girdles and a portion of the sleeves. In some cases, when the plaided waist is seen the skirt material extends into the waist section in bib or jumper effect.

Narrow pointed directoire collars extending in sharp points over the shoulder are also made of plaid when the waist is developed in the dress material. Robespierre collars, turnback cuffs and military girdles and sashes are also made in these fancy silks.

Silk dresses plaided off with yellow, red and green on a dark blue, black or brown background are used with buttons to harmonize; for instance, amber balls or blue buttons with red or green centers. They are applied in profusion both on waists and on skirts.

Ratine and Scarfs.

Collar and cuff sets seem almost indispensable accessories in the summer wardrobe; they are fashioned of batiste and embroidery or of Irish or ratine lace, or the plain ratine. Those of batiste can be had for $4.98, the collar and cuffs made deep; while the Irish lace sets, with roses and shamrock motif are $2.95 a set. Collars of baby Irish for collarless blouse can be had for $1.25. Wide insertion of ratine lace is in vogue for scarfs, edged with net or fold of chiffon.

GET OUT YOUR HEIRLOOMS

Old Time Hair Pins and Combs of Tortoise Shell Are in Fashion Again.

Back into the realm of hair ornaments have come the pins and combs of tortoise shell that typified the hairdressing of our grandmothers, and is traceable to the time of the Medicis.

If you have some treasured heirlooms that are large, carved or inlaid, brings them out into the light of modern day and place them in the coils and waves of your hair. You then can smile at the world.

Fillets of tortoise shell rival the high combs and the disks that suggest the Holland hairdress, or perhaps the ornaments of the middle ages, have returned.

The empire comb, with its spreading lines that resemble the peacock's tail, is an important arrival. The hair is drawn up in a series of curls at the back of the neck, the high comb mounting above them. Generally the hair is parted in front or at the side.

The band, or fillet, is passed over the brow, the hair waved and worn in graceful lines low over the temples and ears. Disks are worn if this style of hairdressing is carried out.

Coils of hair are held in place by ball tortoise-shell pins, and the bars of shell to catch the stray curls and to support the hair have again come into their own.

Since the coiffure of the moment is conservatively simple, there is ample room for adding decoration by way of ornaments, and makers are offering many attractive styles to convince women of the change.

Gorgeous Beads.

Beading by hand and in gorgeous coloring on white net is a vagary of the moment, writes a Paris fashion correspondent. Whole gowns are made of it. Worth showed a most distinguished ball gown of it in gray and black, the beads so closely sewn that the fabric looked like Italian armor.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Reckless Waste May Cause Extinction of Whale.

I'D BETTER BEAT IT

WASHINGTON.—Danger of the total extinction of the whale through "overfishing" is dealt with in the thirteenth annual report on fisheries, issued by the board of agriculture and fisheries.

It is unquestionable, says the report, that in the case of a slow-growing and slow-reproducing animal like the whale, although, owing to its wide range, it will probably never be absolutely extermincted, excessive hunting speedily results in a very marked depletion of the stock.

The practical extinction of the Basque and Greenland whale fisheries has abundantly proved this. It must be remembered, too, that this result was brought about by means of the open and hand harpoon—methods which are now obsolete.

The Greenland whale was a comparatively sluggish and timid animal, whose capture by the method referred to presented little difficulty, whereas the rorquals and other species were not only too swift, but too dangerous to be attacked in the same manner as the "right" whale.

With the introduction, however, of the harpoon with explosive shell, discharged from a cannon mounted in the bows of a steamer, the conditions were entirely changed, and the species formerly immune from attack could now be hunted with impunity.

The result of this revolution in the conditions under which the fishing could be prosecuted is seen in the enormous dimensions which the industry has attained at the present day.

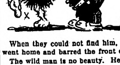
It is estimated that in 1911 between 19,000 and 20,000 whales were captured in the southern hemisphere alone (South Georgia, South Shetland, South America and Africa), to which has to be added the catch in North America, Japan, Faroe, Iceland, Spitzbergen and Greenland, and these figues will probably be greatly exceeded in 1912, as numerous new companies have been formed to exploit Alaskan, Australasian and Sandwich island waters.

This wholesale destruction must inevitably tell its tale within a few years, and, as a matter of fact, in Newfoundland and Iceland fears are already entertained that the fishing is on the decline.

It would not, therefore, be a matter for surprise if, within a few years, it may be found necessary to establish something in the nature of international control, and the precedent of the Behring seal fishery shows how vexed a question whaling may ultimately become.

Wild Man Flees to the Capital; Cop Nabs Him

"IT," alias "Gingerbread," the wild man from Borneo, escaped from his dugout at the Rockville fair the other day, and, coming to Washington, was locked up on a charge of disorderly conduct.



WATS TH' IDEE?

The wild man, who lives on raw meat and "eats 'em alive," was approached the following night by Policeman Andes of the Fifth precinct while doing a war dance in Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast.

"Who do you think you are, anyway?" inquired Andes.

"G-rrr! Woof!" responded the wild man.

Whereupon Policeman Andes called the wagon, and the wild man was taken to the station, put in a cell, and told to "sleep it off."

It is supposed that the wild man got tired of staying in a cage and eating raw meat and sleeping in hay. So he pushed the door of his dugout open, and walked 16 miles to Washington to get something that would take the taste of the meat out of his mouth.

When the news spread through Rockville that it probably had a wild man on its hands, a posse of vigilantes armed themselves with shotguns and pitchforks and raw meat, with which to appease his mean disposition.

When they could not find him, they went home and barred the front door.

The wild man is no beauty. He is a hairy individual, six feet tall, with a sinister cast of countenance. He has bulging eyes and an ecliptical-shaped head, with an indentation on the top, covered by a patch of hair. When seen at the fair grounds, mothers would draw their children to them when the wild man grinned, and strong men would shudder.

After spending a night at the Fifth Precinct station, the wild man was taken to Washington Asylum hospital for observation.

Never having had a wild man from Borneo on their hands, the hospital officials were puzzled.

And, on the blotter of the Fifth Precinct station is inscribed:

"'It,'" and opposite that, "crazy."

Sparrows Annihilate Worm Army on Navy Green.

TAKE NO PRISONERS

PERSONS passing the State, War and Navy building, on Pennsylvania avenue, the other day saw a "battle royal" between a corps of army worms and a battalion of sparrows. The unusual sight attracted a large crowd, and much expert opinion was passed on the outcome of the battle, the problem facing the battalion of sparrows being the annihilation of the enemy before darkness set in.

The battalion of sparrows moved eastward in two columns from the northwest corner of the State, War and Navy lawn. One of the most interesting features of the "battle" was the warlike precision with which the sparrows moved.

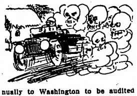
It was estimated by onlookers that neither column of sparrows was over three feet wide. They worked in solid block formation and moved rapidly on the corps of army worms, which was solidly intrenched behind breastworks of grass.

Owing to their intrenched position, it was impossible for onlookers to estimate the strength of the worms, but it was generally conceded that the attacking battalion of sparrows was 500 strong.

Like Henry of Navarre at Ivry, the "commander" of the worms held his forces close to the "cannon" of the invading sparrows, but without avail, for the "charge of the five hundred" proved devastating to the intrenched worms.

The "battle" continued throughout the day, and at night not a sparrow was reported dead on the field, while hundreds of the enemy had been slain.

Claimed That Automobiles Spread Tuberculosis



ACTING as agents in the spread of tuberculosis, motor cars and high-powered automobiles are spreading disease and death in the Philippines, according to a report in the quarterly review of the bureau of public works of the islands. This is due to the great clouds of dust raised by the rapidly moving vehicles. The dust finds its way into the houses, which are built close on the edges of the narrow streets, and the high mortality among the Filipinos from tuberculosis is attributed in large measure to it.

The spread and increase of the "white plague" is not confined to human beings, according to the report, but cattle and other live stock are equal sufferers.

The Philippine government is experimenting with native oil on the roads, in the hope of remedying conditions.

Electrical devices to handle the 86,000,000 money orders returned annually to Washington to be audited will save $200,000 a year for the government, according to estimates by Charles A. Kram, auditor for the post-office department.

The tabulations are accomplished through a system of punched cards and electrical counters somewhat similar to the machines used by the federal census bureau. Heretofore, the annual audit of the money order business of the country has taken nearly a year. With the electric card punching and counting system the final settlement of money order accounts can be made within three months of the end of the fiscal year.

WHY THE FIFTH MAN LEFT

He Wore a Wig and the Other Four Men at the Table Were Bald—and Talkative.

In the smoking room of a west-bound ocean liner two days out from an English port, five men sat at a "small game" of poker. When the chips had been cashed in the men retained their places, and presently one of the party said: "This is funny; four bald heads out of a possible five," and then there was a discussion as to the causes of baldness, in which all took part except the unafflicted man, who was a good listener for a while. He then bade the others good night. When he had gone the youngest of the group, who was less bald than the others, said: "Do you know why Mr. Blank made the getaway? He wears a wig, and is probably as He wears a wig, and is probably as bald as any of us." And for the rest of the journey Mr. Blank's head was the object of study—at a distance—for he never again appeared in the smoking room.

BREAKING OUT ON LEG

Hilltop, Kan.—"About two years ago I began to notice a breaking out on my leg. At first it was very small but soon it began to spread until it formed large blotches. The itching was terrible and almost constant. Many nights I could not sleep at all. After scratching it to relieve the itching it would burn so dreadfully that I thought I could not stand it. For nearly a year I tried all kinds of salves and ointment, but found no relief. Some salves seemed to make it worse until there were ugly sores, which would break open and run.

"One day I saw an advertisement of Cuticura Remedies. I got a sample of the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment and began by washing the sores with the Cuticura Soap, then applying the Cuticura Ointment twice a day. I noticed a change and got more Cuticura Soap and Ointment and in a few weeks I was cured. It has healed so nicely that no scar remains." (Signed) Mrs. Anna A. Lew, Dec. 17, 1911.

Marie Divided the Candy.

When the uncle of a couple of Brooklyn youngsters last called at the household whereof they form a part he brought with him some pieces of candy, which were given to the little girl to divide with her brother.

Later the uncle summoned this child to the living room and asked:

"Marie, when you divided those five pieces of candy with your brother, did you give him two and a half pieces?"

"No, sir," said Marie. "I saw they weren't going to come out even, so I ate one before I began to divide."—Lippincott's Magazine.

Inexperienced.

In a boarding house for bachelors, Amanda, typical "Mammy," looked after the guests' comfort in true southern style so well that one of the men thought he would take her away with him in the summer in the capacity of housekeeper. Toward spring he waylaid her in the hall one day and said:

"Mandy, do you like the country?"

Mandy reckoned she did.

"Would you like to go away with me this summer and keep house for me?"

Mandy was sure she would.

"Suppose I get just a bungalow. Do you think you could take care of it nicely by yourself?"

Mandy gasped and rolled her eyes. "'Deed, no, massa! Reckon you all better get somebody else; I don't know nothin' about taking care of any animals!"—Harper's Magazine.

Vegetable Fiber for Shoes.

A Haverhill (Mass.) shoeman has obtained patents giving him the right to make vamps and tops of vegetable fiber which he has invented and perfected to be used in the manufacture of shoes. A few cases of shoes have been made of this material, which appears to be a good substitute for leather. The fiber is said to be particularly adaptable for warm weather wear because, being of a woven material, air can penetrate the vamp and top. The inventor also claims that a shoe made of this material is waterproof.

The small daughter of a practicing physician, who evidently has an eye to business, told her mother, in no uncertain terms, that she must call at once on their new neighbor.

"Well, in the first place," explained the little lady, "they've got three of the scrawniest kids, and the mother herself don't look very strong."

NOTES FROM MEADOWBROOK FARM
by William Pitt

The cry is for hogs.

Use only pure-bred sires.

Turn the sheep in the orchard.

Scrub cows appear in every herd.

Excessive sweating in a horse indicates weakness.

A pasture arranged to include a few shade trees is 25 per cent. better.

If the potatoes are beginning to sprout in the ground, dig them at once.

Exposure to dampness makes the wool harsh and brittle and the fiber weak.

The growth and feeding value of the soy bean is quite like that of the cowpea.

Get a die and stamp your initials on the cream or milk cans. Paint will rub off in time.

If you want a lasting cement use melted alum. It hardens at once and water does not affect it.

The pigs will eat up slick and clean the corn and stalks of that field which is soft and not fit to crib.

Oil meal is greatly relished by lambs, and helps greatly in obtaining a fine finish for the market.

The work of lice is often mistaken for disease. When a fowl seems to be ailing look for lice first.

The development of the young horse requires the exercise of the best judgment in handling him.

One advantage in keeping feed always before poultry is that they do not have to hurry to get their meals.

Fruit growing and poultry raising go well together. Anyone following either will do well to consider the other.

Got a harness punch? It costs only a quarter and with a package of copper rivets breaks can be mended in a jiffy.

The silo today furnishes the most economical, the safest and the best means of storing the corn crop for feeding purpose.

Wheat bran is an excellent feed for dairy cows and calves, but at $30 per ton or more, it is a little rich for most feeders.

Although certain pessimists claim that the dairy market will soon be overstocked, present prices give no indication of the sign.

As a result of the activities of the reclamation bureau, 14,000 farms are now being watered and a million acres are being put in crops.

Cabbage will sometimes cure slobber in horses caused by eating white clover; but it is better to keep the clover away from the horses.

Try putting a pinch of copperas in the watering trough once or twice a month. Better still, scrub out the trough and spray thoroughly with a copperas solution.

The Iowa experiment station has discovered that feeding mangles and sugar beets to cows is dangerous, and if continued for any considerable period will prove fatal.

Will you feed the hogs in the mud this winter, or build a feeding floor which may cost $10 or $100, according to the size of your herd, but it will pay for itself every time.

Red raspberries do not thrive in the west as well as we could wish. They seem to like a moister, cooler climate better. They are also more likely to winter-kill in the west than the black varieties.

The best care for a well-developed case of roup is the ax. Better lose the individual bird than endanger the entire flock. If we nip the slight colds in the bud, we need not fear the appearance of roup.

The dairyman may have plenty of chores to do, but he is getting an income every day in the year. He isn't like the exclusive grain raiser, a millionaire three months in the year and a pauper the rest of the time.

Although summer will soon be over there still remain 30 days in which summer heat will at times prevail. While this weather continues remember that the hotter the water the cleaner the milk things can be kept.

The feed now in sight will give you a pretty good idea as to how much stock you can carry over winter. It is the best policy to have a little too much feed than to be a little short; it means all the difference between thin stock and those in good condition.

Repair the poultry houses now, if eggs are desired in winter. The first cold weather should find all in good condition. New fowls should be purchased. New blood is necessary for the flocks no matter what the breed is, and their purchase should not be delayed.

Keep after the weeds.

Prepare a plot for alfalfa.

Prune grape vines in the fall.

Keep all refuse out of the garden.

The nests need fully as much cleaning as the roosts.

Kindness beats gruffness in getting work out of horses.

Skimmilk to wet the fattening mash is far better than water.

Hens that moult late seldom lay until late the following winter.

A close, musty cellar, even if cool, is not a good place to set the milk.

If you find an extra good pumpkin or squash be sure to save the seeds.

Equal parts of corn and oats are hard to excel as a grain feed for sheep.

A pile of coal ashes and salt will keep the hogs close to any spot where it lies.

Every farmer should have a small wheel seeder and a small wheel garden hoe.

Sheep are almost essential in maintaining the fertility and cleanliness of the land.

Selling all the hay and grain raised on the farm is a sure method of selling the farm.

Ewes that are broad and long will make good mothers and produce vigorous offspring.

Creamery butter has an advantage over all the other kinds because of its greater uniformity.

The value of corn silage to the beef producer is not limited to its use in winter feeding alone.

To secure a good brood sow, an even development is required from pig brood to maturity.

Do you return your saw and hammer to any particular place when you are through with them?

No land is so rich that its owner can afford to waste the manure that is made by his farm stock.

It is estimated that ten years of single cropping will wear out any but the very richest of soil.

The development of the young horse requires the exercise of the best judgment in handling him.

Water thoroughly when the soil is dry to touch, but never "sprinkle" roses when they need watering.

Crops must be gathered in proper condition and sent to the market fresh and clean. Careful grading is essential.

This is the month when most of the silos in the corn belt are filled. It costs money to do this now, but next winter the dividends will surely be collected

It is generally conceded that the best time to sell chickens is from the first of January to the first of November.

The bright eye, red comb, smooth, bright, well-kept plumage, activity and a keen appetite, indicate the healthy fowl.

Good sheep require good care to maintain their excellence. Poor sheep are always a burden upon the rest of the flock.

Toss those aggravating rocks from the wagon track before the freeze-up or you may just count on jolting over them all winter long.

Alfalfa growers of Kansas consider the best antidote for grasshoppers to be a turkey or two to the acre to range over their alfalfa fields.

The pig is merely a meat-producing machine, and the more he is fed—with good judgment, of course—the more meat he will turn over.

Keeping the boar away from the herd is more trouble than letting him run, but it is the only way to know just what you are about in hog raising.

The man with a clear conscience and patches on his trousers gets more out of this world than the man who goes beyond his means to be fashionable.

The time to lay in plenty of winter feed is when you can get it. This month is the one to cut corn and while you are cutting, cut enough so you will then be likely to have about enough.

Cut up all the corn you think you can feed and then cut one-fourth as much more is the best advice we can think of for the western dairymen this month.

Rats are an enemy to squabs. The pigeon loft should be made proof against them. Rid the premises of them by the aid of traps as fast as possible.

Select a breed and stick to it. Considerable time is required to build up a good flock and nothing is made by continual changing. Always keep pure blooded stock.

To insure the highest per cent. of fertility in the eggs, stock ducks need bathing water, but this does not necessarily mean that they must have a stream or lake on which to disport themselves.

There has been much complaint recently of the large percentage of spoiled eggs to the case. Some of this trouble, it is declared, is due to the storage of eggs near onions, oils or other things with pronounced odors.

REPEATING TRAP KILLS RATS

One Winding of New Device Will Destroy Fifteen or More of Disease-Spreading Rodents.

Did you ever hear of a repeating rat trap? One has been invented by an Illinois man, who declares that with one winding it will kill 15 or more of the disease breeding pests and kick each one out of the way. The general design of the trap is shown in the cut. When a rat steps on the platform in front his weight releases the trigger and striking arm, operated by a powerful spring, hits him a deadly uppercut and throws him several feet away with the same motion. It virtually kicks him to death. Another feature of this trap is the fact that no scent is left on it to warn any wise old rodent that it is an apparatus to be avoided. A bait, of course, is set inside the opening, under the striking arm, and where rats are particularly numerous they will not be scared off by the sight of dead comrades in the vicinity.

PREPARING FOR SPRING WORK

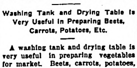
Farmers Should Have All Farm Implements in Good Order to Begin Work at Once.

Have the plows, harrows, cultivators, drills and rollers in order for spring work. Lay in a few extra plow points and bolts. Have the harrow teeth sharp. Extra whiffletrees and some good hame strings should be provided. The seed oats, corn, clover and grass seeds should be bought this month, so no time need be lost when the season opens, says a writer in the Baltimore American. Buy and haul the fertilizer you need now. If the plow or harrow is worn out, it will pay to buy a good steel plow and a spring tooth harrow and a two-horse cultivator. A corn planter and a grain drill may be hired for 25 cents an acre. If you only plant ten acres in corn and seed a few acres to oats it will be cheaper to hire than to buy these implements. Only buy those implements you really need. Farm sales take place this month, and good implements may often be had at less than half the original price. It will pay to buy if you need the implement, but do not buy it because it is cheap, nor because you can buy it on time. The note soon falls due and it often comes due when you are short of funds. Do not ask your neighbor to go security, if the bank will not accept the note with your wife as indorser, do not buy. This is sound advice and if followed will save you lots of trouble and considerable money. Do not go security for anyone. It is wrong, as you may ruin yourself, and oftentimes your family as well. A good-natured, easy-going farmer had better remain away from farm sales.

FIT VEGETABLES FOR MARKET

Washing Tank and Drying Table Is Very Useful in Preparing Beets, Carrots, Potatoes, Etc.

A washing tank and drying table is very useful in preparing vegetables for market. Beets, carrots, potatoes, etc., should be freed from soil before placing them on sale and I know nothing so handy as this arrangement, writes Mrs. H. O. McPherson in the Farm and Home. The table, b, is hinged to the tank a. The legs are also hinged, and when not in use are folded over on the table and the table folded over so as to form a lid for the tank, the legs folding inside, out of the way. The bottom of the tank should be lower at one corner with a hole to let out the water after using, by withdrawing a plug or stopper.



Washing Tank and Drying Table.

Kill the Cut Worm.

Farmers at all seasons of the year should watch for the appearance of cut worms, and should lose no time in ridding their premises of this pest immediately upon their appearance. The following remedy is recommended by several agricultural departments:

Bran, 100 pounds.
Paris green, dry, 1 pound.
Sugar, 2 or 3 pounds.

Mix thoroughly and dampen slightly with water and spread over the section where the worm appears.

VALUE OF THE LITTLE BIRDS

They Labor Incessantly in Fields, Destroying Many Injurious and Destructive Insects.

The birds are the best friends that the farmer has. Why? Because they labor daily in the farmers' fields, destroying the insects that destroy or feed upon the tender plants of the fields. Have you a friend that will labor in your fields daily destroying these insects just for his board and clothing? No, indeed; you cannot place your eye upon but one friend that will do this for you. That is the little birds which are being slaughtered by you in large numbers. Why do you not try to protect these friends who are so faithful to you, when they ask you for no pay for services rendered you in your fields, destroying insects that injure your plants, simply because you have not stopped to think over the matter as you ought to. Do you not realize that they are worth hundreds of times more to you as insect destroyers than their flesh is worth to you in a bird pie or in some other way?

Farmers, it is time to wake up to the fact that these little bird friends must have better protection. Why? Because they are needed more and more every year. As people increase and the clearing of more lands increases, the insects are bound to increase very rapidly, because they feed mostly from the farmers' fields. As insects increase, why should not the birds increase also? Simply because they haven't had the protection that they ought to have had. Some of the species of birds that used to be found in large numbers are now very seldom found at all, simply because they have not received any mercy from the hunter, and because the laws are not strict enough on this one special thing.

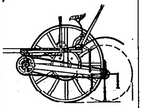
Every farmer should feel it his duty to urge his lawmaker to do all in his power to pass a law that would give his little friends in feathers better protection. A law should be passed in states having no such law, prohibiting the killing of these birds under a heavy penalty and imprisonment for violation thereof. If this were done, you would see a great improvement in crops and fewer insects. Good enforcement depends largely on farmers.

MACHINE TO KILL SPROUTS

Apparatus Invented by Missouri Man to Destroy Second Growth in Very Effective Manner.

The Scientific American, in describing a vehicle adapted for use on land cleared of timber, says:

This invention pertains to agricultural machines, and the aim is to provide a growth destroyer more especially designed for use on land that has been cleared of timber, to destroy the sprouts or returning second growth in a very simple and effective manner. For this purpose use is made of a wheeled vehicle adapted to be moved over the ground and provided with a revoluble beater, having flexible arms adapted to forcibly strike and cut off the growth at or near the ground surface. The illustration shows a sectional side elevation of the apparatus.



Sprouts or Growth Destroyer.

Effect of One-Year Rentals.

It is just as impossible to maintain soil fertility under a one year renting system in farm management as it is for water to run uphill. In the first case it is against human nature to do anything but skin the land to a finish. In the second it is counter to the law of gravity, the one being quite as much in force as the other.

Increasing Butter Fat Content.

Butter fat is not fed into the milk, but it gets there through right breeding. Rich feed will improve the flow of milk, but not the quality.

GARDEN and FARM NOTES

Rush the plowing.

Prepare for the fall rains.

The onion thrips is a bad pest.

Slack fence wire is slack farming.

Rhubarb is an easy crop to grow.

The crop of potato bugs was light this year.

Don't burn that old straw pile to get it out of the way.

Potatoes infested with rot are a poor holding proposition.

Joint grass may be killed out in the beet fields by clean cultivation.

As a rule, we do not make as good use of our pasture lands as we might.

It is important that an alfalfa field where seed is grown be free of weeds.

It will pay to batten the cracks in the barn before coming of cold weather.

The state and county agricultural fairs are of value to every farmer in the country.

If the pasture is not available, silage or a good soiling crop will be absolutely indispensable.

Before you fill your stave silo it should be painted on the inside with coal tar thinned with gasoline.

Improvement in the quality and condition of wheat is not the only benefit derived from stacking the crop.

Farmers who do not have silos should not let a large percentage of the corn crops' value go to waste.

The potato digger works best in a loose, mellow soil and the ground should be free of stone and stumps.

After the manure is made, the sooner it is applied on the land the more value the crops will get out of it.

The cutting of an alfalfa seed crop is usually done with an ordinary mower, which may or may not have a bunching attachment.

THE CHILDREN'S HEALTH

In observing the physical characteristics of her children, the careful mother soon learns that health is dependent on the regularity of the bowels. When the bowels become clogged with the stomach's refuse, loss of appetite, restlessness, irritability, and similar evidences of disorder are soon apparent. Keep the bowels regular and a healthy, happy child is assured.

At the first sign of constipation the mother should administer a mild laxative to carry off the congested waste from the stomach that is fermenting and forcing poisonous gases into the system. A simple compound of laxative herbs with pepsin is highly recommended as being very mild, yet positive, in its action, a teaspoonful at bedtime usually serving to bring an easy, thorough, natural movement next morning. This compound is known as Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and is sold by druggists everywhere for 50c a bottle. A larger bottle, put up especially for the family medicine chest, costs one dollar.

The use of salts and violent purgatives and cathartics should be avoided. They are too harsh and drastic, tending to upset the entire system. Write to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 203 West St., Monticello, Ill., for a trial bottle of his Syrup Pepsin, if you have never used it. He will be glad to send it without any expense to you. Adv.

New Stage in Inebriety.

Mr. Borden has been telling an anecdote concerning two "brither Scots" who used to foregather in a "dry" district, each bringing with him a portable spring of comfort in the shape of a bottle of whisky.

One of them was asked one day by a "third party" whether the other, Jock Anderson, did not get a little drunk sometimes.

"Drunk," was the reply. "Man, the last time I was wi' him Jock was that drunk I couldna see him."—London Mail.

The Greatest Woman.

Who was or is the greatest woman in all history? Two hundred teachers answered the question and with enthusiasm and unanimity the judges awarded the prize to the one who made this reply: "The wife of the farmer of moderate means who does her own cooking, washing, ironing, sewing, brings up a family of boys and girls to be useful members of society, and finds time for intellectual improvement."

BACKACHE IS DISCOURAGING
Until You Get
After The Cause

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Nothing more discouraging than a constant backache.

Lame when you awake. Pains pierce you when you bend or lift. It's hard to work, or to rest.

You sleep poorly and next day is the same old story.

That backache indicates bad kidneys and calls for some good kidney remedy.

None so well recommended as Doan's Kidney Pills.

Here's A California Case—Mrs. E. Walsh, 1449 Tenth Ave., San Francisco, Cal., says: "The sharp, knife-like pains in my back were almost unbearable. I often had to cry out. Once while walking, I had a sudden attack and a doctor had to be called. Finally I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they made me well."

Women

From Forty-Five to Fifty Are Much Benefited by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

The "change of life" is a most critical period in a woman's existence, and the anxiety felt by women as it draws near is not without reason.

When her system is in a deranged condition, she may be predisposed to apoplexy, or congestion of some organ. At this time, also, cancers and tumors are more liable to form and begin their destructive work.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness, are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life when woman's great change may be expected.

These symptoms are calls from nature for help. The nerves are crying out for assistance and the cry should be heeded in time.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is prepared to meet the needs of women's system at this trying period of her life. It invigorates and strengthens the female organism and builds up the weakened nervous system. It has carried many women safely through this crisis.

Mrs. Estella Gillispie

ONE CASE OUT OF MANY TO PROVE OUR CLAIMS.

St. Anne, Ill.—"I was passing through the change of life and I was a perfect wreck from female troubles. I had a displacement and bearing down pains, weak fainting spells, dizziness, then numb and cold feelings. Sometimes my feet and limbs were swollen. I was irregular and had so much backache and headache, was nervous, irritable and was despondent. Sometimes my appetite was good but more often it was not. My kidneys troubled me at times and I could walk only a short distance.

"I saw your advertisement in a paper and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I was helped from the first. At the end of two months the swelling had gone down, I was relieved of pain, and could walk with ease. I continued with the medicine and now I do almost all my housework. I know your medicine has saved me from the grave and I am willing for you to publish anything I write to you, for the good of others."—Mrs. Estella Gillispie, R.F.D. RUSSIAN CLUB IN WHICH SUICIDE IS AN ART

Russia's latest Suicide Club has reduced self-destruction to an art. Probably in no other country in the world would it be possible to establish as a famous Russian author is said to have done here, an organization whose sole purpose is the encouragement of "sporting" suicides among its members. With headquarters in St. Petersburg and quickly growing branches in Moscow, Odessa, Khakow, and Vladivostock, this club meets regularly to plan the self-inflicted death of its members.

CAPTAIN SERGIUS HURKO

These suicides are so far removed from the ordinary affairs that result from hunger, unrequited affection, jealousy, poverty or despair, that one of the conditions of membership is that no member shall kill himself for any of these vulgar reasons.

This club is but one of the manifestations of the peculiar and almost inexplicable suicide mania that is now sweeping the whole of the country, seizing upon young and old, rich and poor, lowly and high-born. In St. Petersburg alone there is an average of 15 suicides a day. Moscow records about the same number, and the other big Russian cities are not far behind. Efforts have been made in vain to check the tendency. Anti-suicide societies by the dozen have made their appearance, but despite the constant efforts of such organizations as the League of Life and the Anti-Suicide League, the daily record of suicides increases alarmingly. So serious has the situation become in this city that the Prefecture of Police has offered a reward of $2.50 for every rescue and many of the unemployed assemble every day on the banks of the Neva and the canals on the lookout for attempted suicides. One another placed three rescues to his credit in as many days.

Because of the pledge of secrecy which binds the members of the Suicide Club details of its organization are difficult to get. Who founded it? Who is the president? Some declare it is one of the grand dukes, though the younger generation of imperial cousins show too much good sense and too much zest for life to play such a role, and the older ones are far too dignified. Others declare that the famous Russian novelist, Artzybarcheff, is the founder and president and the instigator of the more original suicides. He has written many books which condemn life as something like a sin, and extol self-destruction as a heroic action. He has been fined by the tribunals for writing books of pernicious influence, and he openly advocates many kinds of vice, which he makes as attractive as possible. His great talent makes his books all the more dangerous. Nevertheless, there is no sure proof that he has any direct influence on suicides, or has ever helped the club to gather in its harvest of victims. And though it is now an established institution its origin and members' list is as deep a mystery as possible.

This mysterious club holds its meetings at the homes of the members. Many fashionable people belong to it, and women with a family of growing children, elderly men with the best part of their lives behind them, young women with a good chance of happiness gather round the table where the fatal lots are drawn. One card is prepared for each meeting. The member who draws it must kill himself within a week, the club deciding as to the method, if the member cannot think of a suitable way.

Members must court death out of mere curiosity, or as a means of showing some novel way of leaving the world. Common poisons are tabooed. Drowning is admitted only when wine or perfumed water is used and the surroundings are exceptionally beautiful or luxurious. The simple emptying of a revolver into one's body is not good enough. Shooting must be "artistic" or left severely alone.

These suicides take place with a lot of pomp. In the case of the young Baroness Zakomelska a supper was given to the Petersburg members. At the end, a huge tub was filled with champagne, and the lady drowned herself in it, after all present had drunk a great deal of the wine.

In Moscow a young doctor, named Dovbor, recently married a charming girl. He did not know that she belonged to the Suicide Club. After her marriage she attended the meeting of the Moscow branch with the intention of tendering her resignation at the end of the proceedings. But she drew the fatal card that night. Her husband was away, so she had nobody to consult. She determined to feign suicide and then leave the town, telling him all and asking him to live elsewhere. For the club, like most secret societies in Russia, is very strict with those who reveal its secrets. So she laid her plans with care, telling the members that she had discovered a mysterious poison which, sprinkled on a rose and inhaled, produced death. She knew enough medical jargon to convince them and her maid found her seemingly dead next morning as she went into her room. As a matter of fact, she had only taken a strong narcotic, but the maid, in a panic, wired to the husband that his wife was dead. His despair was so great that he shot himself. Meanwhile the wife recovered, and wired him it was all a joke, and she was coming to rejoin him. She found him dead. Then she shot herself, after leaving a letter to her mother, in which she disclosed the above facts about the club. The police were put on its track, but only made a few unimportant arrests.

Various reasons have been urged for the increase of suicides in Russia, and many remedies suggested. The writer asked no less an authority on Russian life than Count Witte for his views. The Count thought a moment before answering.

"There is not one cause, but many," he said at last. "To begin with, our young men begin to live too soon. They are children for such a short time that they lose their health and good spirits before youths of the same age in America have begun to be grown up. They are satiated before they are well out of their teens. Their minds, made morbid by undue excitement, are always craving for new impressions, new sensations. Suicide is new to them, so they try suicide, not because of despair, but from simple lassitude. 'Life,' they say, 'is not worth living.'

"In the case of the very poor, I should say that they often work under worse conditions than the same class in America, or, rather, there is not so much hope for their getting on. With us, the classes are more shut up than there. It wants far more enterprise than you would think for a Russian to 'make himself.'

"Then, too, modern Russian literature has a depressing influence. We have many authors of tremendous talent; but they are all sad. They have none of the joy of life. We have still a lot of eastern fatalism in our psychology. We Russians do not value human life so high as the English, for instance, who not only drag a poor devil whose life is one long burden out of the river, but put him to prison for trying to end things.

"One cannot help admiring the courage of the very poor, who are content to toil and suffer for years, with no prospect of anything better. Can we wonder that some of them break down and take fate into their own hands? In general, too much is made of Russian suicides. We are a young people, finding our way to the light. There must be a number of discouraged ones."

The truth is that people in Russia go into despair over things which would not trouble an Anglo-Saxon much.

Sometimes Russian suicides are ordered by the family, a regiment, or other institution. The case of young Captain Sergius Hurko of the Hussars is an example. The young man was wild, played high and ran into debt. He determined to retrieve his fortunes at Monte Carlo—and failed. As it happened, an old general he had known from childhood was staying at the same hotel, and had won huge sums. Hurko entered his bedroom, gagged him, and stole the money. But the victim had bitten his hand, and though Hurko made off for Petersburg at once, he was recognized as the thief. His family disowned him, and he had a hint from his regiment that the best thing he could do was to "disappear." He did so, the prison authorities facilitating the conveyance of poison to his cell.

Old Baron Mellor-Zakomelski—no relation, by the way, to the young woman who ended her life in champagne, was governor of the Baltic provinces. He had a wild son named Sacha. After paying Sacha's debts many times, he grew tired. When the son made an application for money one day, the father sent him a revolver, telling him to shoot himself. The son, who was making merry in some town in central Russia, ordered a supper, invited all his boon companions, arranged a sleigh expedition afterward, returned to his rooms, and shot himself with his father's present. He left a note saying: "I should have done it long ago, but knew it would afford my father pleasure, so put it off till his revolver came. Now, at least, all the world knows he ordered me to commit suicide."

Suicide Bureau a Success

Many interesting pages from the great book of life are to be found in the report of the operations of the Salvation Army's anti-suicide bureau.

Since it was started 4,751 persons have called to lay their embarrassments before Colonel Emerson, and have asked him to "show cause"—as the lawyers say—why they should not put an end to their lives. The largest number put down the cause of their trouble to financial reasons; after this come drink or drugs, and melancholia.

The applicants come from almost every class except the workers. There are clergymen, missionaries, military officers, doctors, solicitors, schoolmasters, clerks and company promoters. They have all been dealt with according to their needs, and such help has been given them as their cases seemed to demand.

Legal and medical advice has been afforded; creditors have been reasoned with; reconciliations have been brought about with relatives. And the work, according to General Booth, has been successful beyond highest expectations.—London Chronicle.

Controlling the Mississippi.

Regarding some method for mitigating the Mississippi river floods, the Scientific American says: "The present outbreak of the river will serve to direct attention to a proposed method of control which we are inclined to think will prove to be the ultimate solution of the problem. We refer to the plan of providing storage reservoirs in the upper reaches of the river, in which the flood waters due to spring rains and the melting of the snows, could be impounded, to be released in a dry season for the purpose of maintaining the river at a navigable depth."

Prehistoric Burial Ground

An interesting find, from an archaeological point of view has been made in the showyard of the Highland an Agricultural Society at Cupar, Fifeshire, Scotland. Some excavations were being made in connection with the erection of a stand, when the workmen engaged came upon a number of stone coffins containing human skeletons. The shape of the coffins gave evidence of great antiquity, but were allowed to remain as discovered. This is the second occasion that human remains have been found since the work of erection of the showyard commenced. All over Fife, and especially in the north of the county, traces of stone coffins and prehistoric interments have been found. The coffins which have been discovered may be prehistoric or may have been placed in the burial ground in connection with the old Parish Church of Supar, which was in existence in the twelfth century or even earlier.

Women Own Reindeer.

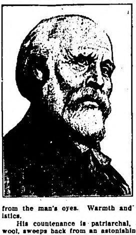
Out of the 260 Eskimos who own reindeer in Alaska, two are women. One of these, Mary Arisarlook Andrewuk, has received the title of "Reindeer Queen of Alaska." "Queen Mary" owns a herd of 1,303 deer, which she manages with judgment and intelligence. According to the usual contract made with the government she is required to train three apprentices and to give to each the customary number of deer. She has done better than this. She has trained and rewarded eight or ten apprentices, and at the present time has another under her care. She long since discarded the igloo, or native hut, underground, in which she was born, and is now comfortably housed near Nome in a cabin of logs. She speaks seven or eight Indian languages, and this has enabled her to be of considerable service as an interpreter.

Want Chaplains on French Fleet.

It will be news to most persons that the French navy has no chaplains afloat, although a moment's consideration would bring to remembrance the fact of the complete divorce between church and state in France. The subject is brought prominently into notice by a petition signed by a great number of the mothers or widows of the sailors who were victims of the accident on the Gloire or the Liberte. The petitioners are to be found in the Midi, Brittany, Var and Finisterre, and they pray the senate for the reappointment of chaplains on warships.—London Globe.

PROMINENT PEOPLE

REMARKABLE PERSONALITY OF HARDIE



Snowy-haired, deep-chested, powerful, keen-eyed, Keir Hardie, leader of millions of British working men, has just finished his third visit to America. The chairman of the Labor party in the house of commons is a striking personality—picturesque and unforgettable. He came to attend the wedding of his son, who is in business in Brooklyn.

At the age of seven Keir Hardie was set to work in a mine. His father had been a miner before him, his mother a working woman. In the mines he stayed for seventeen years. Today, fifty-six years old, he is the leading figure in Parliament in the fight for improving the condition of working people.

The muscular hand grasp with which he welcomes his caller is a reminder of the days when he used to swing a pick. There is warmth in it as well as strength, a warmth that bears out the steady, kindly gaze from the man's eyes. Warmth and strength are Keir Hardie's characteristics.

His countenance is patriarchal, a mass of white hair, like shredded wool, sweeps back from an astonishingly high forehead, a tremendous dome above the dark thatched brows. His face and forehead are ruddy with glowing health. His figure is not tall, but is erect and powerful, and the whole man radiates personality. A full-blooded man. His face suggests a dozen other great men: Tennyson, Lord Salisbury, James J. Hill, the railroad builder; Longfellow—men of great vision, great force, great human sympathy. His clothes are as simple as himself: a dark gray suit whose wrinkles show how friendly it is to its owner; a soft, white shirt, a soft collar, a soft dark blue tie, polka dotted, loosely knotted. He smokes a briar pipe.

"Come right in," he smiles. "That's good American, isn't it? 'Come awa' ben,' the Scotch would have it."

JUDGE FINDS JOY IN HEART COURT

Judge William N. Gemmill, sitting in the Chicago court of domestic relations as the successor to Judge Charles N. Goodnow, re-assigned, the other day declared his work a study of hearts.

Judge Goodnow left the court of domestic relations because he found it filled with heartaches.

Judge Gemmill took up the labors of the court as the most interesting labor of the law.

"I enjoy the work," said the new judge of the court of hearts. "I have just come from a civil court, largely dry as dust sort of work. Here my work is full of 'heart interest.' It is a study of people and motives. The problems here presented are as intricate and interesting as life itself.

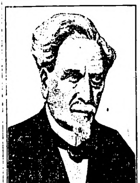
"An unending procession of lives and loves are passed through the court for observation and study.

"The work is far from as full of heartaches and sorrows as the work of a criminal court. There one has to impose long, hard sentences, sometimes death. There are weeping relatives, downcast, bitter men. They get a message of the hard side of justice, cells and the gallows. Here the labor of the court is to produce happiness and peace where infelicities have arisen. There is something hopefully constructive about the work.

"It is a court of 'must,' not 'must not.'"

Judge Gemmill, although now taking up the labor of the court of domestic relations for the first time as the regular judge, has frequently sat for Judge Goodnow.

DEAN OF FRENCH JOURNALISTS QUITS



Henri Rochefort, veteran polemist and dean of French journalists, has laid aside his pen forever.

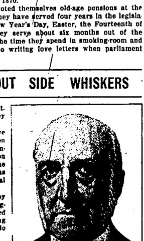
He is almost eighty-two years old, has been in journalistic harness for half a century, and until the present indisposition has not missed writing an article every day for more than forty years. Even since his eyes began to fail him, only once has he missed dictating his daily article.

And now the doughty old fighter takes what he believes to be only a temporary rest at the imperative order of his physicians. The paper for which he has written so many palpitating articles announces that no one replaces him. It says in effect what Jefferson replied when the French foreign minister welcomed him with the remark: "You replace Dr. Franklin." "No," replied the author of Jeffersonian simplicity; "no one can replace Dr. Franklin; I merely succeed him." As long as a shadow of hope remains of his reappearance, no one will succeed Henri Rochefort.

The old war horse of journalism is an Aix-les-Baines and he explains in facetious fashion what he calls the first interuption in his journalistic work since his return from exile in 1870.

Deputies, says Rochefort, have voted themselves old-age pensions at the age of fifty-five, on condition that they have served four years in the legislature. They take holidays around New Year's Day, Easter, the Fourteenth of July and Christmas. Altogether they serve about six months out of the twelve. "I do not count," he adds, "the time they spend in smoking-room and buffet, nor the hours they devote to writing love letters when parliament is in session."

REAL TRUTH ABOUT SIDE WHISKERS



The truth about whiskers is out. Turn the spotlight on Chauncey Depew.

Returning to his own, his native land, after his annual wandering on foreign strands, America's ex-champion after-dinner statesman stood on the deck of an Atlantic steamer the other day and admitted that he was the modern father of all hirsute facial adornment.

Mr. Depew was much incensed by the report that an invasion of English whiskers threatens the United States. He fingered his own flowing white ones caressingly as he made the following points:

That he began to raise this same crop fifty years ago.

That forty-nine years and nine months ago they were just as they are now, barring a whiteness of color that is natural at seventy-nine.

That he made many annual trips to England, taking the whiskers with him each time, and just as surely bringing them back to America each time.

That Englishmen, at first deriding him, came finally to imitate him.

That within the last few years few Englishmen have ventured to brave their bleak native out of doors smooth shaven.

And that, considering all these things, a thinker can plainly see it is not an invasion of English whiskers, but of native grown American whiskers that threatens this country.

IN LAND OF BEAUTY

Switzerland a Perpetual Delight for the Tourist.

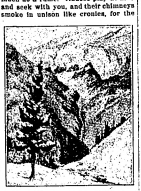
Charm of Ancient Times to Be Met With at Every Turn—Country of Immense Views and Magnificent Sunsets.

Geneva.—"Switzerland for the Swiss," is the occasional plaint that catches the eye of the reader of the Swiss journals, the latest items of the kind being the little communing of Rd in a recent Journal de Geneve. "The strangers are here," it begins, "with their porters, their guides, their autos, their funiculars, the panoramas and shops, and souvenirs born of the shops—will they not presently make our country uninhabitable? But when the day does come," he continues in substance, "and we shall be obliged to abandon the Alps, there will still remain to us the great Swiss plateau."

The Germans do not cease to boast of flowery Lunebourg, the Black Forest, the Bords du Rhin, the Thuringian hills and of the Saxon Switzerland, and perhaps some day, drawn by their persistent praise, we may get to see them, but then, they resemble the scenery of the Swiss plateau.

"Do you know of it?" he continues. "The foot of the Jura, the Fribourg country, the Toggenbourg, High Thurgovia, the outskirts of Schaffhausen, the banks of the Aar and the Reuss, the little lakes of Bienne, Hallwyl and the Greiffensee. And do you know that there are little villages where there are still the good old inns with their wrought iron swing-signs, just as in the days of the diligence? Do you realize the beauties of the hillocks here, the prealpes, from which the view is immense and the sunsets are magnificent?"

There used to be in this old Switzerland the ancient customs. Sundays, when fair, the forests were filled with the young girls in white, with bare arms and flowers in their hair, and troops of children loaded with the berries and blossoms of the country. Now there are no troopsings of the children, no songful young men, no girls in white. You ramble in the woods—it is hot below, but it is always cool and fragrant in groves of pine—but there is no one there. You stroll leisurely, you fill your handkerchief with chanterellies and this is what you see. "A vast expanse of hills, the nearer green, the middle distance, blue. There are masses of forests, one behind another, the village is out there, crowned by its lofty castle, the covered bridge below and the calm river flows without so much as a ruffle. Houses play at hide and seek with you, and their chimneys smoke in unison like cronies, for the hour of supper is approaching. You hear the village bells, first the precentor telling the hour and in his wake the others in solos, duets and trios. Far away the lake is a burning spot in the vast expanse and the long line of the Jura is brown. See, the Alps are turning to roses."



In the Alpine Country.

This is the Switzerland to which Rd would call the attention and appreciation of his countrymen, of which, indeed, they now know but little, "and when you gaze upon it," he concludes, "you cannot help but feel within you the sentiment, 'My Switzerland, my beautiful home.'"

IS MUCH MARRIED MAN

Fifth Spouse Gets Divorce From Former Marine When She Learns of Others.

Philadelphia, Pa.—After evidence had been presented to show that her husband had at least four wives, Mrs. Robert P. Easterly, formerly Miss Helen Martin, 2818 Reynolds street, was granted a divorce by Common Pleas Court No. 5.

Mrs. Easterly testified that she met Easterly, who is also known as Rufus S. Patty, in 1908. They were married and went to live at the home of the bride's parents, in Reynolds street. Soon after a child was born Easterly disappeared.

According to his wife, she started an investigation and learned that Easterly had a wife, who was known as Mrs. Rufus S. Patty, in Canton, O., and another of the same name in Tennessee.

It was also learned the man, who was formerly a member of the United States marine corps, had wives in Washington and Oregon.

YANKEES STUDYING ENGLISH

London School Does a Big Business Teaching Touring Americans "Correct" Accent.

London.—"English taught to foreigners, Americans, and English people. Accurate speech, perfect accent, and an elegant style of writing. English guaranteed in a few weeks."

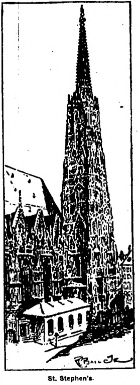
This advertisement appeared recently in the London newspapers. The "Lyceum School of Languages" is responsible for it.

"During the summer," said the manager, "we practically live by teaching English to American visitors. We find here that every American in his heart wants to speak English with a British accent."

GEM OF ARCHITECTURAL ART

St. Stephen's Cathedral in Vienna One of the Finest Specimens of Gothic Building in the World.

St. Stephen's Cathedral in Vienna, where the Eucharistic Congress, an international meeting of the Catholic church, was held, was started in 1144 by Duke Henry Jasomirgott of Badenberg. At that time Vienna was surrounded by a wall to protect the city from the invasion of the Tartars, Turks and other savage tribes. The Giant's Gate and the Heathen Towers were finished in 1147. It was damaged by fire and other accidents caused it to fall into ruin. Under Duke Rudolph IV. of Hapsburg it was rebuilt between 1329 and 1364.



St. Stephen's.

The south tower, the chief glory of the cathedral, was not finished until several years after the duke's death, although the designs made by the duke were carried out. The tower, with its turrets and spiracles, tapers up in a floriated spire to the gilt cross nearly four hundred and fifty feet from the ground. The cathedral is one of the most remarkable examples of Gothic architecture and ranks among the most beautiful church edifices in the world.

WANTS BEEF STEWS PROBED

Man Sends Complaint With Exhibit to Health Department of New York.

New York.—Finding a suspicious looking bone in a beef stew, a man sent a communication to the department of health, requesting that an investigation be made into beef stews, Irish stews, and stews of almost every nationality purveyed in this city. The letter from the suspicious individual stated that he had ordered a beef stew in a Bowery restaurant.

"When I bit down on a piece of meat," was the writer's plaint, "I nearly tore a tooth loose on a bone. Inclosed you will find the same. If that bone ever came out of a cow, I'm no judge of animals. I believe it must either be a part of a cat or a dog. You would greatly oblige me by investigating this case."

The bone was about an inch and a half long.

LANDLORDS A PERIL HERE?

Former M. P. From England Says the System Is Gaining Ground in United States.

St. Joseph, Mo.—That America is fast coming to the landlord and tenantry stage of England, with its attendant woes, was the statement made by Francis Neilson, former member of the British parliament, in speaking at the courthouse on the relation of the taxation of land values in England to the single-tax movement in America. Neilson said 180 members of the house of commons signed the manifesto for the taxation of land values, a movement that is being fought to the bitter end by the peers, who own two-thirds of the 77,000,000 acres of land in the United Kingdom.

Starving on 26 Cents a Week.

Middletown, Conn.—George Ward, an old-time athlete, who four months ago began a series of experiments in living on a minimum quantity of foods of various character, is a patient in a local hospital suffering from lack of nutriment. Although his condition is serious, the physicians say that careful treatment will restore his health, as he has a strong constitution.

Ward is seventy-four years old. He was formerly a well-known long-distance walker. A few weeks ago he announced that he had cut down his diet to a basis where the cost was only 26 cents a week. His menu consisted principally of oatmeal, crackers and pancakes.

To Have Big Air Fleet.

London.—England is to have a mighty air fleet. Plans already under way will put this new arm of the service on a par with that of the other great powers. A great fleet of fighting war planes will be organized immediately. This fleet will consist of two types of machines, one armed with quick-firing guns for engaging and destroying the enemy's aeroplanes and the other designed for scouting.

ROOSEVELT IS SHOT IN BREAST AT MILWAUKEE

A 32-CALIBRE REVOLVER IS USED—BELIEVED WOUND IS NOT SERIOUS.

WOUND IS NOT SERIOUS.

Colonel Persists in Going to the Auditorium to Speak After the Accident—Crowd is Quieted.

Milwaukee, Oct. 15.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt was shot and perhaps seriously wounded as he was leaving the Gilpatrick hotel for the Auditorium to make a speech.

The wound was regarded as superficial and the colonel went on to the hall and began his speech after he had seen the assassin arrested and taken to the police station.

Henry F. Cochems seized the would-be assassin and held him until policemen came up. A mob surged around the man, who apparently is a radical on the subject of Roosevelt's running for another term as president, but the police succeeded in landing him safely in the central station.

The assailant, who is small of stature, admitted firing the shot and said that "any man looking for a third term ought to be shot."

In notes found in the man's pockets at the police station, were statements that the man had been visited in a dream by the spirit of William McKinley, who had said, indicating Colonel Roosevelt, "this is my murderer, avenge my death."

Roosevelt Felt No Pain.

The colonel felt no pain at the time the shot was fired and was not aware that he was shot until he was on the way to the Auditorium. His attention was then called to a hole in his overcoat, and he found that his shirt was soaked with blood. He insisted that he was not hurt badly. A superficial examination of the wound was made when he reached the Auditorium, and three physicians agreed that he was in no immediate grave danger.

The prisoner told the police after an hour's examination that he was John Schrank of 370 East Tenth st., New York.

Colonel Roosevelt's life probably was saved by a manuscript of the speech which he delivered. The bullet struck the manuscript which retarded its force as it passed through into the flesh.

The assailant was prevented from firing a second shot by Albert H. Martin, one of Colonel Roosevelt's two secretaries.

Colonel Roosevelt had just stepped into an automobile when the would-be assassin pushed his way through the crowd in the street and fired.

Martin Leaps Onto Assailant.

Martin, who was standing in the car with the colonel, leaped onto the man's shoulders and bore him to the ground. Captain A. O. Girard, of Milwaukee, who was on the front seat, jumped almost at the same time and in an instant the man was overpowered and disarmed.

A wild cry of "Lynch him!" went up from the crowd. Colonel Roosevelt spoke to the people and told them to spare the assailant. The man was taken into the hotel and held there until he was removed to the police station. In spite of the entreaties of physicians, Colonel Roosevelt insisted upon delivering his address.

"I will make this speech or die, one or the other," he said.

Harry F. Cochems, one of the Wisconsin Progressive leaders, told the great crowd which had assembled in the Auditorium that Colonel Roosevelt had been shot and asked the people to be calm.

The crowd was thrown almost into a panic by the announcement, but Colonel Roosevelt calmed the people by rising and assuring them that he was not badly hurt. Then he began his address.

Several times he seemed to be growing weak, and members of his party rose to help him. He mentioned them to sit down.

"Let me alone. I'm all right," he said.

As soon as Colonel Roosevelt had assured himself that the assassin was safe in the hands of the police, he gave orders to drive on to the Auditorium.

They had driven hardly one of the four blocks from the hotel to the Auditorium when John McGrath, another of Colonel Roosevelt's secretaries, uttered a sharp exclamation and pointed to the colonel's breast.

"Look, colonel," he said, "there is a hole in your overcoat."

Colonel Roosevelt looked down, saw the hole, then unbuttoned the big brown army coat which he was wearing and thrust his hand beneath it. When he withdrew it his fingers were stained with blood.

Colonel Roosevelt was not at all dismayed by his discovery.

"It looks as though I had been hit," he said, "but I don't think it is anything serious."

Dr. Scurrey Terrell of Dallas, Texas, who had entered the automobile just before it started off, insisted that the colonel return to the hotel. He would not hear of it, however, and the car was driven to the Auditorium.

As soon as they reached the building, Colonel Roosevelt was taken into a dressing room and his outer garments were removed.

Dr. Terrell with the help of Dr. John Stratton of Milwaukee and Dr. S. S. Sorenson of Racine, Wis., who were in the audience and came to the dressing room on a call from the platform, made a superficial examination of the wound. They agreed that it was impossible to hazard a guess as to the extent of the colonel's injuries and that he should by all means go at once to a hospital."

"I will deliver this speech or die," said the colonel.

After the meeting closed Roosevelt was rushed to his automobile and flashed through the streets to the emergency hospital.

The operating room had been placed in readiness to receive Colonel Roosevelt and six of the leading surgeons of Milwaukee were awaiting his arrival. Colonel Roosevelt was undressed and placed upon the operating table although he insisted that he was not badly hurt and that the doctors were taking it too seriously.

An examination of the wound showed that it had been made by a bullet of large size.

It entered the fleshy part of the right breast, half way between the collar bone and lower rib. The physicians found that they knew no more after their examination and, as to the location of the bullet, and it was decided to send for an X-ray machine to determine to what depth the missile had penetrated.

While he was waiting for the X-ray machine, Colonel Roosevelt sat up on the operating table and talked politics and joked with the physicians.

Assailant Talks Freely.

After a long cross examination Colonel Roosevelt's assailant, John Schrenk, talked more freely.

The shooting was the result of a carefully laid plan by Schrank, which was often flustrated, but in which he finally succeeded, according to his story.

The man talked freely after his first stubborn refusal to give his name when be was arrested by Sergeant Mooney at the Gilpatrick hotel.

According to his story, he formerly ran a saloon at 370 E. Tenth Street between avenues B and C, New York city. He was born in Erding, Bavaria, two hours out of Munich, the capital. He is 36 years old and came to this country when he was nine years old with his parents. He had been engaged in the saloon business, as proprietor and as an employe of members of his family nearly all his life, until he decided that it was his duty to kill Colonel Roosevelt.

Acquainted With Colonel.

He said he had been personally acquainted with Roosevelt since the colonel was police commissioner of New York in 1895.

He said he deemed it his duty, after much consideration of the situation, to put him out of the way. He was living at his home address at that time he said, but soon after he had a dream in which former President McKinley appeared to him. He was told by McKinley, in this dream that it was not Czolgosz who murdered him but Roosevelt. He said McKinley, in his dream, told him that the blood was on Roosevelt's hands and that Roosevelt had killed him so that he might become president.

Colonel Roosevelt's special train left for Chicago at 12:50 a. m. The Colonel said that be would spend the night on the car and that after remaining a few hours in Chicago he would go on to Indianapolis to fulfill his speaking engagement for tonight.

Roosevelt's Train, South Milwaukee.—Colonel Roosevelt was in bed, resting quietly as the special train pulled out of Milwaukee for Chicago.

Chicago.—Roosevelt will be taken to the Presbyterian hospital on West Congress street, where the four Chicago surgeons who were to have gone to Milwaukee, will extract the bullet.

Milwaukee.—The positive statement that Colonel Roosevelt was not injured seriously was made by Dr. Frederick A. Stratton of Milwaukee, one of the physicians who examined the Colonel.

New York.—John Schrenk formerly lived at the address given in the Milwaukee dispatches. He is a laundryman who left here about a month ago. He has a wife and child here. The police are investigating his history.

Car Hits Auto; One Killed.

Chicago, Oct. 15.—One man was killed, two others seriously hurt and a woman probably fatally injured when a street car collided with a sight-seeing automobile on the South Side.

Club Women of Ohio Meet.

Athens, O., Oct. 15. — The seventeenth annual convention of the Ohio Federation of Women's Clubs opened this morning in the Methodist church, the first session being devoted to addresses of welcome, the annual address of the president, Mrs. Howard Hutchins of Oberlin, and the transaction of business. The attendance is large and the program for the four days provides for the discussion of many of the important topics of the times.

MARQUARD WINS 5-2.

New York Takes Sixth Games of Series.

New York, Oct. 15.—Before a large crowd, New York took the sixth game of the world's series, 5-2. Marquard pitched wonderful ball for the Giants, while O'Brien and Collins were both pitted against him. The scoring came in the first two innings, New York getting five in the opening and the Boston Red Sox getting two in the second.

BULLET BROKE ROOSEVELT'S RIB

NEW X-RAY PLATE REVEALS THE LEADEN PELLET INBEDDED IN THE BONE.

WOUND IS NOT TREATED.

Will Be Allowed to Heal Naturally—The Colonel is in Good Condition in His Wife's Charge.

Chicago, Oct. 17.—Colonel Roosevelt slept soundly. The rooms of his suite were kept dark and silent. Night nurse Margaret Fitzgerald was exiled from the room which she turned over to Mrs. Roosevelt, and sat outside with the police sergeant who was on guard. She said that she had nothing to do for the colonel and would not go to him unless he rang.

The bullet wound inflicted in Colonel Theodore Roosevelt's chest at Milwaukee Monday night, it officially was announced for the first time, is healing normally without infection.

The statement that no complications have shown themselves was made after a day during which the first successful x-ray picture made of the wound in the colonel's chest was examined by the surgeons.

The fact was developed that the would-be assassin's bullet fractured the colonel's fourth rib. The missile remains imbedded, apparently in the bone. The fracture, however, it is stated, will not affect the treatment in any way, but will be allowed to heal untreated, as will the wound.

Bullet's Path Lacerated.

A description of the wound was given by Dr. W. B. McCauley, the first to be given the public by the surgeons. He said that the bullet's path through the muscles of the chest is lacerated to some extent by the battered lead, but that there was little contusion and no extensive area of extravasated surrounding tissue.

"The bullet did not mushroom, as might have been expected," Dr. McCauley said. "For that reason it cut a comparatively small hole in the skin and did not reduce a large portion of the nearby tissues to pulp, as is the case in a soft bullet that mushrooms in any tissue after it hits a bone. I thinks the bundle of papers checked it and the spectacles, for some reason, failed to spread the bullet much.

"There is not a sign of suppuration in the wound. The flesh is in good condition and seems to be healing without any evidence of complication. If there were pus forming deep in the wound we would know it at once by an unusual rise of temperature."

Pleural Cavity Untouched.

Dr. McCauley added that it is now certain from the x-ray pictures that the bullet has not entered nor injured the pleural cavity, removing a grave possibility in the case.

He pointed out the normal condition of the patient as indicated by the official chart taken at 10 p. m.

'This case,' he added, "will not be like that of the late President McKinley, whose sudden hopeless turn took the public by surprise. There is nothing to be expected here, but if anything in the way of dangerous symptoms be developed they will be made public at once."

Spends Pleasant Day.

Colonel Roosevelt spent a pleasant day chatting with Mrs. Roosevelt, and with his daughters, Mrs. Longworth and Miss Ethel, and with Theodore, Jr., and Nicholas Longworth, his son-in-law, all of whom visited him and stayed as long as Mrs. Roosevelt would allow.

She has established herself in the room next to the colonel's and will stay there as long as he is in the hospital. The colonel went to much pains in having the rooms made homelike to receive her and this evening their laughter was heard a number of times until the hour when the colonel felt like going to sleep. He read for a time after the surgeons left, after their night visit, and then dropped off quietly to sleep.

War Secrets to Be Guarded.

Washington, Oct. 17.—For the protection of the military secrets of the United States, President Taft has issued an executive order forbidding foreign vessels to enter the folowing ports without special authority of the navy department: Tortugas, Fla.; Great Harbor, Culebra; Guantanamo, Cuba; Pearl Harbor, Hawaii; Guam and Subig Bay, Philippine Islands. These ports are naval bases.

Nat Goodwin Sued.

San Diego, Oct. 17. — Charles N. Doughty of this city, has suit begun against Nat C. Goodwin, the actor, for $25,000, alleging alienation of the affections of Mrs. Doughty.

British Concern Given Contract.

Washington, Oct. 17.—A contract for part of the armor-piercing shells for the United States navy, on which the Hatfield Steel company of England recently underbid all American competitors by nearly $200,000 on less than a million dollar contract for 2,000 14-inch shells, and by about $300,000 on a contract of about $1,000,000 for 2,500 12-inch shells, will be awarded to the English concern, it is announced by Secretary Winthrop.

INVESTIGATE SCHRANK'S LIFE

NEW YORK POLICE SEND DATA TO MILWAUKEE.

Prisoner Born in Bavaria—Came to U. S. When Nine Years Old.

New York, Oct. 17.—Every scrap of information which Inspector Joseph Faurot, in charge of the detective bureau here, has been able to gather regarding John Schrank, Theodore Roosevelt's assailant, has been forwarded to Chief of Police Janssen of Milwaukee.

A bundle of papers found at the Brooklyn hotel, where Schrank made his home from February, 1911, to Jan. 15, last, included a number of birth and marriage certificates, papers showing dates of the deaths of several relatives, tax certificates and several postal cards and letters, together with some poems in German, and a collection of writings by Gen. Thaddeus Kosciusko. There was also a Bavarian school report dated for the term ending July 22, 1889. This said Schrank was a good boy and stood well in reading and writing.

One of the postal cards, written in German, was from Schrank's mother, Catherine Schrank. It was dated at Erding, Oct. 12, 1889, and chided her son for not writing her. A letter from the mother, dated Dec 19, 1890, again reprimanded him for not writing and stated she was going to have the German consul look him up.

A birth certificate showed that Nepomuk Schrank was born March 5, 1876, at Erding. The names of the parents were given as Michael and Catherine. There was also a certificate of baptism in the city church at Erding. Another paper was from the royal court at Bavaria, stating that the elder Schrank left no money. There was also a photograph of John Schrank.

The police declare that he came from ancestry in which insanity was frequent and had been presumably slightly unbalanced for several years. The unhinging of his mind is believed to date either from the death of his aunt in 1907, or from the death of a girl friend in the Slocum disaster.

Schrank has absolutely no police record in this city.

CRIPPLE FIGHTS DOG.

Animal Attacks Two Other Small Pupils.

New York, Oct. 17.—Two boys were bitten by a white bulldog which got into a class room on the third floor of a public school here.

James O'Neill, 10 years old, coaxed the dog to come into the room. An instant later the class of boys as well as the teacher were terror-stricken. The dog fastened its teeth in O'Neill's right leg. Two of the boys beat the animal off with their hands. He then leaped at Thomas Laurissa, 12 years old and dragged the boy to the floor.

The rest all got away from the animal and William Tesdate, who walks with a crutch, was left alone on the bench. Tesdate was helpless with terror. His crutch had fallen to the floor and he dared not stoop to pick it up. Finally William Wenig, 11 years old, realized the predicament Tesdate was in and darted across the room and grasped the crutch as a weapon.

Sheep—Receipts, 30,000; market strong; native, $3.60@4.85; western, $3.75@4.85; yearlings, $4.65@6; native lambs, $4.75@7.50; western, $5@7.55.

Chicago Grain Markets.

Chicago, Oct. 17.—Lower cables today pulled support from under wheat. Peace with Italy acted against hard prices and there was less apprehension in regard to the Balkan situation. Heavy receipts northwest were also on the side of the bears. The opening was ½@1c down. December started at 93c to 93½c, the same change from last night as the market taken altogether. A decline to 92⅞c followed.

Railways at Minneapolis blockaded by arrivals of new wheat brought about an additional backset. The close was nervous with December 1⅜c net lower at 93⅜c.

Favorable weather had a depressing effect on corn. December opened ⅛@¼c to ⅛@⅜c off at 53⅛c to 53¼c, and sagged to 53@53⅛c.

Later the market rallied as a result of commission buying. The close was firm, ⅛@¼c net higher for December at 53⅜c.

Oats dropped, owing to lack of demand. December started ¼c to ⅛@⅜c lower, at 32⅜@32½c to 33¼c, and seemed disposed to keep within that range.

$12,000,000 Forgery.

London, Oct. 17.—A late Brussels dispatch to the Daily Mail tells of the discovery of forgery in railroad bonds amounting to more than $12,000,000. The affair will cause widespread ruin in Belgium, Paris and Lille. A large part of the investors were persons of small means and their entire wealth was wiped out. A stock broker who lost $200,000 by the forgeries committed suicide by shooting himself. The forged bonds were on the Ghent and Terneuzenrick, the only non-state line in Belgium.

BOSTON WINS WORLD'S SERIES

RED SOX TAKE TITLE IN TENTH INNING BY SCORE OF 3-2.

GIANTS GAME UNTIL END

Both Teams Played Wonderful Ball in Stirring Wind-Up of Country's Longest Series.

Boston, Oct. 17.—The Boston Red Sox, winners of the American League pennant for 1912, took the last game of the world's series by a score of 3-2. With this game goes the world's championship title in baseball.

Winning this game, the Boston Club gives their league one more world's pennant than has been won by the National League.

New York led 1 to 0 up to the seventh, when the Sox got busy and tied the score. In the tenth New York got one but Boston came to bat and dashed their hopes with two runs and a winning score.

Two striking pictures featured the preliminary incidents before the world's decisive battle game. On one side of the field McGraw, warming up Mathewson, Marquard and Ames, shifted from one to the other and on to third in his final inspection before launching his final selection on Mathewson, where everything swung upon the right man pitched. On the other side, Stahl warming up Wood. Bedient and Collins, watched with equal keenness the form shown before flashing his final choice of Bedient.

Boston, as usual, drifted on the field first, one by one, but to show the great confidence they felt, the Giant squad rushed on in a body—rushed at full speed, chanting the Boston battle hymn; which still remains the well-known "Tessie."

No more confident squad ever tripped through the gates of ball field. They went to work with a snap and dash, while the Redsox loosened up slowly without any dash, but with a noticeable grimness as if they meant to even up for those last two defeats by the most desperate playing they have shown all year.

Fight in Redsox Ranks.

The rumors still flying thick and fast about the scrap between Joe Wood and Buck O'Brien were confirmed. The two Redsox athletes undoubtedly mixed and exchanged wallops, showing the high, unnatural tension beneath which the team is laboring. For the Redsox undoubtedly were under a far greater strain than the Giants, which every advance move plainly showed.

All told, 270,000 people have paid $520,000 to see these eight battles and now that the entire series was banked and massed into one afternoon's work, the frenzy and mania of the occasion can be appreciated by every fan who thrills and throbs under ordinary incidents.

The attendance was far and away the smallest of the series. The crowd was probably about 20,000. Great patches of seats in the general admission section and in the reserved section were bare. The Boston club owners just before the game supplied the fans with "rattles" to be used to cheer on the Redsox. Ticket speculators outside the park offered reserved seats below cost prices.

Manager McGraw evidently was not satisfied with the stuff Marquard showed when he warmed up, and five minutes before the play started he sent a hurry-up call for Matty to work out at breakneck speed to be ready. Bedient showed far more speed than Wood as they warmed up together with Manager Stahl standing between them to pass judgment.

Umpires: O'Loughlin behind the bat, Rigler on the bases. Klem left foul line, Evans right foul line.

Bomb in Mails.

Chicago, Oct. 17.—Clerks in the Chicago postoffice discovered what is believed to be a dynamite bomb wrapped in a package and addressed to a man whose identity was not disclosed. The explosive was rolled in heavy cardboard with both ends sealed. Detectives were detailed to trace the sender of the package.

Storm Damage Not Heavy.

Corpus Christi, Oct. 17.—Beyond the washing out of railroad tracks and the demolishing of several small buildings, the storm which raged along the southwestern coast of Texas Tuesday night and Wednesday has caused no damage, so far as reports indicate. Tuesday night the wind reached a velocity of 52 miles an hour, but decreased Wednesday. At Brownsville, the maximum was 60 miles. Rain has fallen continuously for 48 hours.

Defalcation is $5,600,000.

Brussels, Oct. 17.—Defalcations already aggregating $5,600,000 and constantly increasing, have been unearthed in the offices of the Gand-Terneuzen railroad here through the accidental discovery of false share certificates among a small parcel recently sold.

Antiquarians Honor Taft.

Worcester, Mass., Oct. 17.—President Taft came to Worcester from New York to be the guest of the American Antiquarian society. He was made a member of the society.

VOTES FOR FEDERATION.

Crookston Votes for Federation. Same Thing Is Rejected in N. D.

Crookston.—As the result of three joint meetings of conference committees named by the Congregational and Presbyterian church, not a single vote was cast by the committees in opposition to a plan for a union of the two churches. By the plan proposed the two congregations are to be united as one Congregational church, the members of the Presbyterian church to be admitted by letter; the property of the Congregational church to be the property of the United church, and the property of the Presbyterian church to be disposed of in such manner as that church may designate. Upon the union of the two churches all the present officers of the Congregational church are to be chosen by the members of the united church.

Now that the plan for union has been adopted by the joint committee, the proposition will be submitted to the vote of each congregation and it is believed both denominations will be practically unanimous in approving the recommendation of the committee. When this is done, the necessary legal steps to perfect the union will be taken.

This is the first definite step to a church union in Crookston, the plan of last year to unite five or six of the protestant churches having been abandoned. It is believed that after the Congregational and Presbyterian churches have united others will join them.

State Ballot Is Rearranged.

St. Paul.—Acting on an opinion which he received from the state legal department Secretary of State Schmahl has revised the make-up of the state ballot by placing the candidates for chief justice and justice of the supreme court at the foot of the list. As first arranged they preceded candidates for railroad and warehouse commission. The change is made because of the non-partisan feature of the new election law. All other officers have a party designation and the removal of the judges serves to keep the party list intact.

Europe Wants Wheat.

Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce.—Very sensationally bullish cables greeted the domestic grain trade. Europe was visibly disturbed over the sinister developments in the near East. All markets were up from 1 to 3 cents a bushel and the strength held throughout their sessions. A large export business since last Friday in wheat and flour was reported and while the very large Northwestern receipts tended to check the full response but 1¼ cents advance was scored before the buying power began to lag behind the offers.

Lodge Ritual Changes Here.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Walter B. Richie of Lima, Ohio, George L. Lusk of Bay City, Mich., and George P. Tawney of Winona, Minn., members of the ritual committee, Knights of Pythias, were in Minneapolis preparing the revised ritual for the printer. Several slight changes were made, which required a meeting of the committee and reprinting. Mr. Richie has been identified with Ohio and national politics for many years. In 1889 and 1890 he became prominent by successfully managing the late Senator Brice's campaign.

Thrown Off of Bridge.

Mankato.—Enticed upon the Minnesota river bridge at midnight, robbed and then thrown over the bridge into the deepest part of the stream, is the story told to the police by Peter Ulmen, a farmer living near the city. Ulmen says there were three men in the gang, who had been drinking at various saloons. He managed to get out after sinking twice. One suspect has been arrested, but he denies any knowledge of the affair.

Stranger Killed on Track.

Detroit.—The mangled body of an unidentified man was found on the Northern Pacific tracks four miles west of here Sunday. A printer's apron and a few pieces of jewelry were found near the body. It is thought he fell from a train while stealing a ride.

Big Barn and Grain Burn.

Pipestone.—The barn on the George E. Millard farm, with nearly all of its contents, was destroyed by fire at a loss of nearly $5,600. Seventy-five tons of hay, 200 bushels of buckwheat, 4,000 bushels of oats and a large amount of farm machinery were destroyed.

South Bend Man Slashed With Razor.

Mankato.—Tom Moon is under arrest, charged with assault in the first degree upon Ernest Sorrell of South Bend. The quarrel was over something trivial, but resulted in Moon drawing a razor, according to witnesses, and slashing Sorrell across the face from his left eye back through the middle of his ear and down to his neck. The ear was cut in two. Sorrell lies in a hospital with forty-two stitches in his face, but it is thought the chances are good for his recovery.

SUSPECT IS HELD.

Police Capture Man With Safe-Blower's Outfit.

International Falls.—Chief of Police Christianson and Officers Lowess and Langdon of the local police force have made an important capture in the arrest of a man who gave his name as Lewis Williams of Superior, Wis.

He had in his possession a bottle of nitro-glycerine, two 38 caliber revolvers, a bunch of skeleton keys, an electric flash light, a book of postoffice money order blanks and a rubber dating stamp with the name Lengby on it.

He purchased an overcoat at Greengard's Clothing store and paid for it with a $47 money order on the Lengby office. He then bought drinks in the U. and H. saloon and paid for them with a $22 order and then went to the John Harrison saloon, where he paid for a drink with a $25 money order. Harrison got suspicious and had him shadowed to the Bancroft saloon where he was cashing a $22 money order.

The police were notified, and after a chase rounded him up. Going to his room they found a new suitcase which the alleged yeggman said belonged to his pal, Joe Devine, whom he left in Bemidji. Most of the things named were in his suitcase.

He says two of his pals, who are yeggmen by the name of Jes Foley and Chas. Roy, have started for Chicago. The postoffice authorities have been notified. It is believed that the prisoner is a bad man.

CAMPAIGN STATEMENTS.

State Progressive Committee Spends $1,690.

Minneapolis. — Statements of receipts and expeditures were filed with Secretary of State Julius A. Schmahl by the progressive and republican state central committees, in accordance with the provisions of the corrupt practices act.

During the last two weeks the progressives' committee has expended $1,690, and among the items enumerated are $96 to the Twin City Taxicab company, $30 to the Litchfield Auto company, and $20 to Hugh T. Halbert. The receipts in the same period were $1,292, of which $1,000 was contributed by the national progressive committee; S. M. Buck of Faribault and M. S. Stevens of Graceville gave $50 each, and C. S. Koehler of Winona is stated to have contributed $49.

P. V. Collins, progressive candidate for governor, has spent $243.50 in the last two weeks, of which $156 was for printing. He furnished $193.50 himself and P. L. A. Ferguson contributed $50.

Hugh T. Halbert, progressive candidate for congress in the fourth district, has spent $22 in the same period, all contributed by himself.

The republican state committee's statement mentions expenditures aggregating $920, and the only receipts listed are $100 from Lyndon A. Smith and $25 from C. C. Andrews.

Moorhead Has New Ordinances.

Moorhead.—The city council passed an ordinance allowing the Tri-State Telegraph & Telephone company the right to string wires and cables along certain streets and alleys for its long distance service exclusively. An ordinance was passed also, providing for the licensing and governing of motor vehicles used for the transportation of passengers. Another ordinance passed provides for the licensing of theaters, moving picture shows and kindred amusements. The theaters fee is $25 a year.

3 Killed; 3 Injured.

Minneapolis.—Three persons were killed and three more were injured in a series of accidents in the Twin Cities. Those killed were: Martin Sather, electrocuted while working on the new Columbia Heights reservoir; Louis Wolf, struck by a switch engine at Twenty-fifth avenue and Second street, and Micholas Gordoneff, buried in a cave-in, while working in a sewer in Blair and Hamline avenues, St. Paul.

Norman Fair Closes; Manahan Talks.

Ada. — The Norman county fair closed with a good attendance. James Manahan was the principal speaker. There was an excellent exhibit of farm products, including one from the agricultural college in Crookston, and a ballon assension each day. The weather was a little cool but this did not seem to affect materially, the size of the crowds. Some good prizes were awarded.

Physician Jailed.

Minneapolis.—Charged with fleecing a patient by falsely diagnosing his case and administering colored water for medicine, charging a high fee, Dr. Ernest R. Taylor was arraigned before Police Judge J. W. Finehout in St. Paul and pleaded not guilty. His hearing was set for Monday and he was freed on $5,000 bail furnished by Minneapolis friends. He had already spent a night in jail, following his arrest by Detective T. P. Gleason. The charge was brought by Harold A. Weld, his former assistant.

GUADALAJARA'S DOOM is NEAR

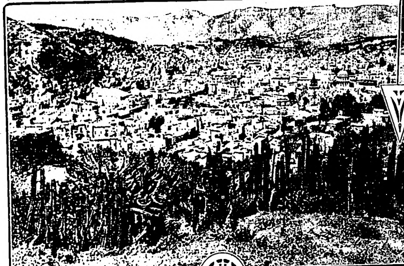
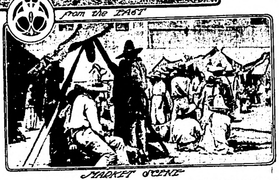
STREET SCENE



GUADALAJARA



MARKET SCENE

BECAUSE the crater of a boiling, seething volcano is directly beneath this city of 150,000 souls, in all probability Guadalajara, which is the state capital of Jalisco, will be moved to a point some distance from what scientists say is to be one of the most active volcanoes on the entire American continent. The subterranean volcano has caused 340 earthquakes in the last three months. Twice, once in July and once in August, the shocks became so heavy that they practically depopulated the city for nearly a week on each occasion.

Seven scientists headed by Prof. Ramon Leon of the seismographic branch of the National Observatory have just finished a report on the quakes and their causes. They declare that Guadalajara, with its 150,000 inhabitants, is built in the crater of a giant volcano which was active about 1,800 years ago. Below the city, they add, is the center of this crater, in which a new crater has formed, likely to break out at any time.

They warn the residents of Guadalajara that beneath them is an enormous caldron of molten stone and burning coal and sulphur combined with gases which come from still further down in the bowls of the earth. The report urges that the city be moved, or that at least the inhabitants abandon it immediately. The center of the crater is located a trifle west of the main plaza and practically under the state palace, or capitol of the state of Jalisco.

Scientific measurements, soundings with a diamond drill and experiments with the gases which have been pouring through cracks in the earth in the city are given, with detailed results of the study. Professor Leon and his associates deduce that as surely as science can forecast the city will be destroyed by this buried crater, which they say is enormous, though they admit that they cannot with accuracy foretell when the volcano will burst forth.

They infer that the destruction will come within a year, for they say that the volcano, whose caldron is placed 300 feet below the surface of the earth, is what is known as ripe for the explosion. The report goes on to say that this is the first instance in the history of the world in which a city has been located over the crater of a volcano and that the heat from the buried bowl of fire accounts for the warm climate of Guadalajara, which, while 5,000 feet above the sea, has the temperature all the year round of a coastal resort, with practically no change between summer and winter.

Increasing heat noticed in this part of Jalisco for the past year and recorded by the local branch of the government weather bureau first gave Professor Leon the idea that subterranean fires were responsible for the climate. Then came the earthquakes, the opening of fissures in the main streets of the capital of the state, and the escape of large volumes of sulphur laden gases from these fissures.

Fullest publicity is being given to the report here, and government officials are seriously considering the removal of the capital to Juanacatlan on the Santiago river.

The removal will follow the taking away of all the government papers, which have been transferred to Mexico City already. The state palace or capitol in Guadalajara is one of the largest and most beautiful of all the buildings of its kind in Mexico and cost approximately 7,000,000 pesos. It fronts on the main plaza or public square and occupies one entire end, being nearly three hundred yards in length.

Guaralajara is the second city in the republic, ranking next to Mexico City in population and above it in wealth, being second only to Merida, Yucatan, in this respect. It is the market place of two of the richest states in Mexico, Jalisco and Michoacan, and is commonly called "the Pearl of the Occident," while the surrounding territory is known as the granary of Mexico.

For these reasons the people who live here are loath to leave the city. The Catholic church will be especially hard hit if the removal idea is carried out. The cathedral, which is one of the finest in Mexico, contains more gold and silver ornaments than any other church save the cathedral of Puebla, and has in addition the distinction of having been completed in 1618 and of having been almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1750. It was severely shaken in 1518, and cracked in three places by the first series of the 310 quakes of the past three months, in June, 1912. The towers are 200 feet high, Byzantine in construction and the structure occupies one of the most valuable pieces of land in Guadalajara.

The most precious art possession of the entire republic is contained in the sacristy of the cathedral. It is Murillo's painting of the "Assumption of the Virgin," and it hangs directly above the entrance. In point of color and freshness this painting is better than any Murillo now known to the art world of Europe or America, while the work is one of the best examples of the famous master.

The beauty of this canvas has attracted thousands, and not a few offers have been made to purchase it, one of $250,000 coming from a New York financier. Seven times thieves have attempted to cut it from its frame, but each time they were foiled by the vigilance of the priests. Four of the would-be robbers were captured and are now serving terms or have died in the prisons of Jalisco.

In June, 1818, when the cathedral was nearly destroyed, the section of wall on which this painting is fastened stood through all the quake. In June, 1912, when a crack more than a foot wide was opened in the top of the wall above this painting the gash ran downward almost to the end of the mahogany frame and then divided into two cracks or fissures, encircling the canvas, but never touching it. The Indians believe, and the priests aid them in this belief, that nothing can harm "la santissima Virgen de Guadalajara," and so far the terrific tremblers have failed to injure it in the least.

The canvas was given to the Guadalajara diocese by the king of Spain shortly after the Peninsular war as a mark of gratitude for the large sums of money turned over to the crown by this branch of the church in Mexico and it was hidden ten years in a niche in the cathedral to keep it from the French at the time of the occupation of Mexico.

"The top of the bowl of the crater beneath Guadalajara," said Professor Garcia while here, "is approximately 1,500 feet in diameter, but the actual bowl is much wider. I should say it is a quarter of a mile in width, and how deep no man can say.

"The composition of the escaping gases indicates that they are coming from burning coal and sulphur in a molten state, precisely the combination which causes the eruptions of Mount Colima, the only active volcano on the North American continent, about 90 miles due south of Guadalajara. Undoubtedly Colima, which blows off in a regular eruption about the middle of every September, is connected in some unknown manner with the hot springs, miniature geysers and many dead volcanoes which cover the territory reaching from the southern end of the Sierra Nayarit, about 60 miles north of Guadalajara, to the sea at Manzanillo.

"I would not care to prophesy, but I believe that the annual fall eruption of Colima will see some sort of disturbance here, though it may be only heavy earthquakes and not the breaking out of the volcano. We ran diamond drills so deep into the earth in the center of Guadalajara that they came back almost red hot, no matter how slowly we operated them. We lowered the best thermometers into the holes made by these drills and they recorded heat beyond the melting point of lead.

"We analyzed the gases coming from the fissures in various parts of the city and we found that they were not surface gases, coming from pockets in the earth and released by the earthquake, but that they exhibited all the characteristics of gases which have been taken from the vents of Colima and Popocatepetl volcanoes.

"Lastly we traced the scores of earthquake shocks which were felt here during the ten days of our stay and we found that every one was volcanic in its origin and not caused by the slipping of faults in the earth, as are some of the coastal quakes of this country and the United States. All were trepidatory, that is to say, up and down quakes, usually local in character and not oscillatory, as are most earthquakes which extend over a large section of the world's surface.

"This was our first hint that the quakes were volcanic—the confined area over which the tremors were felt. Then the seismograph, which was brought here from Mexico City and set up, indicated with its needle finger that the source of the shocks were almost beneath the city.

"We knew the quakes were volcanic and confined to an area not more than 100 miles in diameter. Neither Colima nor any other volcano in Mexico was in eruption. We had to look closer to Guadalajara for the cause. We made a trip through the surrounding country and discovered that the city lies in the center of what was once a volcano.

"The walls of this ancient crater are fully 15 miles on all sides from the city. From the character of the stone composing these walls, their evidences of fire and the condition of the lava fragments which litter the bowl of the crater, I should say it was last active from 1,800 to 2,000 years ago.

"The mountain range which surrounds the city on all sides is the wall of this ancient crater. On the north and east, you know, the plateau of Mexico slopes downward to these ranges; on the west and south the ancient volcano wall slopes away 5,000 feet downward through some 70 or 80 miles to the Pacific ocean. This was an ideal location for a volcano, and precisely similar to the location of Colima, still active, and Orizaba, which, while still smoking, has not been active for 400 years.

"Now, in the center of this ancient crater, which must have been larger than any volcano of which we have knowledge at the present day, was the blow hole, or vent. Over this blow hole the Spaniards who conquered Mexico set up the city of Guadalajara, little thinking that they were selecting a veritable death trap for their settlement. Slowly through the eighteen or twenty centuries since it was last active this central melting pot of the old volcano has been forming a new and equally powerful mass of molten material, which sooner or later will blow Guadalajara off the face of the earth.

"An earthquake, landslides, cloudbursts or other elemental disturbances filled the opening of this ancient crater with a cap 300 feet in thickness. This cap, much thicker than that which any other volcano has had to blow off, is the only thing that has saved Guadalajara from destruction years ago. How long it will protect the city now is a question no man can answer and prove the answer. It may be years; to my mind it is a matter of months; in any event, I believe that the only way to save the capital is to move it bodily and move it while there is time to do so."

Aside from its scientific interest, and from the unique situation of a city built on a volcano, there remains the very practical problem which confronts Guadalajara—the job of moving a city of 150,000 souls to a new location. So far, Juanacatlan is the most likely candidate for the honor of being the capital of Jalisco, but there are a number of other towns out of range of the buried crater, all of which will be considered before the change is made.

All sorts of wild propositions to tap the crater and draw off the menacing fires have been made to the authorities of Guadalajara, but the men of science say there is no way to curb the demon of fire caged by nature below and that the city must be removed or it will be destroyed. One man proposed to turn the waters of the Santiago river into a huge tunnel, driven to the heart of the crater, but the earthquake specialists quickly informed the city officials that this merely would cause an immediate and more terrible explosion than if the crater were left to itself.

Another man offered to tunnel into the crater from a point five miles outside the city, and on the slightly lower or western side, and let the contents of the crater flow out. He was disappointed when informed that his tunnel would have to be about 500 feet in diameter and that the heat would be so great a hundred feet from the inner end of the tunnel that human beings could not endure it.

Thus it appears that unless a "surgeon for earthquakes" appears, and that very shortly, Guadalajara will have to pick up her houses and move to a new location. The result to real estate owners and men who have bought or built some of the fine blocks which mark the main streets of the Jalisco capital will be financial ruin.

Some of these men profess to doubt the word of the scientists and to believe that the city is safe. They will throw their influence and their votes against moving the city unless they can be convinced that there is a very real personal danger for themselves and their families.

PATERNAL WISDOM.

"Son, are you really determined to get married?"

"Yes, father."

"And you feel that you can support a wife?"

"Oh, yes."

"Well, just remember that the dictonary says 'to support' also means 'to endure.'"

WHO'S WHO and Why

WHEN ITALY'S KING AND QUEEN PLAY

During their past summer vacation, the king and queen of Italy were more in the public eye than ever, owing to the war. They are at present at their estate of San Rossore, near Pisa, whence they frequently go to visit hospitals to see wounded soldiers from Africa, to review troops, and take part in other functions on which the heart of the nation is now concentrated.

The royal yacht Yela is in constant demand, and the king and queen generally take their small family of four along, as they are all excellent sailors. Princess Yolanda, who is quite a photographer, has been devoting herself principally to sea views. The privacy with which the king always moves gives rise to many piquant incidents. For a ruler who goes about in his own kingdom as much as Victor Emanual III does, he is not known to many officials.

The Yela put in Spezia recently, and was boarded by the harbor-master. Princess Yolanda was about to take a snapshot of him, when he exclaimed: "It is against the rules; you cannot take photographs; you had better give me the machine." The princess, too young to stand on her dignity, burst into tears and gave up the camera, when the king appeared on deck. Even then the official did not know with whom he had to do, and was about to speak, when one of the officers came forward and said: "His majesty." The man, who was speechless with embarrassment, was relieved by a laugh from the queen, who proposed that he should give Princess Yolanda back her camera and that he should stand up and have his photograph taken. The princess later sent him a copy which did credit to her skill.

On another occasion the king was not allowed to land until after the usual inspection, and as under such circumstances he never reveals himself and never insists, it was some time before the official knew that he had been refusing passage to his sovereign.

ESTRADA SAYS NICARAGUA PLUNDERED

"Zelaya's government plundered Nicaragua so shamelessly that in spite of its inexhaustible natural resources our country is bankrupt. Neither the state nor private citizens have at their command the capital necessary to develop Nicaragua. When I overthrew by the force of arms the Zelaya clique I hoped that peace would finally reign in my country. General Mena has shattered my hopes. I know now that we should no longer jeopard our future by a silly pride in our anarchistic independence. Some larger nation must help us out, and if the United States cannot do it, who can?"

According to Gen. Juan Estrada, former president of Nicaragua, such is the present situation. The general is now in this country and is living in Brooklyn at the Hotel St. George with his political associate, General Moncada.

The ex-president is a strikingly handsome, powerful and impressive man of forty-five, with large flashing eyes, an olive complexion and blue-black hair. His clear-cut sentences, his rare but forceful gestures, reveal the man of action. General Moncada, shorter in stature, gray-haired, softer in speech, gives an impression of polish, culture and statesmanlike ability.

"Revolutions," General Estrada said, "can no longer help us. I personally thought for a long while that petty tyrants could be done away with through popular revolt. I know better now. I led the army against Zelaya and after establishing peace in the land turned over my authority to a splendid man, Adolfo Diaz.

"For years the civil power had been usurped by military chieftains, and therefore when I resigned the presidency in favor of Diaz I insisted that General Mena and General Chamorro should declare before witnesses their willingnss to support the new president and to abstain henceforth from interference in political affairs.

"'Let Adolfo take the presidency,' General Mena said, and turning to General Chamorra he added: 'You and I, Emiliana, better keep our hands off.'

"You know how Mena has kept his word. The revolution of Bluefields was useless. We got rid of Zelaya, but we now have saddled ourselves with Mena."

RENOUNCES WORLD FOR MISSION WORK

William H. Borden, young Chicago millionaire, was ordained a minister of the gospel the other night at Moody church. He has sacrificed all other ambitions to his desire to become a minister and devote his life to work in the Chinese missionary field.

Mr. Bordon is a graduate of Yale university and Princeton theological seminary. Although still a young man, he has devoted many years of his life and a great deal of his wealth to church work. He is a son of the late W. B. Borden and a brother of John Borden.

While Mr. Borden was attending Yale university he founded the Hope mission in New Haven, a rescue home for "down-and-outs," and denoated the building and equipment, at a personal cost of more than $20,000. Since his departure from the university the work in the mission is being carried on by other men in college.

Mr. Borden has long intended to gratify his lifelong desire to serve as a missionary in China. At the solicitation of the Student Missionary Volunteer association he will spend the winter visiting the colleges of the country and making addresses to the students on the subject of Christianity.

His tour of the colleges will begin in New York and will extend from coast to coast.

DECLARES WARS SOON BE ABOLISHED

In an address on "The Natural Forces in America Working Toward International Peace" before the International Peace Congress at Geneva, Switzerland, Mrs. Elmer Black, chairman of the propaganda committee of the American Peace and Arbitration league, declared that war as a means of settling differences between nations will soon be abolished. She said that there were certain invincible forces working toward this end, with little noise, but with irresistible power.

Using conditions in America as an example, she said in part:

"There are certain great natural forces working in America toward the final consummation of world peace. These natural forces are developing the processes of social and economic evolution through which we are working out our part in the world's destiny.

"First among these I place the remarkable awakening of our people to the general subject of conservation. We are unquestionably alive to the importance of conserving our material and human resources, and this is a condition opposed to war.

TO HAVE INDIVIDUAL CUPS

Boston Has Planned the First Sanitary Drinking Place for Horses in World.

Boston.—In the new drinking fountain to be erected in Postoffice square to the memory of George T. Angell this city, it is believed, will have the first watering trough in the world with specially constructed individual drinking cups for horses. Of the $5,000 which its erection will cost, $647.77 was contributed by school children of the city, who gave one cent each.

There will be sixteen individual drinking cups so arranged that they will cleanse themselves after each horse has finished drinking. The water will be running into each cup constantly. It is expected each horse will drink practically all the water in the cup, then before the next horse arrives the cup will fill and overflow. This will carry off all the foam and any dangerous germs the first horse may have left in the cup. There is no connection between the cups. It is believed this latest plan in sanitary drinking fountains for horses will do much toward preventing diseases which are spread through watering troughs.

The fountain is of artistic design, the main basin being sixteen feet in diameter. At the base will be watering places for dogs.

SHELL TO BLIND BANDITS

French Commission Proposes Unique Weapon That Is Highly Regarded.

Paris, France.—The warlike destruction of the Paris bandits several months ago, when a small army was necessary to defeat and kill several terrorists who had turned a house into a fortress, induced the police to evolve some instrument which would protect them from the bullets of similar bandits in the future. The result was the manufacture of a powerful shield designed to protect the policeman's body in case of future conflicts.

M. Lepine, the prefect of police, likewise appointed a commission to study other means of defense and offense in coping with the new type of modern criminal. The commission has proposed a sort of shell, weighing about a pound, which, by a special apparatus, emits a powerful gas which momentarily blinds the bandits and makes effective fighting on their part impossible. Experiments with the new projectile were entirely successful, and the deadly gas shell has taken its place among the instruments of police attack.

'IT'S TWINS;' 'TRIPLETS HERE'

Twin Brothers Exchange Congratulations on Additions to Respective Families.

Fitzgerald, Ga.—"Hello, Eli!" called Eli Vickers' brother over the 'phone. "It's twins." "Shucks," replied Eli, "we have triplets at our house, one boy and two girls."

These two men live in Coffee county and are twin brothers, with twenty more brothers and sisters, children of "Old Jack Vickers," of the same county, who was married twice and had eleven children by each wife.

Eli and his brother were children of the first marriage. Although there are other twins in the Vickers family, these are the first in the families of these brothers, but not the first children.

PAYS PENALTY FOR JOKE

Man Who Caused Friend's Death by Turning Compressed Air Hose on Him Is Punished.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Warren House, who caused the death of Valentine Lukowski, a fellow workman, a few months ago, while playing a practical joke, will begin at once the serving of an unusual sentence imposed by Justice Marcus in the state supreme court here.

The sentence places House in charge of a probation officer for an indefinite period and compels him to pay $3 a week toward the support of the family of the dead man until the children are able to support their mother. It is estimated the fine will cover a period of about ten years, amounting in all to more than $1,500.

House turned a compressed air hose on Lukowski in fun. The pressure was so great that Lukowski was instantly killed.

Girl's Tongue Sewed On.

Jersey City.—Five-year-old Elsie Jewul of Culver's Lake, this state, bit almost an inch of her tongue off when she fell from a landing into a boat. Her powers of speech, however, will not be impaired, as Dr. Edward A. Ayers sewed the severed parts on again.

Bulldog No Match for Cat.

Venice, Cal.—Tiger, a large Angora cat owned by Mrs. Harry Harry Lindley, attacked and killed a full-blooded English bulldog. The dog opened the battle, which lasted less than two minutes, when the bulldog fell with a severed jugular vein.

Fed the Cats.

San Bernardino, Cal.—Joseph Watkins, a miner, while in jail got to thinking of his cats not being fed, so he broke jail and fed them, and then returned and gave himself up.

Vending Devices in Germany

Automatic devices of every description have supplanted small tradesmen and little shops to a great extent in Germany. Germany might almost be called the "land of the automat." Furthermore, these devices are popular. At all postoffices, stamps and post cards are sold by automatic machines; at the railway stations, platform tickets and suburban tickets are sold by automats; automat restaurants, where one can secure a glass of beer, wine, or liquor, a sandwich, square meal, cup of coffee, chocolate, etc., by dropping a coin in the slot, abound everywhere. Every city of 15,000 or 20,000 population and over has from one to several hundred such restaurants. At railway stations automats sell chocolate, candy, picture post cards, and even a little kit of "first aid to the injured," containing a few drops of pain killer, bandages, needle, thread, etc. Ten pfennigs in a slot opens the doors of toilet compartments, delivering a towel or piece of soap. A coin in a slot obtains a cigar, a tune from a mechanical music box, a pair of shoestrings, a collar button, a visiting card, name plate for suitcase, tells one's fortune or weight, etc.

I could never draw the line between meanness and dishonesty. What is mean always grades into dishonesty. —G. MacDonald.

"Yes."

"How useless?"

"Oh, about as useless as a lemon seed in a glass of iced tea."

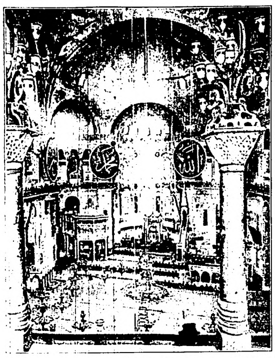
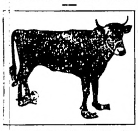
OUT OF THE ORDINARY

In the Mosque of St. Sophia



This is one of the very few photographs ever taken of the interior of a Mohammedan mosque. It shows the Turks at their noon worship in the mosque of St. Sophia, the beautiful building in Constantinople which is in danger of collapse owing to the damage caused by recent earthquakes. The dome of the mosque is supported by four arches, which in turn are supported by 107 gigantic and beautiful pillars of green marble and red porphyry, with capitals in the Byzantine style. It is believed that in the vaults under the church there lie superb treasures of classical art thrown there by Ottomans when they conquered Constantinople.

COW WITH FREAKISH HOOFS



A. G. Davis of Dennysville, Me., owns the "freak cow here pictured. The animal has four hoofs, each one of which is no less than twenty-two inches in length, and so badly twisted and contorted that the animal can only walk with difficulty. When a calf she developed ungainly hoofs, which grew as she became older; and, though the horny growth was frequently pared away, it returned again and again, until at last the owner gave up trying to effect any improvement in the creature's anatomy, and began to take her round to local fairs and exhibit her as a curiosity. The hoofs are of a deep green color, and closely resemble a lobster in conformation.

SOME USES FOR SAWDUST

In its finer forms sawdust is made of perhaps fifty different woods, and in varying degrees of fineness, to be used for a wide variety of purposes. But sawdust in all its forms, coarse and fine, has many uses, and common sawdust is sold in enormous quantities.

The sawdust familiar to everybody is that which is gathered from lumber mills and mills in which lumber is resawed in manufacturing. This common sawdust is used extensively on floors to take up dampness in sweeping, and it is used for packing bottled goods and for bedding horses, and in ice houses. Some sawdusts are screened at the mills to remove chips and sticks.

Sawdust combined with oil is put up in packages for use in sweeping carpets, in place of the old-time scattered tea leaves. Sawdust from various non-resinous woods is used in great quantities in the smoking of meats, and sawdust in the form of pulp is used in the manufacture of dynamite.

Sawdusts of various kinds and colors are now used, combined with cement in making floors, especially in hospitals. Such floors, made with the material in a plastic condition, can be laid in a single piece, without cracks or joints, and so made germ proof, and they are more silent and easier to the tread than tile.

Among the better kinds of sawdust some are used for curious common purposes, as, for instance, one of the uses for Spanish cedar sawdust, which is very light, is for packing even cheap chemicals contained in glass shipped over long distances, and where weight would count in the freight cost.

Manufactured satinwood sawdust is used in the preparation of pastel boards for drawing purposes. Sawdust of briarwood is reworked for some special uses. Lignum vitae is put to some chemical uses.

The heaviest sawdust is that of ebony, and this sawdust is black in color, though even in the ebony sawdust there are traces of tiny white fibers. The ebony is not a large tree and its wood is not black through; its sapwood is white; it is particles of this sapwood that appear in the sawdust, mingled in the sawing. But to the eye except on close inspection the ebony sawdust appears black.

The whitest of all sawdusts is that of holly, which is manufactured into a very fine pulp form. This holly sawdust is used for floor material and also in the manufacture of some grades of wall paper.

There is a manufactured sawdust called lemon sawdust, which is not made from the wood of the lemon tree, but which is in tint of a clear, bright lemon color, this lemon sawdust being used for the same purposes as satinwood.

Manufactured rosewood sawdust is of limited use; various mahogany sawdusts, including white, are used more extensively for various purposes; that of a wood called vermilion, which is a bright red mahogany from the East Indies, is used in making composition floors, sometimes for color squares, in cases where such floors are not laid in a continuous, unbroken piece.

AGED TORTOISE TAKES TRIP

At the age of two hundred, or thereabouts, a tortoise belonging to the duke of Beaufort decided this year to take a summer holiday. It was missed in July from the duke's Forest of Wentworth, near Chepstow, Monmouthshire, and has been found at Newport, in the same county. The tortor had walked to the outskirts of Newport—eight or nine miles—and then had been picked up and carried into the town. The age of the duke's tortoise is given "approximately" by the forest rangers, but it has hibernated under a particular rock in the forest for thirty years, and its great age is inferred from its size and weight. It is eighteen inches long and weighs ten pounds. There is nothing unusual in such longevity; a patriarch in the "Zoo," known as Methuselah, died three years ago at the reputed age of two hundred and fifty.

SURVIVED TERRIBLE STORM.

King Alfonso of Spain, the other day received in audience a fisherman named Escurra, the skipper of a smack from Lequicitio, near Bilbao, who survived the recent catastrophe to the fishing fleet on the northern coast of Spain. Escurra clung to the mast for two days and three nights in the midst of a terrible sea, and saw all his comrades gradually drop off and perish. Escurra himself believed he was doomed, when a steamer picked him up. The king listened to the mariner's terrible story with sympathy.

HOW SOME PEOPLE SLEEP

The Japanese stretches himself on a rush mat on the floor and puts a hard square block of wood under his head.

Chinese beds are very low, scarcely rising from the floor, but are often carved exquisitely of wood.

The inhabitants of the tropics often curl themselves up like monkeys at the lower angle of a suspended hammock and sleep very soundly that way.

The Russian likes no sleeping place so well as the top of the big soapstone stove in his dwelling. Crawling out of his blistering bed in the morning, he delights in taking a plunge in a cold stream, even if he has to break through the ice to do so.

In Lapland the native crawls, head and all, into a bag made of reindeer skin and sleeps warm and comfortable within it.

The East Indian, at the other end of the world, also has a sleeping bag. Its purpose is to keep out the mosquitoes rather than to keep its occupant warm.

AGES THAT ANIMALS ATTAIN

Undoubtedly the longest lived animal on earth is the whale, its span of existence being estimated by Cuvier at 1,000 years. The next largest animal, the elephant, will, under favorable conditions, live 400 years.'

The average age of cats is 15 years; of squirrels, 7 or 8 years; of rabbits, 7; a bear rarely exceeds 20 years; a wolf, 20; a fox, 14 to 16. Lions are comparatively long lived, instances having been recorded where they reached the age of 70 years.

Pigs have been known to live to the age of 20 years, and horses to 60, but the average age of the horse is 25 to 30. Camels sometimes live to the age of 100.

Eagles occasionally and ravens frequently reach the age of 100 years, and swans have been known to live 300 years. A tortoise has been known to live 107 years.

NOVELTY IN TOMBTONES

The accompanying photograph, taken in a churchyard in Essex, England, shows a novelty in the way of tombstones. Framed in the stone, it will be noticed, is a photograph, a representation of the person buried in the grave. The print, a bromide apparently, is well preserved, despite its twenty years of exposure to the sunlight. It is closely sealed from the weather, covered in front by glass and framed round with a border of slate. The photograph bears the signature of the occupant of the grave.

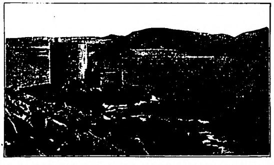
HEARSE LOSES THE CORPSE

During a funeral procession at Shamokin, Pa., the doors of the hearse carrying the body of Miss Anna Suculoski burst open and precipitated the casket into the street. A rear cab driver discovered the accident and stopped the procession. The casket, although unopened, was discolored by the dirt from the street, and the body had to be rearranged at the cemetery before burial could be made.

PHOSPHORESCENT SEA NOTED

A phosphorescent sea, a phenomenon often visible in the tropics, but rarely seen in this latitude, was noted all along the New Jersey coast recently. The gleam cast a circle of light above the water and reached far up the shore. As the breakers came in their crests broke in a shower of dull-glowing fire, and the air far inshore was filled with a peculiar odor.

Cromwell's Castle, Trescoe



Cromwell's Castle, here shown, is situated on the island of Trescoe in the Isles of Sicily. As its name suggests, it was built in the time of Cromwell, and even after all these years it is in excellent repair. Most of the material for building was taken from another castle, which stood on the top of the hill above it, and belonged to the royalists, and was called Charles' castle. Cromwell's castle stands about sixty feet high, with walls twelve feet thick and raised on arches. The roof is bomb-proof and flat, and was armed with a battery of nine-pounders. On the top there is a parapet wall, and at the base (next to the sea) is a stone platform, which was also armed. Standing out a little way in the harbor (on the right of the castle in the photograph) is a small rocky island called Hangman's island, where he parliamentary forces executed their royalist prisoners.

TWO SAMPLES OF THE FRAUDULENT DEVICE KNOWN AS "THE SHRINKER"

MAGAZINES and newspapers have given much space in late years to the question of weights and measures, which has resulted in the passage of legislation in many states putting the supervision of this particular branch of work under a defined department of state government.

There are numerous ways of cheating in the use of scales, regardless of the size or make. The art of scale building has advanced rapidly in the last quarter century, but investigation by various departments of weights and measures, both national and state, has disclosed the fact that the inventive minds of those whose unfortunate mental arrangement leads them to defraud their fellow men, has kept pace with this advance.

The most astounding fraud ever perpetrated was that of the famous sugar trust fraud, in which the United States government was robbed of many millions in import tax duty, by the use of a small piece of umbrella steel to throw the scales out of balance. But with most cases of deception, the perpetrator becomes over confident, and through carelessness leaves a slight clue, which eventually leads to discovery.

Rubber bands have been employed to throw scales off correct balance, but as these are hard to apply they are not so commonly used.

A common method of cheating is to overload the scale counter weights with lead and throw the balance to the credit of the scale owner.

But the most pernicious and ingenious of these is a device recently discovered by the department of weights and measures which is under the jurisdiction of the railroad and warehouse commission of Minnesota.

This is a small piece of tempered steel weighing 1-32 of an ounce, and is used in scales for the purpose of adding to or shrinking the weight of an article. It can be carried in the vest pocket and placed in position on the scale in a few seconds. It has the advantage to the user of being reversible, that is to say, he can take more in buying or give less in selling, than the just and proper weight. The device is in the nature of a false knife-edge or pivot. It has a small projection on one side, which when applied to a scale with the projection towards the back end of the scale beam the effect will be to make a load weigh less than correct, and the reverse is true when applied with the projection toward the front end of the scale beam.

These devices are made so that the use of them on a scale does not affect the beam action whereby an observer could tell that the scale was not weighing correctly, as they allow the beam free action.

The percentage of error in the use of this device would differ, depending upon the make of scale and the multiplying power of the scale beam. All scale beams have not the same measurements, and on one scale the effect was 2½ per cent either in excess or deficiency, depending upon how the device was placed, and on another scale the effect was 5 per cent either way. On some of the new type stock scales with full capacity beams, having no counterweights, the effect would easily be 10 per cent of the load.

These figures are based upon the assumption that the scale would be put into perfect balance after the device was inserted, but if by neglect or desire the scale should not be balanced after the device was put under the fulcrum pivot of the beam, the effect would be to give a false weight of about 200 pounds on any size load in addition to the 2½, 5, or 10 per cent as the case might be.

If one of these devices were used on a scale beam for fraudulent purposes, it would undoubtedly be inserted in the loop from the rear of the beam, and thus could not be seen from the position in which one stands to do the weighing, hence the necessity of looking into the beam loops from the rear of the beam to prove that such a device is not being used.

At a large stock shipping point in Minnesota many complaints had been received relative to the weights over a certain stock scale. On investigation of the scale it was discovered that one of these "shrinkers" was in use. The commission immediately started its special agent out to trace it up. The remarkable part of the investigation is that in the endeavor to find the origin of this device, the trail led through the states of Minnesota, Iowa, Illinois, South Dakota and Wisconsin, and going on the old theory, "where there is much smoke there must be some fire," it is safe to assume that when continual rumors of "shrinkers" were prevalent, the shrinker device must have been doing some shrinking, and in the case of this particular form of shrinker, which could be used on heavy scales, such as stock scales and grain scales, it has been the farmer and producer who were the victims.

The evidence obtained by the agent of the Minnesota commission disclosed the fact that the man who had made these devices had procured from $8 to $75 each for them.

The following precautions will be of assistance in helping to detect these, or similar fraudulent devices and prevent the seller of any commodity which may be weighed over a scale from being victimized:

1. See that a scale is in perfect balance before any weighing is done.

2. See that scale beam swings freely, that is, without a stiff jerking motion.

3. See that there is ample clearance about the scale platform, if it is a wagon, stock or dump scale.

At Booth's First Meeting

Old Londoner Tells of the Beginning of Real Work of the Salvation Army.

Standing at the salute by a big tombstone in Abney Park cemetery was an old soldier of the Salvation Army. As the procession filed past him General and Mrs. Bramwell Booth gave him a glance of kindly recognition.

The old man, who is seventy-five years of age, and named Peter Monks, was the late general's first convert in London.

One day nearly fifty years ago, before William Booth had started any mission work, he was walking down a squalid little back street near the London docks when he met Peter Monks outside a notorious drinking house.

"The general came up and spoke to me," said Monks to the Daily Mirror, "no doubt because I looked the bad character that I was then.

"'I am looking for work,' he said to me. He went on to say that he had left a congregation just before, 'because,' he said, 'they thought more about me than him.'

"Presently Booth told me he was going to try to hold a meeting on the Mile End Waste—a most daring thing to do in those times—and he asked me to come to it.

"I said I would, wondering what had come over me.

"I went down to the meeting at the Mile End Waste, and found that some of the worst characters from Spitalfields and Whitechapel had gathered round Booth's rough platform and were giving him a very bad time, throwing cabbage stumps and dirt at him.

"Something seemed to 'rise up' in me, and instead of joining in the horseplay, as I usually did, I clenched my fists and simply 'walked round' the crowd.

"The lads knew who I was—I had a bit of reputation as a boxer in those days—and surprised by my taking up the preacher's side and from fear of my fists, they became quiet, and Booth got a hearing, for which he thanked me many times.

"I did not become actually converted for some time, but I went to all the meetings and helped to keep order. When the Salvation Army was finally formed I joined."—London Daily Mirror.

COMBINATION NEW TO HIM

"Lemonade and Ladies" Was Something the Veteran Politician Never Had Heard of.

"Lemonade and ladies!" A certain veteran politician laughed derisively as he read those words on a card this morning.

"Say, Bob," he said, "what kind of a way is this to run a campaign? Seen this card? It's a notice of the Tenth ward Progressive club's meeting tonight at Posey's hall, and it gives a special invitation to the ladies to attend and says ice cold lemonade will be served free. Did you ever hear anything like that, Bob?

"Lemonade and ladies! That ain't no way to run a campaign. Say, how many votes can these ladies cast? I guess I've had as much practical experience in politics as any man and I'll tell you these Progressive guys ain't going to get very far with their lemonade and ladies. It won't go."

However, despite the warnings of the professional politicians, the Tenth ward Progressive club will serve lemonade at the mass meeting tonight. It is according to the new order of things. If any of the "boys" attend they will be welcome.—Kansas City Star.

Gloves and Thimbles.

"One of the hardest things for shoppers to learn is that the size of gloves and thimbles do not coincide," said a salesman. "If the woman who wears a No. 6 glove asks her husband to buy a thimble for her she tells him to get a No. 6 thimble. If he takes that size the chances are it will only stick on the tip of her little finger. She needs a No. 8. Of course, there are exceptions to the rule, for in thimbles, as in gloves, there are great differences in the make, and a great deal depends too, upon the peculiarities of the hand. But, as a rule, thimbles run about two sizes larger than gloves."

The Reason.

"My dear, I'm suspicious of that young architect who is visiting our Mabel."

"Why?"

"He's a designing fellow."

Women Are for Peace

One of the fruits of sex equality will be the decline of war—international strife, industrial strife and sex strife. Women may not know how to play fair, at first, but they will be more apt pupils than the men. In masculine contests the rules are often more important than the game. What is fair in war? Murder, but not torture. What is fair in industrial war? Starvation, but not murder. Dynamiting is not fair, but blacklisting is, evicting is, monopolizing food is, maintaining tuberculosis tenements is. These rules won't pass, boys, when the girls learn to play the game. The tyrannical employer will have to go, syndicalism and sabotage (the logical answers to arbitrary capitalism) will have to go. We already have the children's bureau with a real statesman, Julia Lathrop, at the head. We are getting the beginning of eugenics. When the instinct of motherhood is allowed free play we shall become constructive, synthetic, peaceful.—Twentieth Century Magazine.

The Young Idea.

"When you are a man, my son, I do not want you to grovel on the earth but to fly on the heights."

"What will I fly with, pa?"

"With a fine ideal, my son."

"Say, pa, can I work it with a gasoline motor?"

Plan Statue to Heine

At last Germany is to have a statue to the memory of Heine. The agitation for the requisite permission has continued for a long time, and now the Prussian government has capitulated, but with stipulations and restrictions. The statue must not be exposed to full public view and the ceremonies of its unveiling must be inconspicuous. So it has been decided to place the memorial in a restaurant garden at Halle, where such revolutionary sentiments as it may inspire will be counteracted by good food and good beer. The workings of the official mind are certainly past all finding out. No one ever thinks of Heine as a politician. No one ever reads his political writings. But to the eyes of Prussian authority Heine is the author of "Letters on the Aristocracy Addressed to Count M. von Moltke," and of nothing else. That he was a literary decoration to Germany counts for nothing at all. That all the world has been singing his songs for half a century is a fact that has not yet penetrated the mind of official Prussia.

His Credentials.

"Say, you can't join this club of authors unless you've written something, and you've done nothing but raise pigs."

"Well, isn't that making my living by my pen?"

FIGHT OVER BANANAS

Merry Commercial War Is on In Costa Rica.

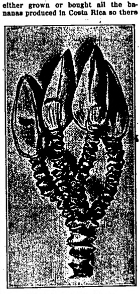
Two Powerful American Corporations at Loggerheads Over Lucrative Trade in Fruit That Has Become So Popular.

New Orleans.—A merry war has been going on all summer in Costa Rica—a Central American republic remarkably free from political upheavals—between the United Fruit company and its new competitor, the Atlantic Fruit company, and the question at issue has been bananas. The United practically owns the available railroad, has had a monopoly of the republic's banana trade for years past and is using every effort, even to a show of armed force, to crush its younger rival. It is all supreme in both the banana and coffee country and its lease of the Costa Rican Northern railroad insures its domination. That road was begun in 1871 by an American, Minor C. Keith, now vice president of the United, and it took 20 years to complete the line from Port Limon of the Atlantic to San Jose, the capital, a distance of 103 miles. It is said that at one period Keith succeeded in working his employes eleven months without a single pay day, the personality of the man being strong enough to hold his laborers on faith. The money was eventually forthcoming and there are old men in Port Limon today who declare with pride that they are "'71 men," or "'72 men," as the case may be, referring to the date on which they entered Mr. Keith's service in the construction of the railroad.

The United Fruit company owns 200,000 acres of banana lands on the Atlantic seaboard of Costa Rica. On these lands it produces about 42 per cent of all the bananas grown in the republic. It buys all the bananas that native growers can produce.

To tap the banana districts, from the main line extend a number of branches and from these branches other spurs and tramways, the whole forming a system of veins and arteries for the transportation of bananas.

The main line is a common carrier of both passengers and freight. Discrimination by the fruit company is supposed to be impossible under the terms of its lease. However, when the Atlantic Fruit company ventured in this summer they discovered that discrimination was an actual fact, lease or no lease, and that they were up against a lack of all facilities for the shipment of their fruit. The total value of Costa Rica's export of bananas averages $4,000,000 annually, second only to that of Jamaica. Hitherto the company has either grown or bought all the bananas produced in Costa Rica so there is little wonder it looks askance at a formidable competitor.



Branch of Banana Tree.

The fruit of the banana today forms, in large part, the principal food of a majority of the peoples living under the tropical zone. Several species and numerous varieties of the plant appear throughout tropical America, but it is cultivated for commercial purposes in appreciable quantities only along the Atlantic border, from southern Mexico to Colombia, in Jamaica, Cuba, San Domingo, and the Bahamas, the far western markets of the United States being supplied from the Hawaiian islands and Mexico's south Pacific coast.

HIS DOG GIVES HIM A COAT

Missouri Hunter Makes One From Skins of Coons His Pet Caught.

Fulton, Mo.—J. L. Sappington, a hunter living near here, will be protected from the cold this winter by an overcoat made from hides of coons caught by his famous coon dog, "Buck." The coat is made from the skins of 30 of the 132 animals captured by the faithful "Buck."

Monk Invents Deadly Gun.

Rome.—Father Bontempi, a monk who has been teaching physics at the convent of St. Anthony, has invented an automatic rifle capable of firing 250 shots a minute. Bontempi wished to patent the weapon, but the superiors ordered him to destroy the model. Discarding his priestly garb, he entered into negotiations with the minister of war, which are now about to be closed.

American-Chinese Gets High Post.

Peking.—A presidential order has been issued appointing Chen Chin Tao chief of the new auditing department. Chen Chin Tao, who was formerly vice-president of the board of finance, is now in the United States. His appointment, like that of the foreign advisers, is intended to inspire confidence abroad.

Statement of the Management and Ownership

Of St, Hilaire Spectator, published weekly at St. Hilaire, Minn., required by the act of August 24, 1912.

Managing editor, I. D. Converse, St. Hilaire, Minn.

Owner, Harry E. Ives, Thief River Falls, Minn.

I. D. CONVERSE, Editor.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 30th day of September, 1912.

(SEAL) B. E. BURKEE,
Notary Public, Pennington County, Minn. My commission expires Dec. 5, 1917.

The last half of the real estate taxes must be paid on or before the last day of this month in order to avoid the ten per cent penalty.

The Thief River Falls socialist administration is certainly "going some" in turning over a valuable franchise to a telephone company against the protests of the whole community.

It ought to be a penitentiary offense for any candidate or political worker to threaten panic or hard times to gain a point politically, whether he be republican, democrat, or third termer.

In another column will be found the official publication of the proposed constitutional amendments and ratification of the gross earnings tax law proposed at the extra session of the legislature.

Howard Elliott president of the Northern Pacific railroad, has announced that he will pay $100.00 in gold as a prize for the best ten boxes of apples grown in the northwest and exhibited at the Northwestern Products exposition in Minnesota next month. A second prize of $50.00 will be given by the exposition.

Minnesota is supposed to have the most drastic corrupt practices act of any state in the Union, but it comes near being a joke since a judge in Hennepin county passed on some of its provisions. His findings were to the effect that if a friend saw fit to put a few dollars into your campaign and it was done without your knowledge the excess could not be charged up against you.

The Youth's Companion for 1913

The Youth's Companion appeals to every interest of family life, from housekeeping to athletics. It begins with stories of youthful vim and vigor, with articles which disclose the secrets of successful play in the great games, with charming tales of life at the girls' colleges. But The Companion does not surrender these readers when they have entered the more serious paths of life. Mothers will welcome the page for little children and the weekly doctor's article. Fathers will find the important news of the day as it is, and not as it is rumored to be. The entire household will appreciate the sketches which touch gently on common foibles or caricature eccentricty. In short, for less than four cents a week, The Companion brings into the home clean entertainment, pure inspiration, fine ideals, increase of knowledge.

Names rarely seen in tables of contents will be found in The Companion's announcement for 1913, which will be sent upon request,—samples of the paper, to those not familiar with it.

Every new subscriber for 1913 will receive free, all the remaining weeks of 1912; also, free, The Companion window transparency and calender for 1913 in rich, translucent colors—the most beautiful of all Companion souvenirs.

When Moses Lived

"When did Moses live?" asked the Sunday school teacher.

After the silence had become painful the teacher commanded: "Open your Old Testaments. What does it say there?"

"Moses, 4,000," replied one of the boys.

"Now," said the teacher rather sharply, "why didn't you know when Moses lived?"

"Oh, pshaw," exclaimed the lad, "I thought that was his telephone number."

All of which shows how modern ideas change the old fashioned, just as golden grain belt beers have improved the standard of beer making. Alex Thompson, agent, Crookston. adv

SHREWD SCHEME OF MOTHER.

No Roseate Postcard Without Its Thorn of Suggestion.

Harold's mother—we'll call him Harold—went abroad a month ago, leaving Harold under the somewhat unsubstantial control of his elder sisters.

In spite of the itemized directions with which even unto the moment of final leavetaking she had not ceased to bombard him, Harold's mother was far from sure that her efforts would have any lasting effect.

Her voyage was more or less disturbed by these doubts, but before she landed on the other side she had determined on a course of action. Like all small boys, Harold is most covetous of picture postcards and had looked forward to a harvest from his mother's trip.

He got it.

Every day she sent at least one card. And, whatever else it bore in the way of inscription, there was not one which failed of this introduction:

"Just as soon as you get this go and brush your teeth."

Made Carlyle "Shell Out."

Rev. Thomas Alexander, a Presbyterian minister, long resident in Chelsea and well known as a brother Scot, was most anxious to know Carlyle, but had no opportunity of getting an introduction to him. One day in the King's road he saw Carlyle coming in his direction and took advantage of the opportunity by going up to the sage and saying: "Thomas Carlyle, I believe?" Carlyle's reply was: "Tom Alexander, I know!" They became good friends, and later Mr. Alexander wrote to Carlyle for a subscription toward a school building fund, and Carlyle wrote back a refusal in doggerel, whereupon Mr. Alexander replied that if he did not send him £5 ($25) he would sell his poetry to a collector or publish it. The £5 was at once forthcoming.

Seagulls of Auchmithie.

In the fishing village of Auchmithie you may frequently witness seagulls flying into the houses of the fishermen and partaking of food from their hands. One of these sea birds was in the habit of staying in a fisherman's house all the year round except at the breeding season, when it left. About a fortnight ago, while the gull was away, the fisherman removed his home some three and a half miles from the former place.

The fisherman never expected to see his old friend the gull again. It was therefore, much to his astonishment that he beheld on a recent Sunday the sea bird come walking into his new residence with stately steps to resume his old familiarities and household ways.

MOORISH SOLDIERS.

Their Methods in Battle and Their System of Signals.

At fighting on horseback the Moors are adepts and extremely mobile. But they are incorrigibly lazy and seldom indulge in night attack. When they attack in force the horsemen usually give a lift to the foot soldiers who accompany them or allow them to run alongside and hold on to a stirrup iron. The mounted men then make a charge, wheel round and retire and make way for the footmen, who crawl along the ground, almost invisible, and who rise to the attack if they come within striking distance of the enemy. As a rule, the Riffians prefer to lure detached parties into an ambush or defile and thus inflict heavy loss upon them. The mounted men seldom dismount to fire and their firing, being from the saddle, is very inaccurate. Should the advance of the white troops be slow or hesitating the Moors effect a bold combination between horsemen and footmen and generally succeed in inflicting heavy losses on their enemy.

The prime tactics of the Moors are to delay the advance of an enemy as much as possible by mounted rifle fire until they can discern its extent and direction and subsequently to try enveloping the advancing force. The tribes also indulge in sniping, but not to a very great extent, and they also fight individually. They do not neglect opportunities for stratagem and can effect some very clever ruses. They are also guilty of abusing the services of the white flag in action.

The Moorish intelligence system is an excellent one, and the tribes are seldom without information regarding the movements of an enemy. They have also an excellent system of signaling at night by means of small fires dotted about the hills and ravines, which are obscured and revealed in accordance with an ingenious code of signals known to themselves.—Chicago News.

SIRES AND SONS.

J. L. Orcut of North Monmouth, Me., has served for forty years in the local church choir.

Secretary of War Dickinson gave up a $35,000 job as attorney for the Illinois Central for a $12,000 cabinet place.

Frederick W. Carpenter, private secretary to President Taft, was born in Minnesota in 1873. He weighs 120 pounds.

R. J. Gleason, town clerk of Waitsfield, Vt., is said to have served longer than any other similar official in Vermont. He has served fifty-three years and is now eighty years old.

Lord Clifford of Chudleigh is one of the wealthy Roman Catholic peers of England and lately bought the old abbey of Marmoutier, in Touraine, to save it from conversion into a factory.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, associate justice of the supreme court and son of the illustrious author, is sixty-eight years old, with prospects of living beyond the age of retirement. He was wounded three times in three battles in the civil war.

Wilbur and Orville Wright, the American aeroplanists, in recognition of their practical solution of the problem of aerial flight, have been honored by the Technical High school of Munich with the honorary degree of doctor of technical sciences.

Dr. Samuel A. Green, ex-mayor of Boston, librarian of the Massachusetts Historical society and secretary of the Peabody Education fund, has just celebrated his seventy-ninth birthday. Dr. Green is a physician, historian and author. He has written a number of historical pamphlets on Boston and surrounding territory.

The Lowly Singer.

The humble poet goes about
In very modest raiment.
If he could coin his tuneful words
He'd gladly make a payment
On rags that glisten as the sun
And raise an awful holler,
But now he has to be content—
He hasn't got a dollar.

For him the sun unfolds its light,
For him the stars are gleaming,
And so he cannot waste his time
On profit bearing scheming.
He must remain content to get
The robin's morning greeting
And not disturb his high flown thoughts
With vulgar things like eating.

Were he disposed to drop a peg
And lower his profession
Things might be drifting round his way
In quite a long procession.
Would he write ads. instead of songs
Extolling pills or bacon
He'd rake in coin; but, oh, his art
Would have to be forsaken!

No; he will go along his way,
Wrapped in his inspiration.
Let sordid poets sing of soap;
His theme is all creation.
So take him gently by the hand
And lead him to the table,
And then the poet's appetite
You'll find was but a fable.

His Dreadful Price.

"I have just had some swell photographs taken."

"I hope that they do you justice."

"Thanks, awfully, but that's not what's troubling me."

"What is?"

"How I am ever going to do the photographer justice?"

An Oversight.

"The constitution is a grand old document."

"Yes, but they wrote it too soon."

"Why so?"

"They should have waited until automobiles had been invented and made it unconstitutional to run a fellow down."

Arming Safes with Deadly Gases.

A chemical company has devised a grenade or glass receptacle, filled with a chemical compound, as a means of making it impossible for safeblowers to rob a safe after breaking it open.

It is an inoffensive looking article, about two inches in diameter and five inches long. Inside of the exterior tube are seven smaller ones, each filled with a different chemical. When the door of the safe is blown, or the safe is jarred heavily, the grenade explodes, and the air is filled with the deadly fumes. It is claimed that these fumes, which, so far as effect is concerned, are not unlike the gases from the deadly Chinese "stink pots," are powerful enough to make breathing impossible and to force all persons near the safe to retreat or be almost instantly suffocated.

The grenades are made with a lasting effect of from six to ten hours, depending upon the size, and are placed just back of the locking mechanism of the safe doors.—Popular Mechanics.

Hadley Points Out Danger.

President Hadley of Yale writes: "In the year 1789 the whole French people was in a state of political excitement. They seized eagerly upon everything sensational. A young journalist named Camille Desmoulins shared this feeling and took advantage of it. He wrote a series of articles called 'Lamp Post Talks to the People of Paris,' in which he urged that anybody who was not a friend of the people ought to be taken to the nearest lamp post and hanged. He was not himself a bloodthirsty man. He chose his title chiefly because it sounded so picturesque. After a time he saw that they were executing a great many innocent men and women, and began to tell men so. Then they said that he was not a friend of the people any longer, and hanged him. This story has a moral for us in America to-day. It shows the dangers that come to a people which reads newspapers for the sake of excitement, instead of for the sake of information.

"To What Base Uses."

Big Brother (to young sister who has acquired an unaccountable habit of borrowing his razor)—I know you have borrowed my razor again. It's not where I put it.

Young Sister (scrambling around in the bathroom)—Oh! here it is, Bob—just where you left it, I am sure!

Big Brother—No such thing. And this is the third time you have misplaced it. Now, miss, you will tell me what you use it for. Were you ripping the sleeves of your last winter's coat?

Young Sister (doggedly)—No. You never will forget that!

Big Brother—Well, what then? (shaking her by the shoulders) Answer me.

Young Sister (tearfully)—I was just splitting up a little light wood to kindle the fire, and I just think you are a horrid, selfish old thing not to want to even lend your things—so there!

A Little Case of Telepathy.

There is nothing strange to me in the operation of one mind upon another," the telepathic woman said. "Once when my sister I am very fond of was operated on I went with her and sat in the anteroom a long way off from the operating room. That is I walked up and down there, worried to death nearly about her, when all at once I threw myself into a big arm chair and went sound asleep.

"They had just given her the ether then, so her mind was at rest and rested mine. I slept until she came out from under the influence."

To the Voters

I wish to express to the voters of our county my appreciation of your splendid support given me at the primaries just held for Pennington county. The vote for the county attorney was as follows, towit:

For J. M. Bishop, republican candidate for county attorney 855 votes. O. A. Naplin, socialist candidate for county attorney, 170 votes. E. M. Stanton, democratic candidate for county attorney, 62 votes.

The above figures are absolutely correct. About 650 of my votes were given me by the farming community and the remainder of the vote by the city of Thief River Falls.

I will greatly appreciate a continuation of your splendid vote and support at the general election to be held on November 5, 1912.

Very sincerely yours,
J. M. BISHOP,
Republican Nominee for County Attorney for Pennington County, Minnesota.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. [illegible] D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions [illegible]. All Fargo banks and [illegible] others employ D. B. C. pupils. No other school offers such endorsement.

Our $60 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $35 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association), supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters), fits court reporters and high grade stenographers. [illegible] graduates. Do other schools offer this PROOF of superior training?

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building ([illegible] cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 100 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. The pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using aluminum money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C." Next term begins soon. For booklet, write

THE
TOLEDO BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO

The Best Known Newspaper
in the United States
Circulation 340,090
Popular in Every State

No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the farmers a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making the Blade worth many times the price of subscription, one dollar a year.

LOMBARD PIANOS
The Pianos With The Sweetest Tone

Praised by Press and Pulpit

No Piano has ever been more enthusiastically endorsed. The Artistic Case, the Easy, Responsive Action, and above all the deep, sweet, rich Tone, captivates performer and listener. The united verdict is that ∴ ∴ ∴ ∴

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE
BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Keep the pigs growing.

Sheep deserve good care.

Asparagus is a hardy plant.

Onions stand considerable cold.

A kerosene bath for roosts is urged.

Keep the pigs in a pen by themselves.

Onions should be topped and kept in a cool, dry place.

The most experienced shepherd has yet much to learn.

Sheep like a variety of pasture as well as other stock.

It is poor economy to let the brood sow get out of flesh.

The dairy cow should essentially be a large and rich milker.

There is more or less risk in feeding ordinary silage to lambs or sheep.

It is a well-known fact that alfalfa does not do well upon an impervious subsoil.

In feeding dairy cows give them all they will clean up at each feed but no more.

Range-bred lambs are far superior to native-bred lambs for breeding purposes.

Goslings must be kept out of dampness and fed only grass, water and coarse sand.

Don't fail to divide the buttermilk between biddy and the pigs. She relishes it as much as they.

The grape root worm has committed extensive depredations among the vineyards of Pennsylvania.

A toothbrush and a little naphtha will clean your velvet coat collars and make them look new again.

Select one dairy breed and stick to it. Don't mix up the breeds or you will spoil the sale of your stock.

All fowls, chicks, ducks and ducklings that are kept in yards should have plenty of green feed every day.

If the frost kills the vines of the sweet potatoes cut them off as soon as possible or the potatoes may turn black.

The spring colt should be pretty well broken by this time; if not, this is a good month to get acquainted with him.

Clean the stock tank, and keep it free from moss. Then fill it with fresh cool water. The stock will appreciate it.

The manager of the dairy farm must supply the brain. The success of the undertaking will depend largely upon him.

Early Six Weeks is a good potato for a short time, but it soon loses quality. A few rows in the garden comes in handy.

Let the cows sleep out in the pastures until the very chilly nights come on. Better for them than to be in a stuffy barn.

If pastures are failing feed a little fodder each day to the stock. It makes them more contented and less inclined to try the fences.

Farmers and feeders will this year welcome full corn cribs. It is risky business at best making meat on 75-cent corn and we will all welcome cheaper grain.

Farm orchards seem smaller and worse neglected than they were ten years ago. Perhaps the reason lies in the fact that small lots of fruit hardly ever sell profitably.

The number of silos in Kansas has nearly if not quite doubled in the last year. If they were not profitable do you think they would be built? We are not working for the fun of it any longer.

If the sheep are compelled to dig in short pastures for their living they will eat the roots of the grass. Better divide the pasture and feed one part while the other is catching up.

After the pigs have been put into the fattening pen in the fall they should be fed all that they will eat with a relish, for, as a rule, the shorter the fattening period the larger the profits.

A duckling does not know how to get out of danger. Instead it will become panic stricken and remain easy prey for the enemy. On the contrary a chicken is always on the alert, scampering off to some hiding place the moment it hears some strange noise.

Never fasten fencing wire directly to growing trees. If you do, in a few years the wire will have become imbedded in the tree and do it permanent injury. When you wish to use a tree for this purpose, spike a strip of sound board securely to the tree and fasten the wire to that. In this way very little injury will be done to the tree.

Hogs return quick profits.

Freshen up the poultry runs.

The separator is a helpful factor.

Agricultural fairs are of much value.

The first and greatest law of breeding is "like begets like."

A sheep that is in good condition in the fall is half wintered.

Do not sell a cull at any price except it be to the butcher.

Tankage is one of the very best commercial feeds in fattening hogs.

Silage and alfalfa combined make the foundation of the best dairy ration.

Ducks are very fond of dandelions chopped and mixed with ground grain.

Cattle should have access to water at all times when prairie pasture is getting dry.

"Too little phosporous" is the cause of many of the low yields on corn belt soils.

Have the ropes and straps good and stout when you begin to halter break the colt.

There seems to be a good deal of prejudice against millet because it exhausts the soil.

Skimp your sheep on good pasture and they will skimp you on mutton. Works both ways.

The value of corn silage to the beef producer is not limited to its use in winter feeding alone.

Keep the laying hens working. To do this feed them at daybreak and just before sundown.

Wait until cool weather has absolutely put the last fly out of business before dehorning the cattle.

Instead of using an old wooden watering tank make one of cement that will never decay or leak.

The longer the calf is allowed to suck the cow the harder it will be to make it drink from a bucket.

After a day's work clean the work horses thoroughly, wash their legs from the knees down and rub dry.

Raise horses for big money, cattle for sure money and hogs for quick money, is an old saying, and a good one.

A year ago there was more stock than there was feed. Now there is feed for more stock than can be found.

In building a wire fence for hogs put one barbed wire at the bottom, and the worst rooter in the pasture won't root out.

Don't be afraid to apply air-slaked lime to the cabbages with a blow gun. It will destroy the worms on the head of the cabbage.

Young fruit trees that were planted in the autumn of last year, or in the spring of this year, should be examined carefully.

Your pigs intended for breeders should not be allowed to get fat. If inclined to get fat, let up on the feed and give more range.

The garden acre should be the best on the farm. Best prepared, best fertilized and best cared for. Then it will give the best returns.

While the orchard is coming into bearing try vegetable growing as a side line. This makes one of the surest and best sources of income.

Chopped roots, fed along with the grain, will make a valuable addition to the ration, especially if winter grazing or silage is not at hand.

Keeping any machine well oiled and in proper repair not only increases efficiency, but decreases the amount of power required to run the machine.

Do not allow the cows to dry up during the latter part of the summer, as this necessitates keeping them through the winter, giving a smaller flow of milk than they should.

Land plaster has a very small percentage of lime; lump lime has the largest percentage, and hydrated lime next. Marl is usually a little richer in lime than ground lime stone.

For the last six months the hog feeder has but little more than broken even. If we are to judge the future by the past there is a time coming soon when the hog feeder will make good money.

The peanut is becoming more important as a feed for stock, especially in the southern states. The vines with the nuts attached are often cured, and they make a palatable hay for all kinds of farm stock.

The dishonest poultryman may palm a dozen bad eggs off on the lady of the house, but the cook will expose the dishonest practice. Better keep on the right side of the cook by marketing none but strictly fresh eggs, besides incidentally aiding some to your reputation.

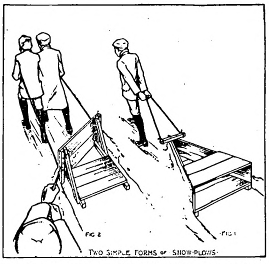
The fruit farmer can always find something to do, either in the orchard or around the buildings. This business, like any other, is ruined by too much loafing. Keep the loose ends well in hand for the best results.

The great bulk of the oat crop of the world is produced within the north temperate zone including the countries of Russia, Germany, Norway and Sweden, Canada, and the northern part of the United States. Russia produces more oats than any other country.

BOYS' HANDICRAFT

By A. NEELY HALL

Author of "Handicraft for Handy Boys" and "The Boy Craftsman"



TWO SIMPLE FORMS OF SNOW-PLOWS

HOW TO MAKE A SNOW PLOW.

Every boy who has an eye for business realizes that a snowstorm furnishes a splendid opportunity for earning money and is not slow to profit by it.

In some cities the cleaning of front walks is done with a snow plow and team of horses. This is more generally the custom in the smaller cities and suburbs, where there is much vacant property and walks that never would be shoveled if the work was left for the owners to take care of. Such a plow, on a smaller scale, can be used to advantage by boys in removing snow from walks, and if several of you boys organize a snow shoveling brigade it will be a strong argument in your favor in soliciting contracts for the season if you promise to keep the walk plowed from street corner to street corner. The probability is that you will get more jobs in the neighborhood than you can handle. In case the main walks are plowed by the city, your plow will be handy for cleaning the inner walks, carriage drives, etc.

We designed and constructed a number of forms of small plows when boys, and these were used in the neighborhood for several winters. Two forms of these are shown in Figs. 1 and 2. You will notice that each one is of very simple construction.

The wedge-shaped plow illustrated in Fig. 1 has a base constructed as shown in Fig. 3. Make the two runners of this base out of strips about 1½ inches wide and two inches thick, 36 inches long; and trim off one end of each strip so that when the opposite ends are placed 24 inches apart, as shown in Fig. 3, the trimmed ends will fit together as in Fig. 4. Nail the trimmed ends together. The easiest and quickest way to put on the base covering is to allow the boards to project over the runners without any regard to the slant of the latter, and after all have been nailed in place to saw off the ends on a line with the sides of the runners.

FIG. 5
BASE OF SNOW PLOW SHOWN IN FIG. 2 36"
28"
24"

The sides of the plow may be made out of one-inch boards 10 or 12 inches wide. Trim the bow end of each as you did the runner ends, and overlap one on the other in the same way; then fasten them to the side edges of the base.

The two pieces of board fastened to the top edges of the sides not only form a seat, but act as braces for the sides as well. Trim off the square ends of these boards flush with the side boards, after nailing them in place. Cut a strip about 12 inches long for the front cross-piece, notch its edges near each end to keep the rope traces from slipping off, and nail it to the top edges of the side boards.

This form of plow will have the tendency to slip up over the snow, if the snow is deep, on account of the direction of the pull on the bow end, and this tendency must be overcome by weighting the plow. This may be done either by having a boy sit upon the seat or by packing the inside of the plow with wet snow.

The second form of snow plow (Fig. 2) has a base constructed somewhat similar to that of the other plow, but of the shape shown in Fig. 5. All of the necessary dimensions for this are given on the diagram. Trim the bow end of each runner as shown, so it will fit against the dash-board of the plow.

Cut the boards for the dash about three feet long batten them together at each end as shown in Fig. 2, and then nail the lower portion to the ends of the runners and brace the upper portion with diagonal pieces fastened to the dash and to the sides of the runners, as in the illustration.

This form of plow has a tendency to slide to one side, on account of the slanted dash-board, and in order to plow a straight path with it it is necessary to have a boy hold on to a rope attached to the brace at the near end of the dash, as the boy in the illustration is doing.

The two forms of plows described above may be constructed on sleds, instead of on the bases illustrated, if you wish to build them that way.

WHAT WE OWE TO POSTERITY

Bodily and Mental Health Is Necessary to the Prospective Mother, Says an Authority.

Every child has a right to be well born. An undesired child never should be brought into the world. An undesired child, or a child of parents who are not in good bodily or mental condition, comes into the world with an inheritance that perhaps never is overcome.

The ancient Greeks surrounded the prospective mother with beautiful paintings and statues so as to give a mental impression of beauty to the future generation. As a result they were noted as a beautiful race.

The expectant mother should give her child all possible advantages of a good mental impression. Every child brought into the world should be desired before its conception, and, during its prenatal life, the mother should think nothing but loving and wholesome thoughts. She should train her mind in habits that she wishes to impress upon the child. She should cultivate habits of system, she should cultivate a correct taste and ear for music. Her surroundings should be artistic but simple. She should live as close to Nature as possible.

The mother's own physical health cannot help but affect her child, therefore the mother should take those measures that will promote the health of her body. In ancient Sparta, the women exercised in the gymnasium in order to obtain the highest possible bodily vigor in preparation for the function of motherhood. The Spartans were noted as a race of exceptionally strong men. But the mother should be careful not to take any violent exercise during this period. Swimming and walking are two of the best general exercises that can be taken. Housework, with the exception of the heavy lifting and scrubbing, is a valuable exercise. The expectant mother needs a large amount of fresh air, so she should plan to spend several hours a day in the open air. It is well for her to sleep out of doors, if possible, otherwise she should sleep in a room with open windows.—Dr. Edith B. Lowry.

When Bill Squared Up.

Down in a southeast Kansas town lives a rather simple-minded youth by the name of Bill Beasley, whose facility in contracting small debts at the local stores is only equaled by his success in evading their payment, according to the Kansas City Star. One day recently, however, Bill made the mistake of showing some money before one of his creditors and after the hard fought argument which followed the money was handed over to the storekeeper.

"Now," said Bill, sadly, "we're square and I want a receipt. Make it legal so you won't be after me again."

And here is the receipts which Bill proudly exhibited to his friends:

To Whom It May Concern: Greeting—All men know by these presents habeas corpus and nux vomica, that Bill Beasley don't owe this firm nothing and ain't going to.

(Signed) JOHN HOBBY.

Glorious Work.

Miss Jane Addams, Chicago's famous social worker, said the other day of work:

"Work is laudable, but don't forget when you praise it, that there's such a thing as overwork.

"I once heard a young man reply to a capitalist's praise of work like this:

"'My laundress rises every morning at 4:10, winter and summer. She washes all day, besides cooking three meals for a large family. In the evening she washes dishes, then she irons till 10. At 11 she goes to bed. She has done this all her life. She looks 65, and in reality she's 32. This shows what work will do for you.'"

The Boy of It.

A man who was a regular attendant at the ball games frequently met a friend of his there and noticed that he often brought his litle son with him.

"That youngster of yours seems to be an enthusiastic ball player," he remarked.

"I should say he was," replied the boy's father. "When he's playing in the lot he thinks nothing of lending his best coat to be used as a base."

SEE VALUE OF CHEESE

AMERICAN HOUSEWIVES HAVE COME TO USE MORE OF IT.

Should Always Be Only an Accompaniment to the Meal—Innumerable Ways in Which It May Be Temptingly Prepared.

Formerly cheese only appeared on American tables in homes away from the big centers, served in small uncooked portions as an accompaniment to apple pie or doughnuts. Today American housewives are using cheese in their daily menus. They have begun to recognize its food value and also the congestibility of cooked cheese. Toasted cheese is sometimes given to children and invalids today. Formerly this would have been considered equivalent to signing a death warrant. Cheese should not be taken as an entire meal, however. It is an accompaniment to a meal. It is not wise to serve it with heavy meat dishes. It contains only 30 per cent. of water and is, therefore, a highly concentrated food. Compared with meat it contains twice the amount of solid food. Casein is the principal element of cheese, and analysis proves that it has all the fat-forming and heat-giving elements that meat has.

The grated cheese seems to go best with onion soup. A recipe for a very simple onion soup is:

Put six medium-sized minced onions into a stewpan with three ounces of melted butter, place over a slow fire and shake gently until the onions are soft and slightly browned. Add one quart of boiling water. Season with salt, pepper and nutmeg. Put two well-beaten eggs into a tureen and pour the soup, which should cook about thirty minuts, over them. When served, pass the grated Parmesan cheese in fancy cup or bowl with spoon. A little sprinkled into the soup adds greatly to its flavor.

A rich cheese bisque is made by adding one-half cupful of grated cheese to a soup made of one pint of milk and a cupful of chicken or lamb stock. Season by boiling an onion therein and thicken with flour and butter blended as for white sauce. When boiling, strain and add the cheese. Return to the fire until the cheese is melted. Have two well-beaten eggs in a bowl and pour the hot soup over these, beating to keep from curdling. Season with salt and white pepper.—Marion Herrick, in the Pittsburg Dispatch.

Lobster Buttered.

Pick the meat from a large freshly boiled lobster. Mince it finely, put into a stewpan with an ounce and a half of fresh butter rolled in flour. Stir it over a gentle fire until quite hot, then add one-eighth of a nutmeg, grated, a dessertspoonful of chili vinegar, or if this is not at hand, common vinegar may be used; three grains of cayenne with large saltspoonful of white pepper in it. Two tablespoonfuls of rich gravy are a great improvement to this dish. Stir the mixture gently over the fire until quite hot. Serve in the shell of the lobster with bread crumbs over the meat. Time to simmer, ten minutes. This recipe is sufficient for six or seven persons.

Removing Lemon Soda Stain.

Soda water leaves a stain on serge, and lemon soda on blue serge may be removed by wetting the spot with a mixture of equal parts of alcohol and ammonia. Afterward sponge gently with alcohol until the stain is removed.

Before you apply this it is a good idea to try it on a sample of goods the same as the dress, if you have it, and if you have no sample then try the mixture on some part of the gown that is inconspicious.

The stain might be removed in another way. This is to rub with soap and apply chloride of soda, with a camel's hair brush, rinsing quickly and thoroughly.

Veal Cutlets.

A slice from the leg of veal makes the best cutlet. Fry slices of salt pork in the frying pan, take out and keep hot; dip the slices of veal into beaten egg, then in cracker crumbs; fry them about 15 or 20 minutes in the pork fat; dish the cutlets, add a little hot water or soup stock to the gravy in the pan and let it boil up. If gravy is not brown enough, add one-half teaspoon vegetable bouquet. Pour gravy around cutlets on a hot platter and garnish with the diced salt pork. Serve grated horseradish for a relish with this dish.

Beefsteak Roll With Tomato Sauce.

When possible have the third slice of round steak, as it is most suitable for rolling. Make a dressing as for fowl, spread thickly over steak, roll and tie. After browning on all sides cook in salt and boiling water at least two hours, or until nearly tender; then turn a quart of canned tomatoes into the kettle and boil one-half hour longer. Take out meat and set where it will keep hot, strain the contents of kettle, add thickening, let boil a few minutes and pour over meat.

Spanish Rarebit.

One-half onion chopped fine and fried brown in one tablespoonful butter. Add one pound of mild cheese broken in bits and stir until melted, and then add one-half teaspoonful of mustard and salt and pepper to taste. Then add two-thirds of a cup of strained tomato and let cook a short time, stirring occasionally, and then add two well-beaten eggs, stir well and cook one minute.

Rice and Date Pudding.

Put one glass of rich milk into a buttered pudding dish, add two tablespoons of washed rice and the same amount of sugar. Place in a slow oven. When it becomes hot, add a pinch of salt. Bake one hour, then add one-half pound of washed and chopped dates, and bake until thick, stirring frequently.

Carrot Stew.

Cut the carrots in small pieces and cover with milk enough to stew them. Add salt and pepper to taste, and a small piece of butter.

SAW NO CAUSE FOR WORRY

Small Boy Pretty Wel Satisfied That the Future Was Not Likely to Be a Hard One.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer says:

A Lakewood woman was recently reading to her little boy the story of a young lad whose father was taken ill and died, after which he set himself diligently to work to support himself and mother. When she had finished the story she said:

"Dear Billy, if your papa were to die would you work to support your dear mamma?"

"Naw!" said Billy, unexpectedly.

"But why not?"

"Ain't we got a good house to live in?"

"Yes, dearie—but we can't eat the house, you know."

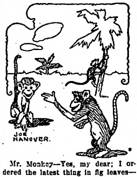
"Ain't there a lot o' stuff in the pantry?"

"Yes, but that won't last forever."

"It'll last till you git another husband, won't it? You're a pretty good looker, ma!"

Mamma gave up right there.

TRUE TO HER SEX.



JOE HANOVER.

Mr. Monkey—Yes, my dear; I ordered the latest thing in fig leaves—imported direct from Ujiji—for bathing suits for you and Jocko.

Mrs. Monkey—Oh, you dear, sweet thing! How lovely! Oh, won't I cut a figure on the Congo this season!

Pure From Start to Finish.

There is perhaps nothing in daily use in the home in which purity is so important as it is in baking powder. On its purity depends the purity of the materials used, the success of the bakings, etc. And possibly the one thing that has served to make Calumet Baking Powder so much of a favorite with the critical cooks of the country, is the fact that Calumet is pure from start to finish.

You can rely on Calumet's purity for the simple reason that every ounce of the materials used is first tested by experienced chemists and then mixed with the utmost care to insure its uniformity. And standing in the can or changes of weather, etc., cannot alter it in any respect.

But perhaps the best thing of all, is the fact that Calumet never fails. Every baking in which Calumet is used, is sure to come from the oven as light and as fluffy as you can wish. This not only means wholesome, tasty foods—but a big economy as well. Try Calumet next bake-day—it's the best baking powder made—for two World's Pure Food Expositions, one in Chicago, 1907, one at Paris, France, 1912—have given it the highest awards. Adv.

A While for a Time.

A Cleveland school teacher writes that she asked her class what was the difference between the expressions, "a while," and "a time," says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. Nobody seemed to have any ideas on the subject. Finally the light of intelligence was seen to shine in the eyes of one little boy, and the teacher called upon him to save the intellectual honor of the class.

"I know, teacher!" he cried eagerly. "When papa says he's going out for a while, mamma says she knows he's going out for a time!"

That's one way of looking at it.

Call to Arms.

"Bang!" went the rifles at the maneuvers.

"Oo-oo," screamed the pretty girl—a nice, decorous, surprised little scream. She stepped backward into the surprised arms of a young man. "Oh," said she, blushing, "I was frightened by the rifles. I beg your pardon."

"Not at all," said the young man. "Let's go over and watch the artillery."

BACKACHE NOT A DISEASE

But a Symptom, a Danger Signal Which Every Woman Should Heed.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Read about Mrs. Woodall's experience.

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since. I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Daddy's Whack-Whack.

On the occasion of her last visit to a certain Baltimore household a young matron of that city found a little friend in tears.

"What the matter with little Marie?" she asked endeavoring to console the weeping child.

"Daddy has just given me whack-whack," the youngster replied between sobs.

"Thoughtless daddy!" exclaimed the young woman, repressing a smile. "And where did he whack-whack little Marie?"

"On the back of my tummy," was the answer.

Neglect and Cruelty.

"So you want a divorce?" said the lawyer.

"Yes," replied the woman with tear-stained cheeks. "He has been guilty of neglect and cruelty."

"In what respects?"

"He neglected to feed the bird while I was away and says the cruelest things he can think of about Fido."

MORAL FOR THE MONEY-MAD

Hope of Becoming Millionaires About on a Par With the Washerwoman's Delusion.

Prof. Warren M. Beidler of Bethel, Pa., in a recent address made the striking assertion that the American people, money mad, taught their children how to earn a living, but not how to live.

"There is no viler, and there is no vainer ambition," said Professor Beidler to a reporter, "than that of the American boy to become a millionaire. What percentage of our boys do become millionaires? It would take a good many decimals to work that out, believe me!

"The boy who sets his heart on a million fares likes the washerwoman who set her heart on a cross-eyed aeronaut.

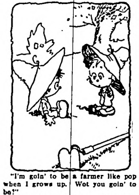
"'I hear you married that cross-eyed aeronaut last week?' said a friend.

"'Yes, I did,' replied the washerwoman, as she rocked back and forth over her tub. 'Yes, I married him, and I gave him $500 out of my buildin' association to start an airship factory.'

"'That so?' said the friend. 'Where is he now?'

"'I don't know,' said the washerwoman. 'I'm waitin' for him to come back from his honeymoon.'"

HIS CAREER MAPPED OUT.



"I'm goin' to be a farmer like pop when I grows up. Wot you goin' to be?"

"Me? I'm goin' to be a bunco man an' take yer farm away from you."

Mooted Question.

"How's Willie getting on at that free thought Sunday school you're sending him to?"

"First rate, from last accounts. He asked his pretty lady teacher who it was that first bit the apple in the Garden of Eden. Willie says she looked him straight in the eye and said nobody knew; that they'd been trying to figure it out for the last 6,000 years."

Official Scoring.

"Should Blucher get the credit for winning Waterloo?"

"No; that victory is properly credited to Wellington. Blucher didn't relieve him until about the eighth inning."

"GOOD STUFF."

A Confirmed Coffee Drinker Takes to Postum.

A housewife was recently surprised when cook served Postum instead of coffee. She says:

"For the last five or six years I have been troubled with nervousness, indigestion and heart trouble. I couldn't get any benefit from the doctor's medicine so finally he ordered me to stop drinking coffee, which I did.

"I drank hot water while taking the doctor's medicine, with some improvement, then went back to coffee with the same old trouble as before.

"A new servant girl told me about Postum—said her folks used it and liked it in place of coffee. We got a package but I told her I did not believe my husband would like it, as he was a great coffee drinker.

"To my surprise he called for a third cup, said it was 'good stuff' and wanted to know what it was. We have used Postum ever since and both feel better than we have in years.

"My husband used to have bad spells with his stomach and would be sick three or four days, during which time he could not eat or drink anything. But since he gave up coffee and took to Postum, he has had no more trouble, and we now fully believe it was all caused by coffee.

"I have not had any return of my former troubles since drinking Postum, and feel better and can do more work than in the last ten years. We tell everyone about it—some say they tried it and did not like it. I tell them it makes all the difference as to how it's made. It should be made according to directions—then it is delicious."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

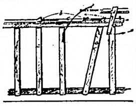
The DAIRY

PROTECTING COWS FROM FIRE

Lever Attached to Stanchions Will Open Them All at Once—Quite Handy at All Times.

Just the other day a dairyman near here lost 17 head of good cows in a fire. The cows were fastened in their stanchions in the barn when the barn burned. One of the men risked his life to go in and open the stanchions of two of the cows, but the fire was so intense that the others perished, writes Augustus Merrill of Tulare county, California, in the Farm and Home.

I have always been afraid of fire ever since. I built my new barn in which I invested a big sum, and I have taken many precautions to save the stock in case something should happen. One of the things that is very useful is a lever at the end of each stanchion row that will unfasten all of the cows in that row at once. There are 20 cows on one side and 15 on the other, and the levers are near the door where one could get at them even though there were quite a blaze inside.



Lever Releasing All Stanchions.

The drawing shows how these levers are fastened to the stanchions to open them all at once. Instead of one timber at the top there are two. The uppermost, c, is a 2x4 that moves on top of the other. This 2x4 has slits in it in which the stanchion timbers are moved. The lever, d, at the end is attached to c and will either open or close all of the stanchions at once. To prevent accidents, the lever is fastened with a wooden pin, either open or shut as the case may be.

Besides being a good thing in case of fire, it is very handy in everyday use. When I am ready to let the cows out I open the stanchions all at once. When the cows come in, they take their proper places, and when they are quietly eating their silage the lever is operated and they are all fastened at one time.

DRIED GRAINS TO DAIRY COW

Really More Valuable, Pound for Pound, Than Bran—Animals Should Have Oat Straw.

It is our opinion that the dried grains are really more valuable, pound for pound, as a feed stuff, than the bran, and yet for the sake of variety, as well as for other purposes, we should hardly go to the extent of using grains exclusively, says a writer in an exchange. On the contrary, we think it would be better to mix the grains and the bran in equal parts by weight. This mixture would carry about 16 per cent. of protein, and, when fed in connection with good corn silage, corn stover and oat straw would make a very good ration indeed. If the amount of silage on hand will justify feeding so liberally we suggest the use of 40 pounds of it daily, and in connection five pounds of alfalfa hay as long as it will last. Ten pounds of the mixture of grains and bran, fed in connection, would be quite sufficient for the production of 40 pounds of milk, and five pounds will probably suffice for the production of 25 pounds of milk; for amounts between 25 and 40 feed in about the same proportion.

In addition to the foregoing, give the cows all the oat straw or stover they will care to eat.

JERSEY IS BEST MILKER

Highly Developed Animal Long Bred for This Purpose—Can Always Be Depended Upon.

The Jersey cow is a highly developed milk-making machine. She has been bred so long for this purpose that her characteristics have become fixed, and the descendants of a well-bred dairy cow can be depended upon. The amount of milk that she will make depends largely on the amount of food that you can get her to use.

Excellent Type of Jersey.

Washing Butter.

A correspondent asks how to wash butter. Following is a rule that, if followed, will prove satisfactory:

After drawing off the buttermilk, pour a pailful of cold water in the churn over the butter and give the churn four or five quick revolutions. Then draw off the first water and put on the second and turn as before. If the butter is hard enough after the second washing, draw it off and take out the butter.

The washing of the butter removes the buttermilk and makes the butter keep for a longer time. It also puts it in better condition for salting.

AGE OF BREEDING HEIFERS

Constantly Recurring Question on Which Dairymen Do Not Agree—No Danger of Stunting.

The age at which to breed the heifers is a constantly recurring question. Opinion differs considerably on this point, and unfortunately experience as related by breeders is not uniform by any means, writes E. E. Kaufman in the Town and Country Journal.

The writer has always tried to make his opinions conform to his experience and observation, but in the case of breeding the heifers his views have always been backed up by both experience and observation.

When the heifer is bred to drop the first calf at the age of two years, and in nearly all instances this can be done, the habit of giving milk is early stimulated; besides the young cow is more tractable and thus more readily brought under the environment of her new condition. With the first calf dropped at the age of two years it is better to delay the breeding for the second calf for six or eight months, but keep milking her for a year at least, in order to develop the trait of long and persistent milking. After the second calf she can be bred regularly every year.

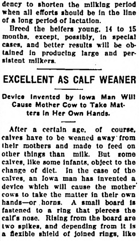
If properly fed and handled there is really no danger of stunting the growth or undermining the constitution by early breeding. For the dairy a cow should begin giving milk as early in life as possible and the habit of persistent milking be thoroughly instilled in the animal. A heifer bred to calve at two and one-half or three years of age will be more difficult to handle and consequently not give down her milk so readily, thus bringing about a tendency to shorten the milking period when all efforts should be in the line of a long period of lactation.

Breed the heifers young, 14 to 15 months, except, possibly, in special cases, and better results will be obtained in producing large and persistent milkers.

EXCELLENT AS CALF WEANER

Device Invented by Iowa Man Will Cause Mother Cow to Take Matters in Her Own Hands.

After a certain age, of course, calves have to be weaned away from their mothers and made to feed on other things than milk. But some calves, like some infants, object to the change of diet. In the case of the calves, an Iowa man has invented a device which will cause the mother cows to take the matter in their own hands—or horns. A small board is fastened to a ring that pierces the calf's nose. Rising from the board are two spikes, and depending from it is a flexible shield of joined rings, like the ringed dish cloths for scrubbing pots and pans that some of us have seen in our mother's kitchens. When the calf attempts to suck with this apparatus on she prods her mother in the side and gets pushed away for her pains. Even if she does get her mouth to the udder she cannot suck it for the shield.



Calf Weaner.

Goat's Milk.

For human consumption goat's milk has an advantage over cow's milk, being somewhat richer, its water content being less. On the average, the percentage composition of this milk is as follows: Butter fat, 3.70; casein and albumen, 4.85; sugar, 5; salts, 0.35; water, 86. The goat is much more resistant to disease than the cow, particularly to tuberculosis; therefore its milk is especially valuable as food for children.

Yield of Silage.

A yield of 12 tons of silage may easily be obtained from one acre of corn. Allowing 30 pounds of silage as a daily ration, one acre of corn will furnish four cows with silage for 200 days.

DAIRY NOTES

Whey is not a good feed for calves and can be used only in a limited

Look out for those cold fall rains. put the cows up. This applies to calves as well.

Lighting, ventilation and cleanliness must be practiced before best results can be secured in the dairy.

Danish experiments show that 600 pounds of skim-milk equal in feeding value 100 pounds of corn meal.

No breed of dairy cows can continue as first-class dairy animals if the calves are allowed to run with the cows.

Calves from four to six months old frequently bloat if allowed to run on young green clover, especially if the clover is wet.

Cows in good condition and running in a good pasture require no grain feed to put them in good condition for the winter's work.

Abolish the stanchions; they have been responsible for many injured udders. When the cow is confined in the stall she needs solid comfort.

The few flies that have managed to keep their feet warm are very annoying. They stick like a burr to a dog's tail and bite with dying ferocity during the heat of the day.

WELL TO AVOID DAMPNESS

One Thing About Outdoor Life That Can Not in Any Way Be Termed Beneficial.

The woman who leads an outdoor life must protect herself from dampness if she is to keep well. The mistake of the novice is trying to harden herself as no seasoned tar would attempt.

As rubbers wear out quickly when tramping have waterproof shoes that are guaranteed to shed moisture, yet are light and shapely. They come in two heights, 12 and 16 inches, or the ordinary walking shoe may be made in waterproof leather.

The woman who has once owned oilskins will never be without them. There is a feather weight grade, smooth, glossy and free from wrinkles that is made up into long coats with a warm corduroy collar; or, even smarter, come in a jacket and skirt, more convenient for use in a boat.

For the head are rubber hoods with a visor and deep collar that can be folded into pocket compass. Rather more becoming is the soft hat lined with oiled silk.

A rubber blanket that folds into a neat case is a great safeguard from dampness. It can be used when sitting on damp ground, and keeps out dampness when put over bedclothing in outdoor sleeping.

HOUSEHOLD QUESTIONS

Paper plates with roses painted thereon come with doilies and paper tablecloth to match, and are truly artistic.

To remove the odor of fish from forks, first wash the forks in hot water and then remove from the water and rub them over with a tiny piece of butter. Wash again and no odor will remain.

To clean fawn colored suede gloves put the gloves on the hands and rub them all over with a mixture of fuller's earth and alum, then brush off the powder and the gloves should look as good as new.

To renew chiffon spread a wet cloth over a very hot iron and hold the chiffon over the steamer until it is free from wrinkles. Repeat the process with another hot iron and wet cloth as soon as the steam begins to flow feebly. The chiffon should be dried quickly.

Sandwich Labels.

The clever hostess of today will let no little idea of table service escape her observing eyes if she enjoys the reputation of having things just right. Not only must she be supplied with little menu cards, place cards, tiny dinner cards, but now she must use the attractive little name cards for sandwiches.

We all know from experience that almost all dainty sandwiches look alike, so a wise brain has decided that the hostess must label her viands. For garden parties, al fresco teas, buffet breakfasts and informal veranda affairs these convenient name cards appear.

As many hostesses have the little solid silver tags into which the name of the liquor or cordial written on a card is inserted, the same tags might be utilized for the assorted sandwiches.

The English custom of labeling heavily garnished dishes might be used on some occasions by the American hostess, and she would surely be considered a most thoughtful woman.

Apple and Peach Pudding.

Take equal parts ripe sour apples and peaches and mix well; put in baking dish; to each quart fruit add pint of sugar; flavor with nutmeg; cover with a batter made by beating together one egg, one cup sweet milk, one teaspoon baking powder, one cup sugar and enough flour to make stiff batter; bake slowly until a rich brown. Serve warm with cream and sugar.

Spice Cake Without Eggs—One cup of sugar, one tablespoon of butter, one teaspoon each cinnamon and allspice, one small teaspoon salt, one cup sour milk, one small teaspoon soda dissolved in it, one cup chopped raisins, two cups flour.

Beanpot Stew.

Get a pound of shoulder steak, or any kind of stew meat, and cut up in inch pieces; place a layer of meat in bean pot, sprinkle with pepper and salt, then a tablespoon of flour, next a layer of sliced onion and one of potatoes, and so on until meat is used up; cover with a cup of water, place in oven covered and bake slowly; if water bakes off add more.

Kidney Stew.

Take kidneys and wash, then put on stove, cook slowly, then when almost done cut into small dices, put through a food chopper and add salt, pepper and make a gravy. This is fine served on toast. Kidneys make delicious stew. Cook and add onions and five or six potatoes. Thicken with a little flour. They are very nice fried, but the stew cannot be excelled.

French Stew.

Put a little butter in a spider, slice a small onion and fry in the butter. Cut leftover turnip and carrot in fancy shapes. Put the gravy left from the roast into the spider. Cook a few minutes and strain. Now cut nice slices of the cold roast meat and put in the gravy. Cook ten minutes, add turnip and carrot and one can of peas. Pour on a platter and serve.

Chili Sauce.

Twenty-four large, ripe tomatoes; five large onions, three green peppers, all chopped fine; then add four even tablespoonfuls salt, five tablespoonfuls brown sugar, four tablespoonfuls cinnamon, two tablespoonfuls ginger, one-half tablespoon cloves, one quart vinegar. Cook one and one-half hours. Put in glass jars and seal. This is excellent.

Tomato Jelly Salad.

Follow ordinary directions for making gelatin, using one pint strained tomato to one-quarter box gelatin. Season with salt, pepper and a dash of celery salt. Cool in small loaf pan; when almost set, add one-half cupful pecan meats. Cube and serve with mayonnaise on lettuce.

AFTER THE GRIP PURIFY THE BLOOD

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Are the Best Blood Builder and Will Cure You as They Cured This Woman.

It is of the utmost importance to your health, if you have suffered from the grip, that you cleanse the blood of the lingering germs and put it in condition to resist disease.

After the acute attack the sufferer is left with a debilitated system, is short of breath upon the slightest exertion and is affected by every change of weather. The system is in such a weakened condition that it is powerless to resist the attack of such diseases as pneumonia and bronchitis.

This is a condition which emphatically calls for a tonic for the blood. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are the best medicine for this purpose for they act directly on the blood which they cleanse of all impurities. They tone up the nerves and give health and strength to the debilitated system.

The debility which follows an attack of the grip can only be cured by making the blood rich and red. This Dr. Williams' Pink Pills never fail to do promptly and it explains how they cured Mrs. F. R. Boyd, of No. 607 South Ninth street, Minneapolis, Minn. She says:

"I was never well after an attack of the grip a few years ago until I took Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Before this I had found nothing that helped me. I was all run down, pale and thin. My appetite was poor and my head ached continually. I didn't feel like myself at all.

"Someone finally recommended Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to me and I found them just the medicine for my case. They gave me a hearty appetite and a good, clear color. I got back my vitality and was soon a well woman. I can safely say that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will do all that is claimed for them. I heartily recommend them."

If you are suffering from after-effects of the grip or other wasting disease, try the remedy that has cured so many stubborn cases, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, upon receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. A copy of our booklet, "Diseases of the Blood," is free on request. Adv.

PIMPLES COVERED FACE

1613 Dayton St., Chicago, Ill.—"My face was very red and irritated and was covered with pimples. The pimples festered and came to a head. They itched and burned and when I scratched them became sore. I tried soaps and they would not stop the itching and burning of the skin. This lasted for a month or more. At last I tried Cuticura Ointment and Soap. They took out the burning and itching of the skin, soothing it very much and giving the relief that the others failed to give me. I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment about three weeks and was completely cured." (Signed) Miss Clara Mueller, Mar. 16, 1912.

Harry Clotworthy, who is an expert on military affairs, entered the diningroom of the National Press club one morning and carried with him a ravenous appetite. Having eaten one breakfast, which consisted largely of eggs, he ordered another breakfast, which consisted even more largely of eggs. Half an hour later the steward of the club found the colored waiter loafing about the entrance of the writing-room and asked him what he meant by being absent from his post.

-BY THE-

Extra Session of 1912.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

St. Paul, Minn., July 3, 1912.

Hon. Julius A. Schmahl,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

Sir:

As required by Section 25 of the Revised Laws, and Amendment, I have the honor to furnish you herewith a statement of the purposes and effects of the respective amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, proposed by the Legislature of 1911, which are to be submitted to the electors of this State at the general election in 1912.

I have also furnished a statement of the purposes and effect of the law proposed by the Legislature at the extra session of 1912, known as Chapter 9, Laws of 1912, relating to the taxation of railroad companies, which, under the Constitution of this state, must be submitted to a vote of the people of the State, and be adopted and ratified by a majority of the electors of the State voting at the election, before such Chapter 9 shall take effect or be in force.

AMENDMENT NO. I.

Increased Road Fund.

Chapter 398 of the General Laws of Minnesota for 1911, proposes to the people of this state, for their approval or rejection, an amendment to Section 16 of Article 9, of the Constitution. This Section now reads as follows:

"Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges, there is hereby created a fund, to be known as the 'state road and bridge fund;' said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the income derived from investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund, however provided.

The legislature is authorized to add to such fund, for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of this state, by providing, in its discretion, for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state of not to exceed in any year one-fourth (¼) of one mill on all the taxable property within the state.

Provided, that no county shall receive in any year more than three (3) per cent or less than one-half (½) of one (1) per cent of the total fund thus provided and expended during such year, and provided, further, that in no case shall more than one-half (½) of the cost of constructing or improving any road or bridge be paid by the state from such fund."

This Section, if amended, will read as follows:

"Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges, there is hereby created a fund, to be known as the 'state road and bridge fund;' said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the income derived from investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund, however provided.

"The legislature is authorized to add to such fund, for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of this state, by providing, in its discretion, for any annual tax levy upon the property of this state of not to exceed in any year one mill on all the taxable property within the state. Provided, that no county shall receive in any year more than three (3) per cent or less than one-half (½) of one (1) per cent of the total fund thus provided and expended during such year."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The approval of this amendment will authorize the Legislature to levy, in its discretion, a one mill tax upon all the property of this state for the benefit of the roads and bridges therein; and will repeal certain limitations as to the amount which may be paid by the state for such roads and bridges.

The present constitution authorizes the Legislature to add to the road and bridge fund by providing, in its discretion for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state not to exceed one-fourth (¼) of one (1) mill, while the amendment permits the Legislature, in its discretion, to provide for an annual tax levy of one (1) mill on all taxable property within the state.

The present constitution provides that in no case shall more than one-half (½) of the cost of constructing or improving any road or bridge be paid by the state from such fund. The amendment proposes to remove the limitation which now exists in the constitution as to the amount which the state may pay for such fund towards the cost of constructing or repairing any road or bridge and leaves the whole management of such fund to be provided for by law, as the Legislature shall deem wise.

AMENDMENT NO. II.

Insurance of Crops.

By this amendment it is proposed to add an entirely new section to Article 9 of the Constitution, to be known as Section 17, and which shall read as follows:

"The legislature may provide for the payment by the State of Minnesota of damages to growing crops by hail and wind, or either, and to provide a fund for that purpose, including the necessary expenses of giving effect to this act, may impose a specific tax upon lands the owners of which, at their option, have listed the same with county auditors for that purpose, and no payment shall be made of any such damages except from the fund so provided."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. This amendment, if adopted, will authorize the state to act in the collection and disbursements of a fund for the payment of damages to growing crops by hail or wind, or either. This fund is to be created and maintained by a specific tax imposed by the legislature upon the lands of such persons only as shall voluntarily list the same with their respective county auditors for that purpose. Under it, there could be no tax for such purpose imposed on the lands of any owner who does not consent thereto. The legislature is also authorized to include in the fund to be raised by taxation of such listed lands the necessary expenses of administration of the law. The adoption of the amendment will authorize the legislature to direct that the taxing machinery of the state be used to levy and collect the tax necessary to raise such fund, and to provide for the disbursement of same by the officers of the state; but any payments to be made by the state by reason of damage by hail or wind will have to be made from such fund, and from no other. In the settlement of any such damages, the state would assume no liability beyond the amount of such fund and could not further be rendered liable.

PROPOSED LAW RELATING TO THE TAXATION OF RAILROAD PROPERTIES.

CHAPTER 9, LAWS OF 1912.

AN ACT providing for the taxation of railroad properties, the collection and times of payment of such tax and repealing acts inconsistent therewith.

Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota.

Section 1. Every railroad company owning or operating any line of railroad situated within, or partly within this state, shall, during the year 1913, and annually thereafter, pay into the treasury of this state, in lieu of all taxes and assessments, upon all property within this state, owned or operated for railway purposes, by such company, including equipment, appurtenances, appendages and franchises thereof, a sum of money equal to five per cent of the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within in this state.

On or before August 15, 1913, and annually thereafter, each such railroad company shall make, according to law, a true and just return of all such gross earnings for the six months ending June 30th, next preceding, and the said tax of five per centum thereon shall become due and be payable to the State of Minnesota in manner provided by law, on September 1st, next thereafter.

On or before February 15, 1914, and annually thereafter, each such railroad company shall make, according to law, a true and just return of all such gross earnings for the six months ending December 31st next preceding, and said tax of five per centum thereon shall become due and payable to the State of Minnesota in manner provided by law, on March 1st next thereafter; and the payment of such sums at the times hereinbefore set forth shall be in full and in lieu of all other taxes and assessments upon the property and franchises so taxed; provided nothing in this act shall be construed as modifying any agreement entered into between any municipality within the state and any railroad company relating to the payment of local taxes or assessments.

The lands acquired by public grant shall be and remain exempt from taxation until sold or contracted to be sold or conveyed as provided in the respective acts whereby such grants were made or recognized.

Sec. 2. The term "the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within in this state," as used in Section 1 of this act is hereby declared and shall be construed to mean, all earnings on business beginning and ending within the state, and a proportion, based upon the proportion of the mileage within the state to the entire mileage over which such business is done, of earnings on all interstate business passing through, into or out of the state.

Sec. 3. All acts and parts of acts not inconsistent herewith, regulating the payment, collection, time of payment, enforcement or reports involving the amount of taxes upon the gross earnings of railroad companies within this state or providing penalties for the non-payment of such taxes, are hereby made applicable to this act so far as may be, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 4. Upon failure to pay the amount of such taxes legally due, upon the respective dates hereinbefore set forth, collection thereof may be enforced in addition to existing remedies in a civil action brought in the name of the State of Minnesota in the district court of any county.

Sec. 5. Before any railroad company shall be heard to contest or continue to contest the validity of this act or any part thereof, such railroad company shall as a condition precedent thereto, pay into the treasury of the State of Minnesota the amount of taxes due or payable from such railroad company under the existing tax laws of this state.

Sec. 6. This act shall be submitted to the people of this state for their approval or rejection at the next general election for the year 1912.

The secretary of state shall cause to be printed in bold type upon the ballot used in voting for state officers or upon a separate ballot, if so provided by law at the said election, in manner conformable with the requirements of the general election law, the words, "For increasing the gross earnings tax of railroad companies from four to five per cent, and providing for the payment of the gross earnings tax semi-annually.

Yes........................

No........................

And each voter voting at such election shall designate his vote by a cross mark made opposite one or the other of the words "Yes" or "No" and the said election shall in all respects, conform, as far as may be, to the requirements of the general election law, and the returns of said election shall be made, canvassed and certified, and the results thereof declared in the manner provided by law for returning, certifying and canvassing votes cast for state officers.

Approved June 15, 1912.

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The law now in force relating to the taxation of railroad properties is Chapter 233, Laws of 1903, ratified by the people at the general election of 1904. The only language of the proposed law of 1912 which differs from the old law of 1903 is set forth above in bold-faced type. Under the present law, the taxes upon railroad property are computed at the rate of four per cent upon the gross earnings of the company owning or operating the same. The purpose of this new law is to change that rate from four per cent to five per cent and to make the taxes payable semi-annually on March 1st and September 1st of each year, instead of annually, as under the existing law.

AMENDMENT NO. III.

Mortgage Loans to State.

This amendment, if adopted, will permit the permanent school and university fund of the state to be invested in first mortgage loans upon improved and cultivated farm lands of the State. This amendment would change Section 6, Article 8, of the Constitution, which now reads as follows:

"The permanent school and university fund of this state may be invested in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, but no such investment shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this state; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the bonds to be issued or purchased would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed fifteen per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than three per cent per annum, nor for a shorter period than five years, nor for a longer period than twenty years, and no change of the town, school district, city, village or of county lines shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of the issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds."

So as to read as follows:

"Section 6. The permanent school and university fund of this state may be invested in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, and in first mortgage loans secured upon improved and cultivated farm lands of this state. But no such improvement shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this state; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the bonds to be issued or purchased would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed 15 per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall any farm loan or investment be made when such investment or loan would exceed 30 per cent of the actual cash value of the farm land mortgaged to secure said investment; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than 3 per cent per annum, nor for a shorter period than five years, nor for a longer period than twenty years, and no change of the town, school district, city, village or county lines shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The present constitution authorizes the investment of the permanent school and university funds of this state in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state. This amendment, if adopted, will permit, in addition to the foregoing investments, said school and university funds to be invested also in first mortgage loans secured upon improved and cultivated farm lands of this state.

AMENDMENT NO. IV.

Commission Form of Municipal Government.

By this Amendment it is proposed to amend Section 36 of Article 4 of the Constitution, which now reads as follows:

"Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent, and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor, or chief magistrate and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

So that said Section 36 of Article 4 of the State Constitution shall read as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city, consistent with and subject to the laws of this state, as follows:

The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper for a charter board of not to exceed fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the judges of the district court of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated as the legislature may determine for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall within six months after its appointment return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of a proposed charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof, and, if the same be not ratified may thereafter in like manner return other draft or drafts of a proposed charter until one thereof shall be ratified as herein provided.

Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next general or special election thereafter, and if a majority of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, or at such other time, if any, as shall be specified therein, become the charter of such city or village as a city and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; provided that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established.

Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof.

Such charter so deposited may be amended, or revised, by proposal therefor made by said board and accepted by a majority of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next general or special election thereafter; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of said board relative to submitting amendments of such charter to the vote of the people and shall provide that upon application of ten per cent. of the legal voters of any such city or village by written petition, such board shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition.

The board above provided for, shall be permanent and all vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members.

Any such charter or any amendment or revision thereof may provide for the commission form of government having legislative and administrative powers, or it may provide for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses and, if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by a general vote of the electors, or it may provide for any other plan or system of municipal government; provided that the plan or form of government so adopted shall not violate the constitution of the state as hereby amended.

In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto, or revision thereof to the qualified voters of such city or village, any alternative section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter, or any amendments thereto or revision thereof.

The legislature may provide general laws relative to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty thousand and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty thousand and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all cities of either class, or if so specified in the law, to all cities in either such class not having charters adopted pursuant to this amendment, but no general law limited to one or more of said classes of cities shall apply to any city existing under a charter framed under this section of the constitution unless such general law shall be made applicable to such city by a declaration, therein, naming the city. Such laws shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for.

The legislature shall enact any and all laws necessary or proper to carry into effect the provisions of this amendment, and shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. No local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and object of this amendment is to permit cities already incorporated and villages desiring to be incorporated as cities to include in their charters, or by amendment or revision thereof, a commission form of government having legislative and administrative powers. The amendment sought enlarges the power of such municipalities in framing their own charters, reserving to the legislature, however, the authority to prescribe the general limits within which the said charters shall be framed.

A commission form of city government is generally understood to include the following characteristic features: 1. A small governing board; 2. The exercise of both legislative and administrative duties by this board; 3. The division among the members of the board of the administrative work of the city by departments over which a single member of the governing board of the city has control; 4. The election of the members of the governing board by all of the voters of the city and not by wards, precincts or districts. 5. The adoption of methods of direct popular control over the action and the continuance in office of the members of the governing board.

AMENDMENT NO. V.

County Superintendents of Schools.

By this Amendment it is sought to enlarge the provisions of Section 7, of Article 7, of the Constitution, which Section now reads as follows:

"Section 7. Every person who by the provisions of this article shall be entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office which now is, or hereafter shall be, elective by the people in the district wherein he shall have resided thirty days previous to such election, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, or the constitution and laws of the United States."

So that it will read as follows:

"Section 7. Every person who by the provisions of this article shall be entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office which now is, or hereafter shall be, elective by the people in the district wherein he shall have resided thirty days previous to such election, except county superintendents of schools who shall be required to have educational and professional qualifications to be determined by the legislature, and except as otherwise provided in the constitution, or the constitution and laws of the United States."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and effect of this amendment is to authorize the legislature to require educational and professional qualifications, in addition to all the other qualifications now required by law, for any person seeking the office of County Superintendent of Schools. As the Constitution now stands, any legal voter is eligible to the office of County Superintendent of Schools.

AMENDMENT NO. VI.

State Senate.

Section 2 of Article 4 of the Constitution now reads as follows:

"Section 2. The number of members who compose the senate and house of representatives shall be prescribed by law, but the representation in the senate shall never exceed one member for every five thousand inhabitants, and in the house of representatives one member for every two thousand inhabitants. The representation in both houses shall be apportioned equally throughout the different sections of the state, in proportion to the population thereof, exclusive of Indians not taxable under the provisions of law."

It is proposed to substitute therefor the following:

"Section 2. Number of members. The senate shall be composed of sixty-three (63) members, and the house of representatives shall be composed of such number of members as may be prescribed by law. The representation in both houses shall be apportioned as nearly equal as practicable, throughout the different sections of the state in proportion to the population thereof, exclusive of Indians not taxable under the provisions of law. Provided, however, that a county may be divided into several legislative districts, but no county or any of the parts thereof shall ever constitute or be a part of more than seven (7) senatorial districts and not more than seven senators shall ever be apportioned to any one county."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and object of this amendment is to limit the State senate to sixty-three (63) members and to prevent any one county having more than seven (7) senators.

Yours respectfully,
LYNDON A. SMITH,
Attorney General.

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Uncle Sam Spoils an Indian Adoption Romance.

I DON'T THINK YOU OUGHT TO HAVE THIS ADOPTION

WASHINGTON.—Uncle Sam, money grubber, who seems to have lost all his sentiment, has spoiled the pretty romance of the adoption of Robert D. Heinl and his bride into the Blackfeet tribe of Indians.

Mr. Heinl, who is a Washington correspondent, and his bride, formerly Miss Helen Corbin, were admitted to the tribe at a picturesque ceremony in Glacier National Park, Mont., shortly before their marriage. Chief Three Bears acted for the tribe and bestowed upon the couple the tribal names of "Black Eagle" and "Little Woman."

The redskins made their new paleface brethren welcome, Mr. Heinl having long been in their good graces through his sympathy and affection for the vanishing race of Americans, of which he has made an exhaustive study.

The tribe extended hearty welcome to "Black Eagle" and his bride, therefore, but Uncle Sam, through the Indian office, now says that he cannot allow his wards to acquire tribal additions in this manner.

The acting chief of the Indian Bureau says the adoption is not legal because the Indian bureau will not confirm it when it comes before them officially. Therefore, Mr. Heinl and his bride will be cut out of their share of the Blackfeet allotment of lands and money which their red-skinned brothers were anxious they should have.

The acting chief said:

"We will disapprove of this adoption matter when it is brought to our notice for verification. The Indians themselves, I feel sure, must have looked on it simply as a joke. They were admitted to the tribe by an Indian ceremony, and not by a legal one, which requires a tribal council before the superintendent of the reservation and other officers.

"Only people descended from the tribe and who have Indian blood in them are ever admitted to a tribe. The Indians are wards of the nation and receive a certain allotment, therefore, any new member of the tribe is a ward of the nation and would have an allotment of lands and money. We will not allow Mr. and Mrs. Heinl to become members of the tribe, even if they waive their rights to apportionments, because it might make serious complications in the future and lots of people would desire to join Indian tribes to become wards of the nation and benefit therefrom. It would be a dangerous precedent."

Love Germs and Lingerie Are Coincidental

YOU ARE TOO YOUNG TO WEAR THESE THINGS

A LOT of the idiosyncrasies of young girls and budding debutantes, susceptibility to love affairs and their romantic notions generally, among other things, were explained to several hundred mothers the other day by Dr. Eleanora C. Follkmar at the exhibition hall of the Congress of Hygiene and Demography.

Dr. Follkmar said that many times girls cannot help these little things, when they are crossing the border line to womanhood. The fault is with nature, not with the belles, she admitted. They should be gently repressed.

Dr. Follkmar, who is a stoutish lady of middle age, told her sisters to denude their daughters of pretty shoes and corsets. She condemned especially the brand of corsets which conduce to the "waspish waist."

Of the activity of the love germ in the budding belle she said:

"The period of passage from girlhood to womanhood is the period of self-consciousness, of early love affairs, of hero devotion, worship or devotion to ideals and religious enthusiasm. These things are in part results of the changes they are undergoing physically.

"This is also the period of bad tempers and the use of slang and profane words. During this period girls should not be allowed to wear corsets or high heeled shoes. Neither should they be allowed to use stimulants, not even tea or coffee. They should get plenty of sleep and not be allowed to go much into society or take part in strenuous pastimes.

They should get nine hours of sleep in the open air. There are many cases of the nervous wrecks, women unfit for the duties of the home, because their lives were too strenuous at this period. Corsets and high heeled shoes were not made for girls under eighteen years. One of the most vexing problems of this period is the corset. Every girl wants to wear one.

"Nature has provided every girl with a corset of bony framework, covered with muscles and ligaments for the thorax and pelvis and several layers of muscles for the abdomen and back. Tight lacing at this period deforms the bony framework. The curved front corset—the one that gives the wasplike waist—causes future troubles in the woman who wears them at this period.

"Next to the corset must be placed the tight shoe in the amount of harm it does girls. They should wear low, square heeled shoes with wide toes. Compression of the foot into a rigid shoe destroys the natural relation of the parts, interferes with the circulation, prevents development of the muscles and ligaments, and brings on a train of sequences such as bunions, weak ankles and broken arches."

Staying in One's Bed Is the Only Good Answer

COING UP
PLEASE, OH PLEASE —FER MY SAKE. DON'T DO IT
LAUNDRY PRICES

LAUNDRY prices in Washington are going up. This is the aeroplane age. Meat and rents are already well on their way for altitude records, having broken all former attempts. Rent, clothing, coal, and sundries are soaring. "Everybody's doin' it," and now the laundry men are going to do it, too.

"Who are we, that we should pay ten cents more for steak and not charge an additional cent for our collar processes?" asked one laundryman.

"There comes a tide in the affairs of men, when, unless one gets in the swim, one finds everything going out and nothing coming in," said another.

The "cleaners" feel that they have enough. Therefore, Washingtonians are to pay three cents for their collars and 15 to 20 cents for their shirts soon, and, if they wear pleated evening shirts, they may even cost them 25 cents.

Heretofore, however, the common "peepul" thought that he had one advantage. Cleanliness remained conservative in price. Water and soap were within his reach. He could afford to run a laundry bill.

Even had he only three collars and two lonesome shirts, the world did not need to know it. They could take their regular turns at the laundry and one could maintain a bold front before the world. His neighbors did not need to know that he wintered upon two dozen lumps of coal, and brought his little ones up on a diet of oleomargarine and meatine capsules.

Provided he had the price to pay his rent, there was not much more that he needed in order to appear prosperous to his fellows.

His last hope is about to vanish into thin air. Laundry prices are going to aviate, and the dark complected collar and sallow shirt must henceforth show the status quo of the man who pays the bills.

Local laundrymen abused the trusts, when questioned. They threw the blame on the Standard Oil and Steamship trusts for leading the way. They maintained that even should they charge five cents per collar, it would still hardly bring them enough profit to buy their daily caviar and turtle steak.

MARTHA WASHINGTON'S recipe for preserving pears in brandy has been discovered by Mrs. Arvilla McDonough, of 1401 Massachusetts avenue Northwest. Mrs. McDonough has in her possession some valuable papers of the Washington family, and following the discovery in Washington several days ago of a jar of brandy and pears put up by Mrs. Washington. Mrs. McDonough gave the Herald a copy of the famous recipe. The jar of pears is in the possession of J. W. Mossburg, 1404 Pennsylvania avenue Northwest.

The recipe in its archaic language follows: "Ye pears shoulde be very freshe. Washe and put yhem into boyling lye for an minute. Remove and put yhem into cold water. Nexte put ye fruit into a prepared sirupe of sugar and water. Use an half pound of sugar for everie pound of ye fruit; water to dissolve. Now cooke for an quarter of an hour. Remove and put on plates to cool. Boyle sirupe down to one-half its original quantitie. Put sirupe and pears into jars and add brandy. Seal while hote."

Mrs. McDonough is going to preserve about four bushels of pears according to the recipe of Mrs. Washington. She believes the recipe to be very good with the exception of the "boyling lye" part, but she is going to try it at any rate.

Political Notes.

Gov. Wilson, it is said, will make no more speeches during the campaign.

Soon after the election, President Taft is contemplating a trip to the Panama canal.

News of the attempt on the life of Roosevelt caused a shock among his friends at Washington.

Eugene V. Debs, socialist candidate for president, is on a speech-making tour throughout the country.

Gov. Wilson has cancelled all political speech-making engagements for the present, owing to Col. Roosevelt's condition.

Republicans filed an injunction against the secretary of state of Louisiana to prevent him placing progressive electors on the official ballot for the November election.

"The sinister system" formed a deep-laid plot to control the present presidential election, Thomas W. Lawson of Boston told the senate campaign committee.

Secretary of State Philander C. Knox, addressed a republican meeting at Seattle, defending the record of the Taft administration and appealing to republicans to stand by the president.

One of the greatest needs of the country is a merchant marine, declared Charles Nagel, secretary of commerce and labor, in an address in Hannibal, Mo., in behalf of President Taft.

Governor Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana, democratic vice presidential candidate, argued against over-capitalization of the individual in politics in an address to an audience composed of Davenport, Moline and Rock Island people.

Before the senate investigating committee it was brought out that upwards of $400,000 was expended in the efforts of Governor Woodrow Wilson, Governor Judson Harmon and Representative Underwood to secure the democratic presidential nomination.

William J. Bryan closed his second day's tour through Indiana with an addess at Fort Wayne, in which he attempted to show why former President Roosevelt and former United States Senator Albert J. Beveridge should not be classed as real progressives and reformers.

In the home city of the late William McKinley, Governor Johnson stood on a platform beneath a picture of the murdered president and pleaded with progressives to double their efforts in behalf of the new party, in order that the absence of Colonel Roosevelt in the political battle may not be felt so keenly.

Defense of honest corporations and laudation of President Taft's attitude toward industrial combinations of capital were the burden of an address in Chicago by Huntington Wilson, assistant secretary of state. Mr. Wilson declared that scientific regulation of combinations to preserve the economics to the nation, while destroying their abuses, now form the problem of the nation.

General.

Thos. J. Ryan, a political leader in Philadelphia, suicided.

Secretary of War Stimson, at Buffalo, N. Y., championed the re-election of President Taft.

Bryan says the attack on Roosevelt cannot be used as a shield in the presidential campaign.

Boston Americans won the baseball championship, defeating New York Nationals 3 to 2 in ten innings.

A censorship has been established over the royal library at Buckingham palace. The queen caught Princess Mary reading one of the late King Edward's books.

Francisco Mayos, who had charge of the vaults of the National bank of Cuba, Havana, was arrested by order of Judge Pinero in connection with the investigation into the disappearance of a package containing $200,000.

Railroad superintendents and workmen from the shops and general managers and yardmen, rubbed shoulders at a monster mass meeting in convention hall in Kansas City and told each other how to prevent railroad accidents.

The withdrawal of Governor Wilson from the political platform will not affect the activities of Governor Johnson and Governor Marshall, the vice presidential candidates repsectively on the progressive and democratic tickets.

Through the merest luck the country is happy today in the escape of Mr. Roosevelt from death by an assassin's bullet.

Three persons were burned to death in a fire that destroyed the residence of Louis Winkle, a prosperous farmer eight miles west of New Richmond, Wis.

Sixteen picture brides from Japan were detained at San Francisco when they arrived on the liner Siberia. They will be examined for hook worm, and if found infested, will be treated on Angel island before being permitted to land.

Another cruiser has been ordered from Washington for the Mexican coast.

There is concern at Washington for the safety of American residents at Vera Cruz, Mexico.

Fire which swept a portion of the business district of Hanley, Sask., caused a loss of $100,000.

The typhoon which swept several of the islands of the Philippine group October 16, caused many deaths and heavy damage to property.

The banner of rebellion has been raised at Vera Cruz, Mexico, by a nephew of Former President Diaz.

The Union Pacific is the only railroad in Nebraska which has added to the state's mileage during the year.

Four persons were injured, none dangerously, when a passenger train ran into a caboose on a Chicago & Northwestern freight at Onawa, Ia.

Enough letters will be on hand before the jury in the "dynamite conspiracy" trial to keep witnesses busy for a week identifying them.

Jack Johnson, the pugilist, has a white girl for his sweet heart, and the latter says she expects soon to become his wife. The mother of the girl is heartbroken.

Mme. Calve, the famous singer, thinks she's too fat to sing in opera. She will, therefore, open a school and teach young and sylph-like girls the art of warbling.

A national marketing association for farmers was advocated by B. F. Yoakum at Dallas, Texas, in an address before the convention of Southwestern growers.

John Schrenk, who shot Col. Roosevelt in Milwaukee, formerly lived at the address given in the Milwaukee dispatches. He is a laundryman, who left New York about a month ago.

After spending a day in sightseeing and attending a noonday luncheon at the Portland commercial club, Secretary Knox left over the Great Northern railroad for Washington.

Women of republican headquarters in New York are exhibiting the protective tariff doll, in lace and finery, to show that the average woman can have such an outfit, in spite of tariffs, for $25.

An attempt was made by a fanatic to kill Colonel Roosevelt at Milwaukee. He was shot in the breast, but the wound is not believed dangerous. The man was arrested. He appears to be demented.

One million tickets printed in preparation for a proposed "progressive tag day" in New York City, probably will be wasted because the authorities ruled that tagging is technically begging on the streets.

Advices from Clermont, Ia., state that the condition of ex-Governor William Larrabee, who has been ill for several months, has become very critical. He is in a stupor most of the time. He is eighty-one years old.

Charles Ely, a hotelkeeper of Lennox, Ia., was killed and his four companions were badly injured when Ely's automobile ran into a ditch near that place. The injured are Arlo Richards, Richard Gordon, John Nagle and Ben Evans, all of Lennox. Nagle cannot recover.

Extradition to Germany of an American named Major Victor Carter West was refused in London by the judges of the king's bench division. West had been charged at Bow street police court with obtaining money ou false pretenses in Germany by making certain representations in regard to the promotion of a California oil company.

Attorneys for New York publishers filed, with the supreme court of the United States requests for early consideration of those sections of the recent postal appropriation act, which require paid editorial comment to be designated "advertisement," and necessitates the publication of the names of stockholders of the newspapers.

While at Kearney, Neb., Governor Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana telegraphed his secretary at Indianapolis instructing him to send militia to the Mineral Springs race track in northern Indiana, providing the attorney general had asserted that the Indiana gambling laws were being violated and providing the sheriff of Porter county refrained from doing his duty.

For the first time since he was incarcerated, John Schrank asked a deputy sheriff how Colonel Roosevelt was. When told his condition was favorable, Shranck asked where the colonel had been shot and if the bullet had been located. "The bullet belongs to me," said the prisoner, "I have made my will and bequeathed the bullet to the New York Historical society, with a request that it be placed on exhibition in the state capital. My property in New York I have willed to my mother in Germany.

Roosevelt's would-be assassin says he is sorry he did not kill the ex-president.

Personal.

Roosevelt expects to make a number of speeches before close of the campaign.

Governor Johnson described Mr. Roosevelt as the greatest two handed fighter the world has ever known.

The Illinois supreme court denied the privilege to the progressives to have the same names of candidates printed on two or more tickets to be voted at the November election.

Bryan and LaFollette sent messages to Colonel Roosevelt.

John Schrank claims the bullet he fired in Roosevelt's breast.

Mrs. Edna Hutt, wife of Henry Hutt, the artist, was granted a decree of divorce at Reno, Nevada.

The bail bond of John Schrank, would-be slayer of Roosevelt, was increased from $7,500 to $15,000.

The public prosecutor at Milwaukee believes Schrank, the assailant of Roosevelt, is sane.

Appendicitis Attack Keeps the Sculptor, Andrew O'Connor, From Seing His Work Unveiled.

St. Paul.—In the presence of 10,000 Minnesotans who had been his friends and admirers, the bronze presentment of John Albert Johnson, thrice governor of Minnesota, raised before the main entrance of the state capitol in St. Paul was unveiled late Saturday with simple ceremony. Gathered about the monument to which 100,000 persons had contributed were the high men of church and state and the late governor's lifelong friends in all walks of life. His loyal widow, still attired in somber black as in the days at Rochester when Governor Johnson was fighting his battle with death, was an important though a modest figure in the events of the day.

Andrew O'Connor, the sculptor who designed the monument and supervised its erection, was not present when his great work was unveiled. He was confined to his bed in the Saint Paul hotel suffering from a slight attack of appendicitis.

Second Monument at St. Peter.

The erection of this monument is to be followed by that of another to be raised in St. Peter, probably in the cemetery where lies the body. The monument commission in its final meeting after the unveiling exercises voted to publish 1,000 copies of its proceedings, to appropriate $600 for bound volumes of newspaper clippings on Governor Johnson now owned by Carleton college and to turn the remainder of the fund, amounting to about $2,500, to St. Peter. This city has raised $1,000 for a Johnson monument and as Mr. O'Connor has offered to produce a replica in bronze for $3,000, the way is opened for another Johnson monument.

A Woman's Tribute.

Unobserved except by a few persons occurred a touching incident of the exercise. Shortly before the exercises began a middle-aged woman, rather plainly dressed, made her way through the throng about the statue and proceeded to the granite pedestal, placed at its feet a handful of roses and autumn leaves. John McCormack, who provided the pedestal, hastened to the woman's side and as a recognition of her delicate tribute, invited her to a place on the stand among the invited guests, at the same time asking her name. The woman in a half-frightened manner and in a foreign tongue, declined the honor and hurriedly disappeared in the crowd.

As a preliminary to the exercises, Governor O. A. Eberhart, with his entire staff in full dress uniform and the guests invited by the monument commission, marched out from the main entrance of the capitol to the stand, prepared for the day.

In the train from the capitol were C. D. O'Brien, chairman of the commission; Bishop J. J. Lawler, B. F. Nelson, A. C. Weiss, H. V. Jones, D. M. Neill, A. E. Rice, J. T. Schain, Arthur Selover, president of the Minneapolis council; Frank A. Day, Chief Justice C. M. Start, Justice C. L. Brown, G. W. Bunn, P. E. Brown and Andrew Holt of the supreme court; Congressman W. S. Hammond, former Justice Thomas D. O'Brien, Fred B. Lynch, Senator George P. Wilson, most of the state officials, the governor's military staff, the officers of the national guard and a delegation of old settlers, headed by A. L. Larpenteur.

While thousands of admirers stood looking at the memorial statue of Governor John A. Johnson and voiced appreciation of the remarkable lifelike piece of art, Andrew O'Connor, the sculptor, whose genius was complimented on all sides, was suffering from an attack of appendicitis in his rooms at The Saint Paul.

Statue of Gov. Johnson.

The sculptor was stricken Friday, but had been making every effort to ward off the attack which he felt was coming, until after the unveiling of the statue, so that he might be present. He was unable to do so, however, and Doctors H. T. O'Brien and Herbert Davis were called in ocnsultation over Mr. O'Connor at about the time the statue was uncovered.

Mr. O'Connor was able to talk. "I did not want to be laid up just at this time," he said, "but I was compelled to forego the pleasure of seeing how the statue was received. It was a piece of work in which I was deeply interested, and I did so want to get close to those who knew your Governor, to hear just how the work appealed—and here I am laid up."

Mr. O'Connor was anxious to know what had been said about the monument, and when told that the work was the subject of enthusiastic comment, he expressed satisfaction. It is not expected he will be compelled to undergo an operation. He expressed the hope last night that he would be able to be about in a few days. The physicians are watching his case closely, however.

"We erect this monument," said Bishop Lawler in pronouncing the invocation, "to an illustrious son of our state in the hope that it will perpetuate his memory and serve to stimulate us all to try and emulate the highest and noblest type of citizenship which he exemplified." He invoked the blessings of God upon the state and upon the officers who are doing the work that Johnson did.

Miss Lynch was introduced by C. W. Ames, chairman of the commission, and, standing upon the platform, just as the band opened with the first bars of "America" she pulled the cord and the covering fell from the statue.

Mr. Ames announced with regret that Andrew O'Connor, "to whose genius, artistic imagination and skill of hand we are indebted for this monument," was ill and would not be able to attend. Mr. O'Connor was taken sick early yesterday with an attack of appendicitis. It is not believed the attack is serious, but physicians said he must remain in bed. He is at The Saint Paul.

C. D. O'Brien, originator of the idea of a memorial to Governor Johnson, as head of the commission, formally presented the statue to Governor Eberhart, who received it on behalf of the people of the state.

Governor Voices Appreciation.

"I accept it," said the Governor, "knowing that today Governor Johnson lives in the hearts of the people of Minnesota. I sat in that office when the body was lying in state and saw 62,000 men, owmen and children file through with bowed heads to take their last view of his remains. If ever there was a proof that the people of Minnesota appreciate noble services it was at that time.

"The men in the Capitol building who were loyal to him have been loyal to me, and his memory will serve to inspire them to a service like to that which he gave. He was typical of the West and of this state." Governor Eberhart quoted a poem with the lines "Out where the skies are a trifle bluer, out where the friends are a trifle truer, that's where the memory of John A. Johnson lives."

"Therefore," he concluded, "on behalf of every boy and girl in Minnesota and every man and woman to whom this will be an inspiration and a benediction. I accept this statue that we may build up the state to its true destiny." He ended with a word of thanks to the commission for its successful work.

Tribute of Great State to Great Men.

When Congressman Hammond was presented he looked out over the faces and up at the brilliant sky and exclaimed: "What a magnificent spectacle—the tribute of a great state to a great man." Then he delivered his address eulogizing and appraising the great work of Johnson and the place be held in the hearts of the people of the state and nation. When he made a stirring comparison with Lincoln the crowd was swept by his eloquence and applauded feelingly.

It was Congressman Hammond who nominated Governor Johnson for the gubernatorial candidacy, twice in the state, and who also presented his name to the national Democratic convention for the nomination for presidency; so it was especially fitting that he should nominate him for a high place in the memory of the people of the state and the nomination was heartily and unanimously accepted.

Fear for Motorboat's Crew.

Duluth.—Two adventurous Duluth young men and a companion from Marquette, Mich., are somewhere on the reaches of Lake Superior between Houghton and Duluth, bound this way in a small motor boat. The Duluth men are J. A. McLennan, vice president of the Manley McLennan agency, and William White, Jr. Their Marquette companion is Ward Powell. According to advices from Houghton these young men arrived there from Marquette in the motor boat. Tuesday afternoon they started for Duluth.

Youthful Robber Dying.

Minneapolis. — Finally realizing that death is near, Lloyd P. Foster, who was shot and mortally wounded by Patrolman Martin Johnson of the East Side station early Sunday morning when he attempted to make his escape after having been caught in the act of burglarizing a drug store, asked the head nurse at the City hospital to summon a priest. The burglar, who is but twenty-one, confessed, received absolution and was baptized in the Catholic faith.

$1,600,000 to Be Asked.

St. Paul. — While addressing a group of social workers, Dr. Christopher Easton, secretary of the State Tuberculosis association, said that the next session of the legislature would be asked to appropriate $1,600,000 to fight the white plague in Minnesota. This sum, he declared, would be sufficient for a period of years. Mr. Easton said that the state tuberculosis hospital at Walker was inadequate and could not handle advanced cases of the disease.

GAVE BACK $77,000

SENATOR'S ACTIVITIES IN 1904 CAMPAIGN AIRED BEFORE THE COMMITTEE.

ROTHSCHILD TESTIMONY.

Claims Money Was Returned 10 Days After Election—Indianan in Washington Saturday.

Washington, Oct. 25.—That Senator Albert J. Beveridge returned campaign contributions amounting to $77,000 sent to him by George W. Perkins, Edward McLean and Gifford Pinchot was the testimony of three witnesses examined yesterday by the senate campaign contributions committee.

Mr. Perkins, when examined by the committee, said he could remember sending only $10,000 to Senator Beveridge, which was returned.

The testimony was to the effect that Senator Beveridge received and returned three checks or drafts, each for $10,000. Besides, $25,000 was received from and returned to Edward McLean, cousin of Senator Beveridge, and either $2,500 to $3,000 was returned to Gifford Pinchot.

Three Witnesses on Stand.

Lars A. Whitcomb, who had a law office with Senator Beveridge in 1904; John F. Hayes, formerly private secretary to Senator Beveridge, and Leopold Rothschild, who was on the Republican executive committee in 1904, were the witnesses. Each of them testified to having witnessed and signed copies of the letters with which Senator Beveridge returned the contributions.

Mr. Rothschild said that Senator Beveridge showed him the drafts from Mr. Perkins early in October, before the election, and announced his intention of returning the money. Mr. Rothschild said he advised holding the money until after election, lest the contributors be offended and that Senator Beveridge concluded to do this. The money was returned some ten days after election.

Hogan Gives Out Letter.

After the committee had adjourned for the day, Frank J. Hogan, representing the Progressive party, in Washington, gave out a letter which he said had been telephoned him from the New York office of Mr. Perkins and which purported to be the letter of Senator Beveridge returning the money sent him by Perkins. The letter named no amount. It read as follows:

"Dear old man: Herewith I return you, untouched, the splendid sum you so generously sent me to help me in the battle just won. It was noble of you George—characteristic of your great big noble heart; and I am grateful and appreciative beyond words to express. Could not use a cent of the magnificent amount you piced at my disposal and so return it to you intact.

"Do not feel offended at this; my cousin sent me a draft for $25,000 and I returned the draft to him, just as I am sending the enclosed back to you.

"Your beautiful friendship, steadily proved as the years pass, is very sweet and dear to me.

"Give my regards to our mutual friend, my love to the folks at home, and believe me always with tenderest affection, as ever

"ALBERT."

Tax On Gross Earnings Of Railroads PROPOSED

--BY THE--

Extra Session of 1912.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

St. Paul, Minn., July 3, 1912.

Hon. Julius A. Schmahl,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by Section 25 of the Revised Laws, and Amendment, I have the honor to furnish you herewith a statement of the purposes and effects of the respective amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, proposed by the Legislature of 1911, which are to be submitted to the electors of this State at the general election in 1912.

I have also furnished a statement of the purposes and effect of the law proposed by the Legislature at the extra session of 1912, known as Chapter 9, Laws of 1912, relating to the taxation of railroad companies, which, under the Constitution of the State, must be submitted to a vote of the people of the State, and be adopted and ratified by a majority of the electors of the State voting at the election, before such Chapter 9 shall take effect or be in force.

AMENDMENT NO. I.

Increased Road Fund.

Chapter 290 of the General Laws of Minnesota for 1911, proposes to the people of this state, for their approval or rejection, an amendment to Section 16 of Article 9, of the Constitution. This Section now reads as follows:

"Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges, there is hereby created a fund, to be known as the 'state road and bridge fund,' said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the income derived from investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund, however provided.

"The legislature is authorized to add to such fund, for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of this state, by providing, in its discretion, for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state of not to exceed in any year one-fourth (¼) of one mill on all the taxable property within the state.

"Provided, that no county shall receive in any year more than three (3) per cent or less than one-half (½) of one (1) per cent of the total fund thus provided and expended during such year; and provided, further, that in no case shall more than one-half (½) of the cost of constructing or improving any road or bridge be paid by the state from such fund."

This Section, if amended, will read as follows:

"Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges, there is hereby created a fund, to be known as the 'state road and bridge fund,' said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the income derived from investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund, however provided.

"The legislature is authorized to add to such fund, for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of this state, by providing, in its discretion, for any annual tax levy upon the property of this state of not to exceed in any year one mill on all the taxable property within the state. Provided, that no county shall receive in any year more than three (3) per cent or less than one-half (½) of one (1) per cent of the total fund thus provided and expended during such year."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The approval of this amendment will authorize the Legislature to levy, in its discretion, a one mill tax upon all the property of this state for the benefit of the roads and bridges therein; and will repeal certain limitations as to the amount which may be paid by the state for such roads and bridges.

The present constitution authorizes the Legislature to add to the road and bridge fund by providing, in its discretion for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state not to exceed one-fourth (¼) of one (1) mill, while the amendment permits the Legislature, in its discretion, to provide for an annual tax levy of one (1) mill on all taxable property within the state.

The present constitution provides that in no case shall more than one-half (½) of the cost of constructing or improving any road or bridge be paid by the state from such fund. The amendment proposes to remove the limitation which now exists in the constitution as to the amount which the state may pay for such fund towards the cost of constructing or repairing any road or bridge and leaves the whole management of such fund to be provided for by law, as the Legislature shall deem wise.

AMENDMENT NO. II.

Insurance of Crops.

By this amendment it is proposed to add an entirely new section to Article 9 of the Constitution, to be known as Section 17, and which shall read as follows:

"The legislature may provide for the payment by the State of Minnesota of damages to growing crops by hail and wind, or either, and to provide a fund for that purpose, including the necessary expenses of giving effect to this act, may impose a specific tax upon lands the owners of which, at their option, have listed the same with county auditors for that purpose, and no payment shall be made of any such damages except from the fund so provided."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. This amendment, if adopted, will authorize the state to act in the collection and disbursements of a fund for the payment of damages to growing crops by hail or wind, or either. This fund is to be created and maintained by a specific tax imposed by the legislature upon the lands of such persons only as shall voluntarily list the same with their respective county auditors for that purpose. Under it, there could be no tax for such purpose imposed on the lands of any owner who does not consent thereto. The legislature is also authorized to include in the fund to be raised by taxation of such listed lands the necessary expenses of administration of the law. The adoption of the amendment will authorize the legislature to direct that the taxing machinery of the state be used to levy and collect the tax necessary to raise such fund, and to provide for the disbursement of same by the officers of the state; but any payments to be made by the state by reason of damage by hail or wind will have to be made from such fund, and from no other. In the settlement of any such damages, the state would assume no liability beyond the amount of such fund and could not further be rendered liable.

PROPOSED LAW RELATING TO THE TAXATION OF RAILROAD PROPERTIES.

CHAPTER 9, LAWS OF 1912.

AN ACT providing for the taxation of railroad properties, the collection and times of payment of such tax and repealing acts inconsistent therewith.

Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota.

Section 1. Every railroad company owning or operating any line of railroad situated within, or partly within this state, shall, during the year 1912, and annually thereafter, pay into the treasury of this state, in lieu of all taxes and assessments, upon all property within this state, owned or operated for railway purposes, by such company, including equipment, appurtenances, appendages and franchises thereof, a sum of money equal to five per cent of the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within this state.

On or before August 15, 1912, and annually thereafter, each such railroad company shall make, according to law, a true and just return of all such gross earnings for the six months ending June 30th, next preceding, and the said tax of five per centum thereon shall become due and be payable to the State of Minnesota in manner provided by law, on September 1st, next thereafter.

On or before February 15, 1914, and annually thereafter, each such railroad company shall make, according to law, a true and just return of all such gross earnings for the six months ending December 31st next preceding, and said tax of five per centum thereon shall become due and payable to the State of Minnesota in manner provided by law, on March 1st next thereafter; and the payment of such sums at the times hereinbefore set forth shall be in full and in lieu of all other taxes and assessments upon the property and franchises so taxed; provided nothing in this act shall be construed as modifying any agreement entered into between any municipality within the state and any railroad company relating to the payment of local taxes or assessments.

The lands acquired by public grant shall be and remain exempt from taxation until sold or contracted to be sold or conveyed as provided in the respective acts whereby such grants were made or recognized.

Sec. 2. The term "the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within this state," as used in Section 1 of this act is hereby declared and shall be construed to mean, all earnings on business beginning and ending within the state, and a proportion, based upon the proportion of the mileage within the state to the entire mileage over which such business is done, of earnings on all interstate business passing through, into or out of the state.

Sec. 3. All acts and parts of acts not inconsistent herewith, regulating the payment, collection, time of payment, enforcement or reports involving the amount of taxes upon the gross earnings of railroad companies within this state or providing penalties for the non-payment of such taxes, are hereby made applicable to this act so far as may be, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 4. Upon failure to pay the amount of such taxes legally due, upon the respective dates hereinbefore set forth, collection thereof may be enforced in addition to existing remedies in a civil action brought in the name of the State of Minnesota in the district court of any county.

Sec. 5. Before any railroad company shall be heard to contest or continue to contest the validity of this act or any part thereof, such railroad company shall as a condition precedent thereto, pay into the treasury of the State of Minnesota the amount of taxes due or payable from such railroad company under the existing tax laws of this state.

Sec. 6. This act shall be submitted to the people of this state for their approval or rejection at the next general election for the year 1912.

The secretary of state shall cause to be printed in bold type upon the ballot used in voting for state officers or upon a separate ballot, if so provided by law at the said election, in manner conformable with the requirements of the general election law, the words, "For increasing the gross earnings tax of railroad companies from four to five per cent, and providing for the payment of the gross earnings tax semi-annually.

Yes........................

No........................

And each voter voting at such election shall designate his vote by a cross mark made opposite one or the other of the words "Yes" or "No" and the said election shall in all respects, conform, as far as may be, to the requirements of the general election law, and the returns of said election shall be made, canvassed and certified, and the results thereof declared in the manner provided by law for returning, certifying and canvassing votes cast for state officers.

Approved June 15, 1912.

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The law now in force relating to the taxation of railroad properties is Chapter 253, Laws of 1903, ratified by the people at the general election of 1904. The only language of the proposed law of 1912 which differs from the old law of 1903 is set forth above in bold-faced type. Under the present law, the taxes upon railroad property are computed at the rate of four per cent upon the gross earnings of the company owning or operating the same. The purpose of this new law is to change that rate from four per cent to five per cent and to make the taxes payable semi-annually on March 1st and September 1st of each year, instead of annually, as under the existing law.

AMENDMENT NO. III.

Mortgage Loans to State.

This amendment, if adopted, will permit the permanent school and university fund of the state to be invested in first mortgage loans upon improved and cultivated farm lands of the State. This amendment would change Section 6, Article 8, of the Constitution, which now reads as follows:

"The permanent school and university fund of this state may be invested in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, but no such investment shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this state; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the bonds to be issued or purchased would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed fifteen per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than three per cent per annum, nor for a shorter period than five years, nor for a longer period than twenty years, and no change of the town, school district, city, village or of county lines shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of the issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds."

So as to read as follows:

"Section 6. The permanent school and university fund of this state may be invested in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, and in first mortgage loans secured upon improved and cultivated farm lands of this state. But no such improvement shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this state; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the bonds to be issued or purchased would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed 15 per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall any farm loan or investment be made when such investment or loan would exceed 30 per cent of the actual cash value of the farm land mortgaged to secure said investment; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than 3 per cent per annum, nor for a shorter period than five years, nor for a longer period than twenty years, and no change of the town, school district, city, village or county lines shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The present constitution authorizes the investment of the permanent school and university funds of this state in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state. This amendment, if adopted, will permit, in addition to the foregoing investments, said school and university funds to be invested also in first mortgage loans secured upon improved and cultivated farm lands of this state.

AMENDMENT NO. IV.

Commission Form of Municipal Government.

By this Amendment it is proposed to amend Section 36 of Article 4 of the Constitution, which now reads as follows:

"Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent, and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor, or chief magistrate and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

So that said Section 36 of Article 4 of the State Constitution shall read as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city, consistent with and subject to the laws of this states, as follows:

The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper for a charter board of not to exceed fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the judges of the district court of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated as the legislature may determine for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall within six months after its appointment return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of a proposed charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof, and, if the same be not ratified may thereafter in like manner return other draft or drafts of a proposed charter until one thereof shall be ratified as herein provided.

Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next general or special election thereafter, and if a majority of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, or at such other time, if any, as shall be specified therein, become the charter of such city or village as a city and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; provided that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established.

Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof.

Such charter so deposited may be amended, or revised, by proposal therefor made by said board and accepted by a majority of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next general or special election thereafter; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of said board relative to submitting amendments of such charter to the vote of the people and shall provide that upon application of ten per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village by written petition, such board shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition.

The board above provided for, shall be permanent and all vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members.

Any such charter or any amendment or revision thereof may provide for the commission form of government having legislative and administrative powers, or it may provide for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses and, if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by a general vote of the electors, or it may provide for any other plan or system of municipal government; provided that the plan or form of government so adopted shall not violate the constitution of the state as hereby amended.

In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto, or revision thereof to the qualified voters of such city or village, any alternative section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter, or any amendments thereto or revision thereof.

The legislature may provide general laws relative to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty thousand and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty thousand and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all cities of either class, or if so specified in the law, to all cities in either such class not having charters adopted pursuant to this amendment, but no general law limited to one or more of said classes of cities shall apply to any city existing under a charter framed under this section of the constitution unless such general law shall be made applicable to such city by a declaration, therein, naming the city. Such laws shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for.

The legislature shall enact any and all laws necessary or proper to carry into effect the provisions of this amendment, and shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. No local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and object of this amendment is to permit cities already incorporated and villages desiring to be incorporated as cities to include in their charters, or by amendment or revision thereof, a commission form of government having legislative and administrative powers. The amendment sought enlarges the power of such municipalities in framing their own charters, reserving to the legislature, however, the authority to prescribe the general limits within which the said charters shall be framed.

A commission form of city government is generally understood to include the following characteristic features: 1. A small governing board; 2. The exercise of both legislative and administrative duties by this board; 3. The division among the members of the board of the administrative work of the city by departments over which a single member of the governing board of the city has control; 4. The election of the members of the governing board by all of the voters of the city and not by wards, precincts or districts. 5. The adoption of methods of direct popular control over the action and the continuance in office of the members of the governing board.

AMENDMENT NO. V.

County Superintendents of Schools.

By this Amendment it is sought to enlarge the provisions of Section 7, of Article 7, of the Constitution, which Section now reads as follows:

"Section 7. Every person who by the provisions of this article shall be entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office which now is, or hereafter shall be, elective by the people in the district wherein he shall have resided thirty days previous to such election, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, or the constitution and laws of the United States."

So that it will read as follows:

"Section 7. Every person who by the provisions of this article shall be entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office which now is, or hereafter shall be, elective by the people in the district wherein he shall have resided thirty days previous to such election, except county superintendents of schools who shall be required to have educational and professional qualifications to be determined by the legislature, and except as otherwise provided in the constitution, or the constitution and laws of the United States."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and effect of this amendment is to authorize the legislature to require educational and professional qualifications, in addition to all the other qualifications now required by law, for any person seeking the office of County Superintendent of Schools. As the Constitution now stands, any legal voter is eligible to the office of County Superintendent of Schools.

AMENDMENT NO. VI.

State Senate.

Section 2 of Article 4 of the Constitution now reads as follows:

"Section 2. The number of members who compose the senate and house of representatives shall be prescribed by law, but the representation in the senate shall never exceed one member for every five thousand inhabitants, and in the house of representatives one member for every two thousand inhabitants. The representation in both houses shall be apportioned equally throughout the different sections of the state, in proportion to the population thereof, exclusive of Indians not taxable under the provisions of law."

It is proposed to substitute therefor the following:

"Section 2. Number of members. The senate shall be composed of sixty-three (63) members, and the house of representatives shall be composed of such number of members as may be prescribed by law. The representation in both houses shall be apportioned as nearly equal as practicable, throughout the different sections of the state in proportion to the population thereof, exclusive of Indians not taxable under the provisions of law. Provided, however, that a county may be divided into several legislative districts, but no county or any of the parts thereof shall ever constitute or be a part of more than seven (7) senatorial districts and not more than seven senators shall ever be apportioned to any one county."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and object of this amendment is to limit the State senate to sixty-three (63) members and to prevent any one county having more than seven (7) senators.

Yours respectfully,
LYNDON A. SMITH,
Attorney General.

OLD CITY OF TANGIER

Second Only to Damascus in Its Antiquity.

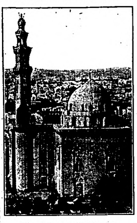
Cosmopolitan in the Extreme Are the Crowded Thoroughfares of the Moroccan Capital—Market Place Especially Is Worth a Visit.

Tangier, Morocco.—Damascus is said to be the oldest inhabited city in the world, and Tangier is generally acknowledged to be the second oldest. Tangier lies on the north coast of Morocco, facing the straits of Gibraltar, and is about thirty miles from the great fortress. A steamer plies between Gibraltar and Tangier.

When the steamer arrives at the Moorish capital, there is a great hubbub. Native boatmen fight and squabble among themselves as to who shall get the most passengers. Being a stranger you would perhaps rather stay on board the steamer than trust yourself to the dusky, howling mob. But there is no other way of getting ashore, and as the view of the town is limited from the deck of the steamer, you find yourself bundled into a corner of the boat and the Moorish boatmen pull for the shore. As soon as you set foot on the landing stage, you are besieged by a crowd of guides. It is in vain you tell them their services are not required, and so in order to get peace you hire the services of a big lanky Arab. You need not follow him where he wants you to go, but as you have provided yourself with a guide book, you make your own plans.

Tangier is a cosmopolitan city. Here, jostling together in the crowded thoroughfares, may be seen the stately Berber, with long white robes, Arabs from the desert, Soudanese with thick lips, and complexions black as Egypt's night; wild-looking Riffs from the hills; Jews, Spaniards, Germans, Britishers and Europeans, bent on business or pleasure.

The streets are very narrow, and the shops are very small, so small that the merchant can easily reach all round his store without rising from his seat on the floor. The Moors have a proverb which says—"It is no use running if you can walk, and it is no use walking if you can stand, and it is no use standing if you can sit; it is no use sitting if you can lie down, no use lying if you can sleep," and they live up to the proverb. One merchant we saw in a sandy store was lying sound asleep, covered with flies, his dirty feet stuck in a box of dates.



Finest Mosque in Tangier.

No visitor to Tangier should miss seeing the "Soho" or market place, especially on a Thursday, as that is the busiest day of the week. Long caravans of camels bring in the articles of trade from the interior, while donkeys and mules bring the products of the gardens and orchards. Passing through the main gate your ear is greeted with a loud "Balak! Balak!" which is Arabic for "look out," and a dusky Moor rushes past you with a shoulder of beef on his back. Roosters crowing, ducks quacking, chickens cackling, announce the poultry market at hand, where with much gibberish and noise they conduct their business. Next you pass into a large open space where all around on the ground are heaps of all kinds of fruit—watermelons and pomegranates, oranges and grapes, prickly pears and peaches and many other kinds, for Morocco is a fruitful country. Moorish women, with great broad sun-bonnets, attend to the fruit and keep the flies off. Nearby is the charcoal burner who has brought his load in from far out in the country. Here is an old woman sitting beside a bundle of sticks which she has probably carried on her back for five or six miles. Many of the Moorish women have a hard time of it. I have seen a mother, with a baby slung across her breast, trudging along the road with a great load of sticks on her back, which she was taking to the market to sell, to keep his lordship, her husband, in plenty.

DR. CALDWELL'S GUIDE TO GOOD HEALTH

The natural tendency of people in this busy age to demand of the digestive organs more than nature intended they should perform, frequently results in throwing the entire digestive system into disorder. When the stomach fails to freely digest and distribute that which is eaten, the bowels become clogged with a mass of waste and refuse which ferments and generates poisonous gases that are gradually forced into the blood, causing distress and often serious illness.

Dr. W. B. Caldwell says that if the bowels are kept regular there will be much less sickness, and prescribes a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin that is most effective in relieving any congestion of matter in the bowels. This compound can be bought in any drug store under the name of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, and costs only 50 cents a bottle. It is mild in its action, pleasant to the taste and positive in effect, a dose at night bringing relief next morning, naturally and without griping or other discomfort. A bottle of Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in the house will save many times its cost in doctor bills. Your name and address on a postal to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 203 West St., Monticello, Ill., will bring a free trial bottle by return mail. Adv.

Accelerated Brain Activity.

In the early days of Wisconsin, two of the most prominent lawyers of the state were George B. Smith and I. S. Sloan, the latter of whom had a habit of injecting into his remarks to the court the expression, "Your honor, I have an idea." A certain case had been dragging along through a hot summer day when Sloan sprang to his feet, with his remark, "Your honor, I have an idea."

Smith immediately bounded up, assumed an impressive attitude, and in great solemnity said:

"May it please the court, I move that a writ of habeas corpus be issued by this court immediately to take the learned gentleman's idea out of solitary confinement."—Popular Magazine.

The lady, however, was less careful than Eloise had been, and dropped the saucer and broke it.

"You needn't mind about that," said the little diplomat, without an instant's hesitation. "I don't think grandma has a cup to match the saucer. If she has I will go right home and break it myself."—Popular Magazine.

"I suffered from indigestion and constipation, loss of weight and appetite, bloating and pain after meals, loss of memory and lack of nerve force for continued mental application.

"I became irritable, easily angered and despondent without cause. The heart's action became irregular and weak, with frequent attacks of palpitation during the first hour or two after retiring.

"Some Grape-Nuts and cut bananas came for my lunch one day and pleased me particularly with the result. I got more satisfaction from it than from anything I had eaten for months, and on further investigation and use, adopted Grape-Nuts for my morning and evening meals, served usually with cream and a sprinkle of salt or sugar.

"My improvement was rapid and permanent, in weight as well as in physical and mental endurance. In a word, I am filled with the joy of living again, and continue the daily use of Grape-Nuts for breakfast and often for the evening meal.

"The little pamphlet, 'The Road to Wellville,' found in pkgs., is invariably saved and handed to some needy patient along with the indicated remedy."

"There's a reason."

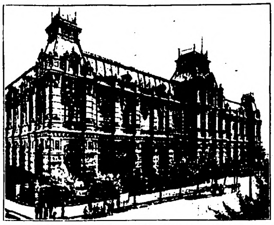
Things Queer and Curious

Reservoir of Buenos Aires



This palatial-looking building furnishes one of the greatest surprises to the visitor to Buenos Aires. It is called the Aguas Corrientes, and though it looks like a great art museum, in reality it is but the outer shell of the pumping station which distributes the filtered water to the 1,320,000 people of the city.

WONDERFUL ROCK CHIMNEY

What is perhaps the most wonderful rock chimney in the whole of America is shown in the photograph here reproduced. It stands near High Bridge, Ky., itself one of the wonders of the world. This natural chimney is seventy-five feet high and only four feet by six at the base. It is so delicately moulded that it looks as if a push would send it over, yet it has successfully defied the storms of unknown ages.

FIRST SCULPTOR IS FOUND

Dr. Capitan, professor at the College de France, has had the good fortune to discover the remains of the first sculptor in the world, buried at the foot of his masterpiece, executed some 30,000 years ago.

Last year the archaeological world was deeply stirred by the unearthing under the pick of Dr. Lalanne of Bordeaux of a prehistoric Venus, carved in the native rock of a grotto near Lauselle. The rocky pocket in which this momentous discovery was made was filled with archaeological deposits, bones of animals, especially reindeer, which were common game for the hardy hunters of the Magdalenian epoch in Dordogne. Many utensils of the hunter, the fisherman and the artist were also found—delicate chisels, scrapers, harpoons and spears of bone.

Most of these, evidently, could only have served for the hunt, the house, the kitchen or warfare; but there were others mingled with them, exceptionally big and heavy—whose use remained unexplained until the dust of ages having been cleaned from the wall of mained unexplained from the wall of the grotto, five life-sized horses, cut in the rock in a free and living workmanship, were revealed. The excavations were continued and soon a spade struck on the skull of the author. The old artist lay crouching on his left side, something in the attitude of Rodin's statue, "The Thinker," which stands outside the Pantheon at Paris.

WAKENING CHURCH SLEEPERS

One John Rudge is on record as having bequeathed to the parish of Trysull, in Shropshire, England, twenty shillings a year to be paid to "a poor man" employed to go about church in summer to keep people awake.

At another English church, that of Acton in Cheshire, it was the practice during the middle of the last century for one of the church wardens to proceed through the church during service with a huge wand in his hand, wherewith, if any one of the congregation were observed to be asleep he was instantly awakened by a tap on the head.

In Warwickshire a similar custom prevailed. A warden bearing a stout wand shaped like a hayfork at the end stepped stealthily up and down the nave and the aisles and whenever he saw an individual asleep he touched him so effectively that the nap was broken—this being sometimes accomplished by the application of the fork to the nape of the neck.

A more playful method obtained in another church. The beadle went about during service carrying a long staff, to one end of which was attached a fox's brush and to the other a knob. With the former he gently tickled the faces of the women sleepers, while with the knob he bestowed a sharp rap on the heads of male offenders.—Harper's Weekly

WRONG BRIDE AT THE ALTAR

The story of a bridegroom finding the wrong bride at his side for the wedding ceremony was told in Bombay high court a short time ago. A member of the religious sect known as the Jains, being forbidden by Jain custom to seek for a bride for himself, commissioned another man to find one. After a selected bride had been "viewed" by the Jain at a railway station he agreed to pay the prospective bride's father $1,000, and $30 to an intermediary, and part of the money was paid in advance. At the ceremony the "bride" wore a heavy veil, and when the Jain asked her to remove it he found that someone had been trying to pass off a substitute for his bride. These adventures are not uncommon in India. Sometimes a very ugly girl is passed off on a bridegroom.

KANGAROO HERD IN ENGLAND

It would probably surprise most people if walking through an English wood, they should suddenly come upon a herd of kangaroos. Yet there is such a herd near Tring. Some 20 years ago a few of these marsupials were turned loose in the woods a few miles outside that town called the High Schrubbs. The underwood formed good shelter for them, and there they have made their home and rear their offspring. A similar attempt was once made at Beeston castle, but they died off for lack of cover, and the experiment has not been repeated.

GOLD TEETH ARE PAWNED

"You would be surprised at the funny things that are pawned at the local pawnshops and second-hand stores," said Detective Frank Elvin of Louisville. "The last thing that you would suppose a person to pawn is the filling out of his teeth, but it is a common practice. They don't get much, but I guess 'every little bit helps' with them when they need the money."

LIGHTNING MUSSED HIS HAIR

Edward Kones prefers in the future to comb his own locks and wishes lightning would leave them alone. When his house in Sullivan county, Pa., was struck the electricity plowed small furrows about his skull, taking the hair off his head in every place it touched. His injuries, besides destroying his hair, which will not come in, it is said, were slight.

NOBILITY IN DISTRESS

The Countess De Costiere, who was discovered hawking watercress in the streets of Rennes, has several aristocratic comrades in toil. The Vicomte de Bardoneuche, whose title is 800 years old, is employed as a lamp cleaner at the Gare du Nord, Paris, and thankful to earn three francs a day. A carman sentenced last year to ten years' imprisonment for cutting his wife's throat proved to be the Comte de Gastebled. Another nobleman, the Vicomte Tiburce de Reignier, who has run through a couple of fortunes, works as a navvy. Pierre de Medici, beadle in a church in Belgium, can trace his descent without a flaw from a member of the famous Italian family who came to Belgium in the fourteenth century.

HAS SEA GULL FOR A PET

Louis H. Hamm of Bangor, Me., has a strange pet, a sea gull, the survivor of a pair, which has attracted a great deal of attention on his lawn at his home. The other gull, when it was found that it could fly, left its home at Hamm's, and since then has been swimming in the pool at Chapin park and also in the stream. Both birds were well tamed, and their strange appearance excited a great deal of comment. Early in July Hamm w[illegible] a fishing trip. He found the two young gulls, then just a week old. He captured them and brought them home, and until one of them flew away, they have been well contented, catching angleworms and finding their own living on his lawn.

INVENTION OF LAZY MAN

We see stories of the meanest men, the stingiest, the laziest, etc., but Klamath Falls, Ore., has a combination of laziness and inventiveness hard to excel.

This genius likes to sleep with his windows up and curtains as well, but he does not enjoy getting up early. His bedroom faces the east, and his slumbers are disturbed by the early rising sun. He has attached weights to the curtains which are released when the sunbeams strike a sensitive plate attached to machinery which acts on a pawl, releasing the weights. To check the sudden stop of the weights so that there is no unnecessary jar or noise in the working of the mechanism a spring holder has been attached.

RELIC OF ILL-FATED QUEEN

This prayer-book, "Office de la Divine Providence a l'Usage, de la Maison Royale de Saint Louis, a Saint Cyr et de Tous les Fideles"—has been identified as a relic of Marie Antoinette, and contains probably the last words she wrote before her execution on October 16, 1793. The inscription, which is on the back of page 219 and in the ill-fated queen's writing, reads (translated) "This day, October 16, at 4:30 in the morning. My God! have pity on me. My eyes no longer have tears to shed for you, my poor children. Good-bye, Marie Antoinette." The prayer-book, which has been in the museum at Chalons-sur-Marne for a long while and has only just been recognized for what it undoubtedly is, was printed in Paris in 1757. There are various signs of mutilation during the revolution; the fleur-de-lis on the binding has been erased and ornaments have been defaced.

Study Navigation on Roof

British lads have an unequalled chance to learn how to be sailors in the excellently equipped school of navigation in Glasgow. Notable among its novel pieces of apparatus is a large deviascope mounted on the roof. This instrument, which consists of a revolving platform, mounted on a central axis, and operated by a steering-wheel and gearing, is designed for experimental work in adjusting a ship's compass for the various magnetic forces which are generated in the steel hull of a ship. The several fittings near the compass are of gun metal, to eliminate as much as possible the erratic effects of extraneous metal, and to admit of delicate experiments being made. The students stand on the platform and are carried round with it as it revolves, so that the operation of "swinging ship" is made as nearly practical as is possible on shore.

Only Woman's Chamber of Commerce

INSTEAD of light talk, things substantial are now discussed at social gatherings, meetings of card and other amusement clubs, and society hops in Guthrie, Okla., for the organization of the Women's Chamber of Commerce of that city has attracted all the feminine contingent to work together for the advancement of the city in every way that women can be useful. The idea is spreading over the state and in other portions of the southwest, and the result is certain to be that the Guthrie organization, formed during the last week, will become the nucleus of a chain of such women's business organizations.

"You would indeed be surprised," said a woman, returning home from the weekly session of a bridge club, "if you could have heard us discussing the needs of the city, suggestions for the betterment and advancement of Guthrie and ararngements for the raising of funds to assist in the campaign Guthrie is making to win back the location of the state calital. Why, I don't hear a word of gossip the entire afternoon, for all the ladies were so interested in the Chamber of Commerce."

"We formed the Chamber of Commerce," said Mrs. Rebecca L. Finch, the president, after much discussion among ourselves as to the best method of helping in the campaign for the capital, in establishing the bath houses and sanitarium in connection with Mineral Wells Park and in bringing additional industries to the city. We find that a majority of the women of a city have plenty of time to take part in civic affairs and that all they need is an invitation to participate. We started the organization with about 50 women a week ago, and now we have a membership of 400, and it is still growing.

Nor is the membership confined to the society set and members of the clubs. It takes in the women who are the most prominent in church work. It includes the girls in the stores and offices, the telephone girls, numerous stenographers, newspaper women, women physicians, and will eventually include through auxiliaries the wives of the farmers throughout the county. In fact, the farmers' wives are already organizing district auxiliaries to the County Farmers' Institute, and the Women's Chamber of Commerce will work in connection with these through a system of committees.

There are to be many committees, for in this manner the work is to be divided. Mrs. Finch, the president, is now working on her list of standing committees and expects to announce them in the near future. Prominent among them will be three consulting committees—one each for the Guthrie Chamber of Commerce (the men's organization), the women's federation of clubs, and the auxiliaries to the County Farmers' Institute. Practically all the work looking toward the city beautiful is to be done through the separate women's club organizations, of which there are ten in Guthrie.

The first undertaking to raise funds for the state campaign will be a chicken dinner. This does not mean a hot meal served at noon in a stuffy storehouse somewhere about town, with the women tired out and weary from cooking and serving, but instead a cold dinner served under the biggest cottonwood tree in the state, in Mineral Wells park, with the entire city and country side invited to eat from plates of fried spring chickens, piled high and in tempting rows down a table long enough to seat hundreds at one time. And to prepare the dinner it will be easy, for each member of the Women's Chamber of Commerce will bring two fried, and there will be chicken to spare. Should the people of other cities who read this like to participate in the eating they will be welcome.

And then, this fall, after the weather is cooled by September frosts, there is to be a street fair, managed by the women. Not one of the old style variety, where some traveling organization furnishes all the side shows and other amusements, but a home made affair where the ladies themselves will preside in the booths and where every side show feature will be native and every actor and other participant be a Guthrie citizen. A circus parade with callithumpian features will be one day's program and on the next the other extreme—the society ladies in flower bedecked automobiles and carriages. And even for the balloon ascensions it will not be necessary to employ a foreigner, for home talent will "go up" and "make the drops."

The officers of the Women's Chamber of Commerce are Mrs. Rebecca L. Finch, property owner and school teacher, president; Mrs. Robert B. Huston, whose husband was a rough rider captain killed during the Spanish-American war, and Mrs. Ed. C. Petersen, vice-presidents; Miss Catherine Cassidy, treasurer, and Mrs. C. M. Sarchet, secretary. On the executive committee, in addition to the president and secretary are Mrs. Webb Baker, Mrs. Will K. Patterson, Mrs. U. M. Vampner, Mrs. E. J. Allen and Miss Elizabeth Melvin, a practicing physician.

In order to enlist all the women of the city in the new organization, a six days' contest was arranged and two soliciting committees named, with Mrs. John R. Abernathy and Mrs. M. Cassidy as captains. The former's committee was known as the "Red Rustlers," and the latter's as the "Blue Boosters." As a result of their work between 400 and 500 women are now enrolled as members.

Assisting Mrs. Abernathy to get more members, if possible, than Mrs. Cassidy's committee were Mmes. Chester A. Marr, E. C. Petersen, Will K. Patterson, H. M. Doyle, Rebecca L. Finch, Will Barwick, C. M. Sarchet, Emma Miller J. D. Reed, E. J. Allen, O. W. Barnett and Misses Elizabeth Melvin, Florence Adler and Catherine Cassidy. On Mrs. Cassidy's committee were Mmes. G. A. Hughes, Tell Walton, B. J. Waugh, J. E. Nissley, Ira Longaker, R. N. Dunham, E. A. Douglas, N. M. Carter, L. J. Parker, J. W. Speer, P. D. Piersol, J. E. Donnesky, E. D. Walton, John J. Hildreth and Miss Petersen.

To help the women of Guthrie raise money for the state capital campaign the wives of the farmers in the country surrounding are preparing to entertain the people of the city at a lawn social some moonlight evening in the near future, on the campus in front of the farm residence of Fred L. Wenner, two miles east of the city limits. To make the trip to the farm an easy one so far as the roads are concerned, the farmers of the community are now building a good road for the entire distance, so that the automobiles and other vehicles will encounter no difficulties.

It is the intention of the Women's Chamber of Commerce to file application immediately for membership in the state and national associations of commercial clubs and chambers of commerce, and delegates will be elected to represent the women in both organizations. Atrrangements will be matured to encourage formation by the women of commercial clubs in the other cities of the state, and assistance will be given to the Guthrie women whenever it will be desired.

Practically every state in the Union is represented in the membership of the Women's Chamber of Commerce. Oklahoma being only 22 years old, the residents as a rule have come here from other states. The main offices of the organization represent five separate states. Mrs. Finch is a native of Mount Pleasant, Ia.; Mrs. Huston of Worcester, N. Y.; Mrs. Petersen of Milwaukee, Wis.; Miss Cassidy of Scranton, Kan., and Mrs. Sarchet of Petersburg, Ill. Six foreign countries also are represented in the membership.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE IN SESSION.

Lore of Hand in History

Significant Symbols That Always Have Had a Deep Purpose and Meaning.

When a man is not telling the truth he is apt to clench his hands, as few men can lie with their hands open.

A man who holds his thumb tightly within his hand has weak will power. Strong willed persons hold their thumbs outside when shutting their hands.

Shaking hands when greeting was originally an evidence that each person was unarmed.

Among the savage tribes when a man holds up his hands it is a sign of peace, an evidence that he is unarmed or does not intend to use weapons. An outlaw says, "Hold up your hands!" meaning thereby to make victim powerless to resist attack.

When a man kisses the hands of a woman he expresses his submission. This is also the idea when kissing the hands of kings. By this act their superiority is acknowledged.

When an oath is taken it is done by raising the right hand or having it upon a bible.

In the consecration of bishops, priests and deacons and also in confirmation the laying on of hands is the essence of the sacramental rite.

A bishop gives his blessing with the thumb and first and second fingers. In this the thumb represents God the Father, the first finger is the emblem of God the Son and the second finger stands for the God the Holy Ghost, the three together symbolizing the Holy Trinity.

The wedding ring is placed upon the third finger of the woman's hand to show that after the Trinity man's love, honor and duty are given to his wife.

Besides the deaf and dumb there are many people, notably of Latin and Semitic races, who talk with their hands.

You probably have noticed that the aged negro whose death is noted by the Associated Press is never less than 115 years old.

MUCH LIKE CURIOSITY SHOP

Doctor's Collection of Gifts Included All Kinds and Varieties of Queer Things.

In an alcove off the doctor's office was his curiosity shop.

"Contributions for my poor patients those things are," he said. "Every doctor who is known to have a large charity pratice is the recipient of many gifts which he is requested to distribute among needy patients. Some folks find that the easiest and most satisfactory way to dispense charity is through a doctor. No other agent they could employ knows so well what is needed and who needs it. Better results could be obtained, however, if the givers would only consult me before sending in their donations.

"All the junk in this room is of little or no use. Maybe I can dispose of it some time, but so far I haven't been able to. Funny and pathetic little stories are attached to some of the gifts. Here is a wooden leg. It is the gift of a man who died about six months ago. It was his wish that some other legless man should wear his leg. Plenty of men coming out of hospitals need new legs, but unfortunately that man possessed such extreme length of limb from the knee down that I have not yet found anybody with a leg long enough to match it."

STILL SEEK "ROOT OF EVIL"

Philosophy Has Not Yet Convinced Men That Wealth Is Not Highly Desirable.

George W. Perkins said in New York the other day:

"Superfluous millions will only buy superfluities. Money is not the whole of life. I can wear only one suit of clothes at a time, eat only one meal at a time, and inhabit only one house at a time; and when I die I can't take a dollar with me."

This remark of Mr. Perkins' was quoted to Samuel T. Johnson, the Columbus capitalist, by a reporter, together with Thoreau's famous saying: "Men labor under a mistake. The better part of the man is soon plowed into the soil for compost. By a seeming necessity they are employed as it says in an old book, laying up treasures which moth and rust will corrupt and thieves break through and steal."

Mr. Johnson listened with a smile. He stood in his office in his shirt sleeves, studying the tape that streamed from a ticker.

"That is all good, straight talk," he said, "and every syllable of it is true; but you can take my word for it, young man, money ain't going out of fashion just yet, all the same."

Poor Woman.

If a woman cannot make her mistakes charming she is only a female.—The Tatler.

SUCCESS FOLLOWS JUDICIOUS FARMING

IN WESTERN CANADA IT IS CERTAIN.

The story of the Big Farmer in Western Canada, and the immense profits he has made in the growing of grain, has been told and retold. He has been found in all parts of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. His splendid farm buildings have been pictured, his traction outfits described and his princely surroundings, resultant of his success in growing grain, have been portrayed by letter, press and camera. It certainly is not to his discredit that by successfully applying common sense and up-to-date methods to the conditions that climate, a good soil, and splendid market have placed at hand, that he has made the best use of them. He is not too proud to admit that he came to the country a very few years ago handicapped as to money, leaving behind him unpaid mortgages in his old home land (which are now wiped out), and he is still today the same good-hearted fellow he was in the days that he had to work for a neighbor, while the neighbor broke the land on his homestead, which went to make up the settlement duties.

Then, there, too, is the farmer and the farmer's son, already wealthy, who has bought large holdings in Western Canada, in either Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, who has made forty to one hundred per cent. on his investment, whose big grain crops and whose immense cattle herds are helping to improve the country. Health and strength, energy and push, and bull dog grit are as essential in Western Canada as in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Iowa, or any of the states from which so many of these people come, and then, when you have added to that a fair amount of means, with which to make a start, the land which is only waiting for the skill of the husbandman will quickly respond.

But there is the smaller farmer, the man who has not made sufficient in four or five years, that he might comfortably retire if he felt like it. There are many of them in all the three Provinces. It is not the less to his credit that he has earned his homestead by the three years residence, that he is free from debt, and has a reasonable bank account. He, too, came to the country handicapped by debts, and with very little means. He is contented, has a good home, land free of encumbrance, some stock, and with good prospects. One of these writes: "I formerly lived near Dayton, Ohio, on a rented farm, had as good a chance as the average renter, but after ten years of hard work, satisfied myself that if I ever expected to secure a home, I would have to undertake something else. Hearing of Western Canada, I investigated, and seven years ago last Spring settled in a homestead and purchased (on time) an adjoining half section, arriving with a carload of household effects and farm implements, including four horses and three cows, and $1,800 in money—my ten years' work in Ohio.

"The first year our crops gave us feed, the second year 100 acres of wheat gave us $1,800; no failure of crop since starting here. I have now 22 head of horses, 15 head of cattle, and 35 hogs. We own 1,120 acres of land, and have same all under cultivation. Was offered at one time $35.00 per acre for a half section where we live, and all the other land could be sold today on present market at $30.00 per acre. Should we care to dispose of our holdings, could pay all debts and have over $30,000 to the good, but the question is where could we go to invest our money and get as good returns as here?

"We have equally as good, if not better prospects for crops this year, as we had three years ago, when our wheat reached from 30 to 48 bushels per acre. I never believed such crops could be raised until I saw them myself. I had 15 acres that year that made 50 bushels to the acre. Our harvest will be ready by the 12th. We have this season in crop 400 acres of wheat, 125 of oats, 90 of flax, and run three binders, with four men to do the stooking.

"We certainly like this country, and the winters, although the winters are cold at times, but we do not suffer as one would think. What we have accomplished here can be duplicated in almost any of the new districts. If anyone doubts anything I have said in this letter, tell them to come here, and I can prove every word I have written."

The name of the writer can be had from the Superintendent of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, who can give the names of hundreds of others equally successful. Adv.

HARRY E. IVES

Harry E. Ives, republican nominee for clerk of the district court, has been a resident of what is now Pennington county, continuously since 1883.

He was appointed clerk of the district court for the newly created county of Pennington by the board in November, 1910, and we think he has made good as an official. He has attended strictly to the duties of the office, has been courteous and obliging, has a good understanding of the duties, has been impartial, and has honestly administered the duties of the office, and is, we think, fairly and justly entitled to an election. He was nominated in the republican primaries on Sept. 17, winning over three opponents by a large plurality. We think we can easily promise the voters of Pennington county that if they elect Mr. Ives they will have a clerk of court who will attend strictly to the duties of the office in an efficient, honest and impartial manner.—Thief River Falls News-Press.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 30th day of September, 1912.

(SEAL) B. E. BURKEE,
Notary Public, Pennington County, Minn. My commission expires Dec. 5, 1917.

All political workers in Minnesota report slim attendance at meetings in the country districts. The average citizen is willing to pay to hear a good address, but when some people offer their services gratis—well, the farmers are very busy with their crops, etc.

We are in receipt of a season's pass to the Northwestern Products exposition to be held in Minneapolis November 12 to 28. This exposition is put on by the states of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Idaho, Washington, Oregon, and the territory of Alaska. It is a cooperative enterprise put on by those states to show our people that they can do better in the American northwest than they can in Canada.

Failure to ratify the proposed seven senator amendment to the state constitution, which is to be voted upon in November, means that within the space of a few years control of both branches or the legislature will be handed over to the large cities of the state. In New York and Illinois representation is limited, or else control would long ago have passed to New York and Chicago, and Minnesota should emulate these older states. At the election this fall every voter should cast his ballot in favor of the seven senator amendment. — St. Peter Herald

Constitutional Amendments and Public Schools

Two of the amendments to the constitution to be voted on at the general election November 5 have a direct relation to the public schools and education. One amendment provides for a state one mill tax for roads and bridges. As a general state policy this proposed amendment is of vast importance to every citizen and every interest in Minnesota, It has a direct relation to the rural schools and to the movement for consolidation. When we have better public roads there will follow as a direct result an improved rural school, A statewide movement which has the effect of improving our highways will promote the use and value of the public schools.

Another relates to the office of county superintendent of schools. It provides for educational and professional standards for that office. The county superintendents now serving are in favor of it. Teachers and educators believe it wise and will support it. There is no opposition to it from any known source. This standard prevails in many states, and Minnesota should adopt it. I hope that all voters who are interested in the administration of public schools and in making the county superintendent's office more efficient will vote YES on this amendment.

Prepared by C. G. Schulz, superintendent of public instruction, St. Paul, Minn.

Increase in Railroad Gross Earnings Taxes

By far the most importat question to be voted upon by the voters at the election in November is the proposed increase of railroad taxes. Railroads pay taxes upon their gross earnings, the present rate being four per cent, and the proposed increase fixes it at five per cent. The question of making the increase was submitted to the voters by the legislature at the recent special session and was the most important piece of legislation passed by the extra session.

The railroad tax proposition appears in black faced type upon the separate state ballot provided for the constitutional amendments. It is the third proposition upon the ballot but is not designated by a number for the reason that it is not a constitutional amendment. It appears between numbers two and three of the proposed constitutional amendments. Every voter should vote in favor of the increase. Its adoption by the voters will increase the state revenues from railroad taxes approximately one million dollars per year. In order to carry this proposition it must receive the affirmative vote of a majority of all those who vote at the election, whether they vote upon the proposition or not. The failure to vote on it will have the same effect as a vote against it. The first attempt to increase the gross earnings tax from three to four per cent was defeated because voters failed to vote upon the proposition and it had to be submitted a second time two years later, the state losing two million dollars in revenue as the result of the carelessness of the voters. That should not be allowed to happen this time.

The Best Family Newspaper

One of the modern problems that confront the conscientious homemaker is the wise choice of a daily newspaper. The ideal family paper must be clean; free from vulgarity and sensationalism; yet must offer something of interest to every member of the household, besides printing the latest news of the whole world in reliable and attractive form. A large contract, you will say. Yes, but an increasing number of readers seem to be convinced that The Chicago Record-Herald fairly comes up to the specifications. This great daily has made tremendous strides in the last year or two without lowering its standards one iota.

Business and professional men have long regarded The Record-Herald as the best paper for their own reading, because of its splendid news service and the reliability of its financial, agricultural, and market reports. Young men perhaps find its greatest attraction in its excellent sporting department, covering the whole range of the world's sports. Wives and mothers emphatically prefer The Record-Herald on account of its feminine departments—its daily recipes and menus, its daily fashion hints, the People's Institute of Domestic Economy, and the many good things in the illustrated Woman's Section in the Sunday paper. Children enjoy the Zoo-Illogical Snapshots and other clean comic pictures with the bright stories for boys and girls every Sunday. And all the family together can enjoy Arthur M. Evans' home travel articles, Mr. Kiser's humor and verse, Ralph Wilder's cartoons and other daily features outside the news columns.

The Chicago Record-Herald has every right to call itself the best all-around family newspaper in the west.

When Moses Lived

"When did Moses live?" asked the Sunday school teacher.

After the silence had become painful the teacher commanded: "Open your Old Testaments. What does it say there?"

"Moses, 4,000," replied one of the boys.

"Now," said the teacher rather sharply, "why didn't you know when Moses lived?"

"Oh, pshaw," exclaimed the lad, "I thought that was his telephone number."

All of which shows how modern ideas change the old fashioned, just as golden grain belt beers have improved the standard of beer making. Alex Thompson, agent, Crookston. adv

A Genuine Service

"I believe," says an old subscriber, "that every time a Youth's Companion enters a home it does that home a genuine service." That describes the purpose of the publishers exactly. The paper is not filled with mischievous or idle thoughts to fill an idle hour. It provides a healthy pastime, recreation that builds up. It is to the minds of eager and impressionable young people what sound athletics are to their bodies.

At a cost of less than four cents a week The Youth's Companion opens the door to a company of the most distinguished men and women in America and Europe. Whether they are revealing the latest discoveries in science, or describing great industrial achievements, or telling of their wanderings in strange corners of the world, or feeding the imagination with rare stories, they are giving Companion readers the best of themselves.

Seven serials at least will be published by The Companion in 1913, and nearly 200 other complete stories, in addition to some 50 special contributions, and a treasure box of sketches, anecdotes, expert advice as to athletic sports, ideas for handy devices round the house and so forth—long hours of companionship with the wise, the adventurous, and the entertaining. Announcement for 1913 will be sent with sample copies of the paper to any address on request.

Every new subscriber who sends $2.00 for the fifty-two weekly issues of 1913 will receive as a gift The Companion window transparency and calendar for 1913, the most exquisite novelty ever offered to Companion readers; also, all the issues of The Companion for the remaining weeks of 1912, free.

AGREED WITH THE ASP.

The Frenchman Got Around the Law Against Hissing.

A gentleman who had been unceremoniously hustled out of a Paris playhouse because he hissed when the curtain fell on the second act brought an action for damages against the manager of the said house.

The court decided in favor of the hissing gentleman, adding that if a spectator is allowed to show his delight by indulging in applause his heighbor has also the right to show disapprobation in an audible fashion.

But the law in France was not always so tolerant. In the middle of the seventeenth century it was strictly forbidden to hiss in a playhouse, and in every theater there were a number of "gardes Francaises" with strict orders to arrest any person infringing the law.

But the French are not easily put down by silly regulations, and whenever they see an opportunity they attack the authorities with that fearful weapon ridicule. In this case such an opportunity came at the Comedie Francaise during the performance of "Cleopatra," a play by Marmontel.

It was a badly written, dull work, and the people were waiting for a chance to give vent to their opinion. At last the chance came The management had ordered a mechanical asp for the great scene in the final act, when Cleopatra puts an end to her life.

The actress raised the asp, which started hissing, whereupon a spectator rose to his feet and cried: "The asp is quite right. We all share his opinion!" Roars of laughter greeted this joke, and as it was foreseen that a similar scene would take place every night the piece was withdrawn from the repertory.

Aristhiou.

In a small village in Switzerland is a comfortable old inn much frequented by English, and the menu generally includes one dish supposed to be specially British. Though the orthography is peculiar, the meaning is generally obvious—as, for example, "rost bif roll," "rumesteck" but "aristhiou de mouton a l'Anglais" was puzzling. The first word has a distinctly classical appearance, which suggested a Greek origin. But when the dish appeared the meaning flashed into the guests' minds. "Aristhiou", was the Swiss chef's attempt to render phonetically the words "Irish stew."—Manchester Guardian

"He is sprouting wings right now."

His Wife's Comment on the Result of His Hunting Trip.

The braggadocio of the common variety of husbands generally sooner or later falls before the keen insight that most women have of human nature in general and bragging husbands in particular. A witty southern woman was married to such a man, who, though invariably unsuccessful as a hunter, was continually boasting of his killings.

As he was returning home one evening after an all day hunting trip it occurred to him that the usual accompaniment of an empty game bag was not in accordance with his oft boasted skill as a hunter and that his wife would again have the joke on him, so he went to the market and purchased two brace of partridges.

As he entered the house he threw them on the table with great eclat and exclaimed, "Well, you dear old doubter, you see that I am handier with the gun than you give me credit for being, after all; now don't you?"

Milady picked up the birds and examined them very carefully. As she looked up after the examination he said:

"Fine birds, my dear—very fine birds, are they not?"

"Robert," responded the wife, turning up her nose, "you were only just in time in shooting those birds today. Tomorrow it would have been everlastingly too late."—St. Louis Republic.

The undersigned desires hereby to express thanks and appreciation to his friends throughout the towns of Pennington county for the excellent vote and support accorded my candidacy at the primary Sept. 17.

I appreciate especially the support tendered me by the women vote. Let us all join in the work of raising our schools to the highest standard of efficiency.

Trusting that I anew may merit your indorsement in order that the nomination tendered may result in my re-election at the polls on Nov. 5, I beg to re-affirm my devotion to the cause of education and pledge my best endeavor toward the upbuilding of our schools. Knowing the teachers, the conditions of our schools to some extent, and being in the work, I trust to be able if elected to serve, even to a higher degree than in the past, the people and our schools.

Yours fraternally,
E. A. MOSTUE.

APPETITE AND THE EMOTIONS.

Why Shouldn't One Eat, Even If Very Happy or Very Sad?

The following really happened on board a pleasure steamer in the Kyles of Bute. A young honeymoon couple were sitting side by side, gazing on the lovely scenery around them.

"Isn't it heavenly, George?" she murmured. "I feel thrills all over me."

Then without a pause, as if still carried away by the inspiration of the moment: "Dearest, if there are any left, I think I would like a chocolate."

No good reason exists why spiritual emotions should not make one hungry. The bride who demanded sweets was wiser than a girl who once remained starving and inconsolable in her room after the departure of her lover for India.

At last an amateur Hebe ventured upstairs with a cup of coffee and a plate of toast. Yielding to persuasion, the afflicted maiden was induced to eat and drink, and began to look somewhat less dejected.

"I believe I was dying for something all the time," she finally confessed; "but I was afraid to ask, lest people would believe me to be less unhappy than I really am."—Black and White.

Must Import Marriageable Girls.

The problem of finding wives has become a serious one in St. Petersburg. The male population exceeds the female by 124,000 in the Russian capital, and the authorities are weighing plans for importing prospective brides from the provinces. The need of wives, indeed, has led to the making of several fortunes in matrimonial agencies, heavy fees being exacted for pretty girls as wives from remote country places. The men outnumber the women in all classes in St. Petersburg, and at social affairs there are usually two men for every woman. Of course this is a truly delightful situation for the woman, but it is one that is multiplying jealousies between men and causing "affairs" with swords and pistols upon the field of honor. Social activities in St. Petersburg have been declining in interest because of the scarcity of women, whereas in all the other large cities in the empire women are much more numerous than men.

To the Voters

I wish to express to the voters of our county my appreciation of your splendid support give me at the primaries just held for Pennington county. The vote for the county attorney was as follows, to-wit:

For J. M. Bishop, republican candidate for county attorney 895 votes; O. A. Naplin, socialist candidate for county attorney, 170 votes; E. M. Stanton, democratic candidate for county attorney, 62 votes.

The above figures are absolutely correct. About 200 of my votes were given me by the farming community and the remainder of the vote by the city of Thief River Falls.

I will greatly appreciate a continuation of your splendid vote and support at the general election to be held on November 5, 1912.

Very sincerely yours,
J. M. BISHOP,
Republican Nominee for County Attorney for Pennington County, Minnesota.

America's Greatest Weekly
THE
TOLEDO BLADE
TOLEDO, OHIO
The Best Known Newspaper in the United States
Circulation 340,090
Popular in Every State
No Whiskey Advertising

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill its purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction readers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the farmers a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making the Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year. Sample copies mailed free. Address

The election proceedings of this year are so impressing the minds of young Americans that one pupil stated that "Morse elected the telegraph," meaning of course invented.

The seventh grade organized the "Talksum" literary society, with the following officers: President, John Steen; vice president, George Fricker; secretary, Olive Patterson; treasurer, Christina Pederson. Their object is to study the masters, current events, and then "talk sum."

County Superintendent Mostue visited school Tuesday morning.

The class studied the meaning of revolving.

Teacher (substituting for a few days)—"What is revolving continually?" (meaning the earth.)

Boy—"A revolver."

Geographical Distinctions.

Inhabitants of the Isle of Wight speak of "going to England" when they leave their own fragment of the kingdom. A patriotic Cornishman also "goes to England" when he crosses the Tamar. Similarly inhabitants of the Balkan peninsula talk of "going to Europe" when they leave their own corner of the continent—in curious contrast with the people of Great Britain, who regard themselves as both of and in "Europe," and it is only "the continent" that they visit. There is an old story of a Scottish minister who prayed for a blessing upon "the inhabitants of Great and Little Cumbrae (islands in the Firth of Clyde) and the adjacent islands of Great Britain and Ireland." Massachusetts people speak of going "down east" when they start for the Maine coast.

NOT VISIBLE TO ALL MANKIND

Sights and Sounds in the Cathedral of Men's Comradeship.

When you enter it you hear a sound—a sound as of a mighty poem chanted. Listen long enough and you will learn that it is made up of the beating of human hearts, of the nameless music of men's souls—that is, if you have ears. If you have eyes you will presently see the church itself—a looming mystery of many shapes and shadows, leaping sheer from floor to dome. The work of no ordinary builder!. The pillars of it go up like the brawny trunks of heroes; the sweet human flesh of men and women is molded about its bulwarks; strong, impregnable; the faces of little children laugh out from every cornerstone; the terrible span and arches of it are the joined hands of comrades; and up in the heights and spaces there are inscribed the numberless musings of all the dreamers of the world. It is yet building, building and built upon. Sometimes the work goes forward in deep darkness, sometimes in blinding light; now beneath the burden of unutterable anguish; now to the tune of great laughter and heroic shoutings like the sound of thunder. Sometimes in the silence of the night time one may hear the hammerings of the comrades at work up in the dome—the comrades who have climbed ahead.—From "The Servant in the House."

THE SPENDTHRIFT.

HE left so little, did you say?
He had so brief a time to stay
'Twas hardly worth his while to gather
Dross of our little earthly day.

The things that other people prize
He gave to others, being wise;
Being so heavenly foolish, rather,
That kept his gains for paradise.

Hardly a keepsake did he leave,
And all his gold was fugitive.
He kept those things that will not perish
For him the widow and orphan grieve.

He gave with a light laugh, indeed,
As he and gold were ill agreed.
Held it the poorest thing to cherish,
Save that it filled another's need.

He had his pilgrim's scrip of hope
And living waters in his cup.
The staff of faith that still suffices
The stumbling soul to lift it up.

Being so soon a traveler,
Of earthly things he had no care,
But on the road that's paradise's
He went the lighter, being bare.

—Katharine Tynan.

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE
BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

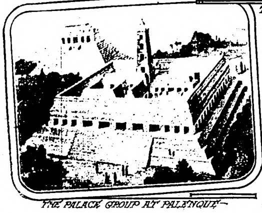
ANCIENT EMPIRE BURIED IN GUATEMALAN JUNGLES

EASTERN COURT OF MAYAN PALACE—

TEMPLE OF THE SUN AT PALENQUE—



THE PALACE GROUP AT PALENQUE—

THE recent experience of a young American in the great unknown district of Peten, in Guatemala, has furnished for science one of the most valuable records in years regarding the life of what is perhaps the most ancient race of human beings in existence.

In a trip just completed, in which he spent more than two years in the jungles of a territory whose mystery has for years repelled as well as attracted the adventurous, Russell Hastings Millward, America's youngest explorer, has not only captured the world's mileage record by traveling across more than three thousand miles of unknown country, but has opened up for the merchant and archaeologist a land whose wealth has hitherto only been guessed at, says the New York Tribune.

The popular impression that there is no more work for the twentieth century explorer could find no better refutation than in the exploit of this young man. The district of Peten, lying to the westward of British Honduras, between the Caribbean coast and the Bay of Campeche, has been known since time immemorial to all Central Americans as "The Mystery." There Millward has located lakes and mountains whose existence has hitherto been a matter of rumor only. For the first time a white man has penetrated those fastnesses and seen the ruins of temples and palaces which, now overgrown and buried under the foliage of the jungle, were once the centers of magnificent cities. He has not only outlined the extent of the once flourishing empire of the Maya race, but of importance to the world of commerce, he has practically opened up a new field whose riches will in a few years be one of the chief assets of the Guatemalan government.

To see this great unknown jungle with his own eyes, thus doing what no white man had ever done before, the young explorer left New York two years ago. He went straight to Belize, a town on the Caribbean coast of British Honduras, and there, while making arrangements for the expedition, he met Claudio Urrutia, government surveyor for Guatemala, who had made short trips inland and who helped get together men, pack animals and provisions for the plunge into Peten. Within a few weeks seventy-five men and a hundred mules had been collected and everything was in readiness for the start.

With all his knowledge of the natives, which he has acquired in numberless shooting and exploring expeditions in the Central American country during previous years, Millward had hardly reckoned upon the difficulties which faced him in his determination to see this land of mystery. "El Peten" it was called. What a paralyzing effect this unknown country would have upon his men he did not realize until he was some weeks on his way into the jungles. As settlement after settlement was left behind, and the train of mules and men moved further and further and further into the bleak uplands and through the tangle of dense swamps, the problem of averting the ever-threatening mutiny of the men became more pressing.

In contrast to the Caribs, or coast natives, the party contained a large percentage of Mayas of pure blood. Not only did they hold aloof from their Carib companions, but the consciousness that the white man was leading them up into the very country sacred according to tradition, to their ancestors, who would avenge the insult of trespass, terrified them. When night came on they were usually in a state of panic, and during the day the slightest accident out of the ordinary served to put them on their guard against some imaginary evil. Millward, talking to them in their language, tried repeatedly to discover the cause of their fears. The nearest he came to it was on one occasion when, ascending a ridge of land one noon, his machete men suddenly stopped and refused to go any further.

He had been busy with his instruments, and the first he noticed of impending trouble was when he looked to to see his four machete men huddled together talking in an undertone. He ordered them to go ahead, but they drew closer together, giving every indication of terror. Millward approached and asked them what the trouble was, but they refused to talk. Knowing that, while these Mayas might be coaxed or led almost anywhere, it was a waste of time to try to force them into anything, he calmly sat down and had a smoke. After a little the Indians also sat down and began to smoke, but all the while casting glances about them which seemed to indicate that they expected momentarily to be annihilated.

Finally, after using all the eloquence of which he was capable, Millward was able to calm their fears and get them to tell him the secret of their strange actions. Little by little he learned that years and years before—even the men themselves did not know how long—a great Maya hunter had been prowling through that part of the jungle. On the ridge of land before them some jungle beast leaped out upon him and killed him. According to the machete men, therefore, this hunter's fierce spirit was still roaming that hillside, raging in its agony and jealous of any mortal presence. Should a man attempt to go up that hillside and cross that ridge some horrible doom which only a spirit could invent would befall him. The men ended by flatly refusing to venture upon the highland, and at last Millward compromised by crossing the ridge alone and sending the Mayas around the hill to meet him on the other side.

But it was during the nights that the effect of the jungle upon the men was most evident. In some respects their superstitions were justified by the unearthly sunset effects and the appearance of the sky at night. The sun sank in a blaze of glory, followed almost immediately by the gloom of midnight. With the arrival of darkness the appearance of the constellations, large and wonderfully brilliant, was awe-inspiring. Far off on the northern horizon the north star appeared, while on the other side of the zenith sparkled the Southern Cross, for this strange country is said to be the only spot on the globe where this combination of planets is visible. The Mayas, alive to every new occurrence, were quick to notice this the first night when camp was pitched on an upland above the jungle, and for hours they discussed the phenomenon, squatting around the fires and looking up at the stars.

By this time the expedition had begun to penetrate the forbidden country, and almost immediately the first signs of an ancient civilization appeared.

One day Millward and his men, hacking their way forward, came out suddenly into a little glade in the woods, in the center of which stood a large cylindrical stone. Its sides and upper surface were a solid mass of exquisite carving, in which the figures of birds, flowers and the form of the serpent were repeated in a riot of designs. On the top of the stone a sloping basin was hollowed out, and from this ran a channel to the outer edge. There was no room for doubt that it was one of the ancient sacrificial stones of the Mayas, and that the natural glade in which it had rested for centuries was once the sylvan holy of holies of the Maya priests of the locality, where they "averted evil" to their people by human sacrifices.

It was the finding of this sacrificial stone that introduced the first of the stone villages. Although literally imbedded under the rank undergrowth of the jungle, enough was uncovered to show that at some time it must have been a place of importance. Ruined columns lay about, and great slabs of granite, some of them weighing many tons, were scattered in irregular heaps. The wavering lines of broken slabs and columns which in places showed through the foliage indicated the general outline of streets. In the decoration and carving of these slabs there was every mark of an art which, although in its form widely at variance with that of the Egyptians, is perhaps as old. There were indications, too, of a culture as ancient.

At the time of the conquest of the Mayas, in a warfare which began about 1540 and continued for years, a city called Tihoo, on whose site the Spanish Merida is now located, is supposed to have been the capital of the empire. The old Spanish chroniclers relate that the palaces and pyramids of the Maya city were so ancient that from the mounds built by the earliest inhabitants there grew trees a thousand years old. In Maya times each of the artificial mounds or pyramids was crowned by a temple. The massive stone blocks employed in the construction of these were used by the Spanish conquistadores in the erection of their own homes. Merida, in fact, got its name from the old Spanish city which was long known as the "Rome of Spain." Its unique replica in the new world was so filled with magnificent Indian temples and palaces that the dazzled Spaniards likened it to the old world city.

When Palenque, in the neighboring department of Chiapas, was discovered by a party of Spanish travelers in 1720 the existence of a Maya empire was unknown. There had never been any mention of its existence in the reports of the Spanish invaders, and there was no tradition even that it had ever been. Palenque is thought to have been abandoned as early as the twelfth century, and to this day it is not known by what name it was called.

If the feat of Millward in his two years of fighting the untrodden jungles and wastes of Peten had yielded nothing more than the knowledge of these old stone cities it would have been of priceless value, according to archaeologists, in making possible a study of Maya history and culture. So far they are almost as much a mystery as they were two hundred years ago. The elaborate carvings and petroglyphs which mark the buried temples and palaces are undecipherable, and what little history of the movements of the Mayas and their ancestors, their life and art, has survived has been only in the form of legends kept alive by obscure Maya tribes.

Mr. Millward's explorations have established the fact that the confines of the Maya empire extended far south of the belt of towns and cities whose ruins dot the northern coast toward the Bay of Campeche.

In the course of his explorations Millward came upon more than three hundred groups of ruins, which mark the site of what were once villages and towns of from 1,500 to 15,000 population each. The latter have all the characteristics of great centers of a highly developed life. As in the famous Palenque, many of the ruins in this hitherto undiscovered land which Millward penetrated are notable in their dimensions, decorations and suggestions of the high degree of civilization which created them. But as ever, owing to the superstition of the Mayas in his party, he was unable to give them more than scant attention.

For four months Millward and his men toiled through forests whose richness he declares is not even suspected by people familiar with adjoining countries. Immense mahogany trees of a size and quality unapproached by anything known to commerce grew on every side. Rosewood, ebony, cedar, logwood, chicle, cacao and rubber trees of dimensions unknown to the famous district of Quintana Roo, extended far northward into the districts which he afterward explored. Orchids of the most delicate hue, a half dozen of whose bulbs would make a small fortune for a Fifth avenue florist, trailed from the trees and dangled the path so as to be a nuisance.

Four months and a half from the time they left Belize, Millward and his men came out of the jungle at Laguna Carmen, near the Bay of Campeche, in the Gulf of Mexico. There they put in a month of good rest. Several of the men had died from fever and exposure, and a percentage of the mules had been lost. The trip, however, was a marked success. Preparations were at once made for the return trip to Belize, and for this Millward mapped out a route which would take him across about sixty miles further to the north.

It was when a month and a half inland on this second trip that there occurred one of the most important incidents of the enterprise. This was the discovery of four large and hitherto unknown lakes. Here, again, Millward found that their existence, if not their location, was already known to his Mayas under the name of "The Four Sisters."

Maya villages continued to dot the jungles as the party progressed eastward, and in all of them the explorer was well received. As Millward worked further on in the general direction of Belize, his destination, and began to approach the other coast he came upon occasional settlements of Caribs. In physique and strength he considers these men far superior to the Mayas.

The new territory, whose resources have been revealed through the enterprise of this young explorer, is believed to be one of the most valuable finds, commercially and historically, of many decades. The untold riches of its forests are not only accessible, but Mr. Millward is likely to prove to a large extent its developer as well as its discoverer, since he already is at work on plans for the establishment of a direct route overland from the Caribbean Sea to the Gulf of Mexico, which would open up the greaterp art of the region to travel and commerce.

Invention Came by Chance

Idea of the Sextant, Invaluable to Sailors, Result of Observation Made by Philadelphia Glazier.

The element of chance plays an important role in invention, and in no case is this more strikingly illustrated than in that of Thomas Godfrey, the American who improved upon the quadrant, or, rather, devised the sextant, the basic notion for which he got by noting the reflection of the sun from a pail of water.

Godfrey was a glazier by trade, but he had a taste for mathematics and was a man of some culture.

John Hadley had also invented a sextant, apparently a development of a suggestion of Newton's, found among his papers at his death. Godfrey anticipated Hadley by about one year, but for a long time his claims were not recognized, Hadley receiving the entire credit.

The glazier thus received his inspiration for the instrument that was to prove of such value to mariners: One day, while replacing a pane of glass in a window of a house in Philadelphia opposite a pump, he saw a girl, after filling her pail, put it upon the sidewalk. The observant glazier saw the sun reflected from the window on which he had been at work into the bucket of water. His mind quickly perceived the significance of the situation, and he was thus led to the design of an instrument "for drawing the sun down to the horizon," a device incomparably superior to any that had hitherto been used for the ascertainment of angular measurements.—Harper's Weekly.

The lives of men who have been always growing are strewed along their whole course with things they have learned to do without.—Phillip Brooks.

BEARS MEXICANS' PLEA TO PRESIDENT

Senor Zeferino Dominguez, a wealthy Mexican planter, as representative of land owners, agriculturists and other citizens of the twenty-seven states of Mexico, recently submitted to President Taft a plan which, he hopes, will bring peace, and insure, permanent freedom from unrest in his country.

Regarding his plans, Senor Dominguez said:

"The plan I have in view is that the land owners of Mexico join with the government in giving the poor people access to the land. At present 7,000 families own all the land in Mexico. There are 12,000,000 persons who own nothing and have no interest whatever in the land.

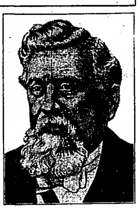
"The way to pacify the poor people is to give them an interest in something. As the situation stands, they can earn more in two hours' looting than in one year's work.

"The plan I offer includes also the establishment and maintenance of a strong army for defense and for the suppression of outlawry. We suggest that the army be a form of militia and that the soldiers, when not engaged in military duties, be employed on farms set aside for the purpose. As an inducement to men to enter and rmain in the service, each soldier would receive a small farm at the end of his term.

"The situation which confronts us in Mexico is this: We have a government which cannot control the rebels, and we have rebels who cannot defeat the government.

"Intervention would be disastrous to all. The United States might send an army of 500,000 men into Mexico; it might hold the City of Mexico and all the principal ports, but it will not hold the country. There are too many mountains and too many tribes."

PRESIDENT FALLIERES IS CALLED STINGY



President Fallieres is again being subjected to criticism on the score of parsimony. When, a few years ago, the king and queen of Norway were guests of the republic, an accident happened at Versailles which might easily have had fatal consequences for the queen and Mme. Fallieres.

The postillion who was riding one of the horses drawing the state landau, in which they sat, took too sharp a turn in crosing a bridge spanning the ornamental lake near Trianon, and fell with his mount into the water. Happily the carriage remained on the bank.

It was stated at the time that since M. Fallieres' installation the Elysee stable was farmed out, and that horses and servants were supplied by a contractor. Thus the accident was explained on the ground of the postillion's inexperience. M. Fallieres was then accused of farming out his stables in order to reduce the expenses of his occupation of the Elysee, and a part of the Paris press denounced his efforts to economize at the expense of the prestige of the republic.

Similar attacks are being made now in connection with the visit of the Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch, who, with his uncle, has been provided with vehicles of shabby appearance, poor-looking horses, and coachmen in ill-fitting old liveries.

M. Fallieres' popularity with Parisians is not enhanced by this official niggardliness at the Elysee, the blame for which is laid upon him. One paper says:

"The Chief Magistrate cannot urge the poverty of his allowance. Counting credits allocated to his civil list, he receives 1,200,000 francs ($240,000) a year, an amount sufficient to guarantee a certain magnificence in the reception and entertainment of the nation's guests."

WINS NOMINATION AFTER SIX DEFEATS

William Sulzer, representative in congress from New York city, was nominated for governor of New York state the other day by the Democratic state convention. It was the seventh time he had been a candidate for this nomination.

Mr. Sulzer was born in Elizabeth, N. J., March 18, 1863. His father, Thomas Sulzer, was a German patriot of the school of Sigel and Schurz, and after the revolution of 1848 was imprisoned. Escaping, he went te Switzerland, and came to America in 1851, settling in New Jersey. When William was a baby his parents moved to New York city, and his residence has never been changed since.

William Sulzer was graduated from Columbia college, where he studied law. He acquired a reputation as a speaker and debater in the Cooper Union Debating society. After graduation he took up the practice of law, and also entered actively into politics, his first public appearance being as a speaker for Cleveland in the campaign of 1884.

In 1889, young Sulzer was elected to the assembly from the old Fourteenth district, and was re-elected every year up to 1894. He quickly took a prominent position among the Democratic members of the assembly and his name is attached to many measures intended for the benefit of the people of the East Side, among whom he has always had a devoted following. In 1893 he was elected speaker of the assembly, being the youngest man, up to that time, who had ever held the office.

In 1904 Mr. Sulzer was elected to congress from the Eleventh district and has held the position since. He has been mentioned several times for speaker of the house.

RAJ RANA OF JHALAWAR A REFORMER

The Raj Rana of Jhalawar, whose portrait is herewith presented, is the representative of a most illustrious branch of the Solar race, the ruler of an important state, and a reformer who is endeavoring to introduce modern conditions without giving umbrage to the upholders of past traditions, than which, as we know, there is no more difficult task. The historian of India shows how the British conquered the peninsula from a number of races by converting the enemies of one period into the allies of the next; but it has never been made sufficiently clear that there was one race with which England never warred, the Rajputs of Rajasthan, "the Land of Princes." It was due to the wisdom of an ancestor of the Rana of Jhalawar, that the Rajputs sought and obtained an alliance and protection in the critical period of the eighteenth century, when the Marathas seemed for a moment likely to anticipate Great Britain in the unification of India. This prince was Zalim Singh Regut, and, practically speaking, ruler of Kotah for fifty years. Of him Colonel Tod, in perhaps the most entrancing work that any Englishman has penned on India, has given a vivid picture, as the wise man who conducted his country through the shoals and breakers of a stormy period, and his reflected glory descends on his successor, Bhawani Singh, the subject of this portrait.

RHEUMATISM A DISEASE OF THE BLOOD

The Treatment Which Is Most Successful Is Directed Toward Building Up and Purifying the Vital Fluid.

That rheumatism is a disease of the blood is shown by the fact that it is hereditary in certain families, and that there is a marked thinning of the blood immediately following its attack.

In the following brief statement are described symptoms which every patient will recognize and the means by which a cure was effected in this case is described with equal fidelity.

If you are suffering from any form of rheumatism with loss of flesh and strength, and thinning of the blood, the remedy that was so effective here deserves a thorough trial.

"About fifteen years ago," says Mrs. Rhoda Pettit, of Louisville, Neb., "after exposure to dampness and wet and being in a run-down condition from overwork, I began to suffer from inflammatory rheumatism. Both my father and mother were sufferers from the same disease. My right side was afflicted and had I no use of my right limb. The cords of the limb seemed to be drawn up. Often the pains would shift from one part of the body to another and, while they were worse in my right limb, they were very severe through the small of my back. There was a sensation as though I was being cut with a knife. My limbs and feet were swollen so that I could not put on my shoes. I suffered intense agony all of the time and when the attacks were severe I was confined to bed for weeks. My stomach was in bad shape. I was troubled with heartburn and gas. I lost weight and my strength was all gone.

"I took medicine from a doctor and tried several other remedies and liniments but nothing helped me until I tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I had taken them only a short time before I could feel the new blood and after a fair trial I was able to walk. The pills made me a strong, healthy woman and I am entirely cured of the rheumatism. I know I would not be living today if I had not tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. The genuine are sold only in packages bearing the full trade-mark. Adv.

Optimists.

For non-committal brevity of speech, commend us to the Yankee lord of the soil. One such, who was obliged to make a physician daily visits, had an unvarying answer to the question, "How do you feel today?" "Well," he would reply, showing as little interest in the subject as possible, "I ain't no wuss." Further than that he wished to say nothing, and it took the cunning of a serpent to discover his real feelings. A man who was knocked down in the street by a snowslide was assailed by a sympathizing crowd with condolence and question. "Did it hurt you?" inquired one of his rescuers as he brushed the snow from the clothes of the well-powdered victim. "Well," was the cautious answer, "it ain't done me no good."—Argonaut.

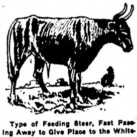
GROUND GRAIN IS FAVORED

Animals Seldom Masticate Food Thoroughly as Should Be When Fed in Natural State.

(By M. COVERDELL.)

Where stock eat the grain in its natural and unbroken state, it is very seldom masticated as thoroughly as it should be. Most animals are naturally gluttonous, and in their haste to consume grain they swallow much of it without crushing or grinding it.

This wields a detrimental effect on the stock that is twofold. The grain in this solid condition cannot impart proper nourishment to the animals and the digestive and assimilative organs will be overtaxed and impaired in their efforts to convert this coarse feed into substance that will build up the tissues of the body.



Type of Feeding Steer, Fast Passing Away to Give Place to the White-Faced Shorthorns.

Aside from these two detriments we must consider that unground feed causes a waste by passing whole and practically unchanged through the animal; or, if the stock do eat an amount large enough from which sufficient nourishment can be extracted, it means about twice as much must be fed to be converted into bone and muscular tissue.

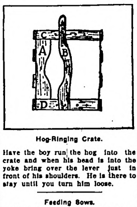
The failure of the stock to masticate unground grain will also cause a lack of digestive secretions or juices so essential to this process; then, in order to supply this deficiency, the animals have a craving for water and a large quantity is thus consumed—much more than is necessary—and yet, this enormous amount of water has not the desired effect in promoting digestion as do the natural juices that should have been brought down by thorough mastication.

On the other hand, where the grain is ground before feeding, it is fine and dry, adhering to the animal's mouth when it takes a bite, till it has to chew before it can swallow. This avoids the drawback above mentioned, and by the grain being well crushed it insures thorough digestion; later, its pulverized condition renders it immediately available for the assimilative organs to convert into nourishment—bone and muscle—without overtaxing any of the organs of these two systems and at the same time it will render less of this ground feed necessary to keep the animal in prime shape.

RINGING HOGS IS MADE EASY

Device Shown in Illustration and Described in Detail Has Proven Quite Advantageous.

This is the device I use in ringing or snouting hogs, and would not do without it. With a boy's help one man can ring as many hogs with this device as two men without it, and do it much easier. Make a strong hog crate and in one end nail a board shaped like A in the drawing. Bore four holes in crosspieces C and D to adjust the yoke to the size of hogs, writes A. G. Sigmund of Wetmore, Kan., in the Farmers' Mail and Breeze. Out of a white elm board or other stout wood, shape a lever like B and bolt to D at the bottom. A pin holds the lever in place at the top. The crate is left open at the other end.



Hog-Ringing Crate.

Have the boy run the hog into the crate and when his head is into the yoke bring over the lever just in front of his shoulders. He is there to stay until you turn him loose.

Feeding Sows.

When a sow's udder gets out of condition on account of irrational feeding there is no question but that her milk will be abnormal also. Heavy corn feeding right up to the time of farrowing will bring about an unhealthy condition in many cases, particularly when a sow is fat and lazy and does not take much exercise. To prevent it there is nothing better than the use of laxative foods, like bran or oil meal.

Gates for Sheep Farm.

Every sheep farm should be well provided with gates; bars are too dangerous as well as too wasteful of time in letting them down and putting them up. There is great risk when sheep are crowding through bars, only partly let down, that a leg may be snapped. A good, light gate may be made for 50 cents more cost than a set of bars and if properly hung will last a great many years.

Various Entrances May Be Conveniently Fixed Without Much Trouble—Method Shown.

(By J. U. GOODWIN.)

Entrances to lanes, sheds, barn buildings and all other places where two or more entrances stand side by side, may be conveniently arranged with little trouble. As shown in the illustration, the two gates enclose three entrances.

To open the center entrance the gates are separated—one pushed to the right and one to the left—which makes the opening nine feet wide.

To open the entrance to the right-hand the gates are pushed to the right.

The entrance to each of the side pens is only five feet, the rest of the entrance being planked up.

This arrangement is particularly convenient for buildings so arranged that the center or driveway is to be open, and the sheds on each side are wanted with doorways to admit stock, etc.

In the latter case the doors may be made solid, so as to exclude rain, snow, and cold winds.

Fig. 1, A, are pieces set in between the battens of the gates and extending six inches. These extensions, one being on each gate, enter the open space on the opposite gate, thus holding the gates firm in place.

D, in Fig. 2, shows the method of latching the gates together.

This latch is fastened between the battens of the gates and catches automatically when the gates are closed.

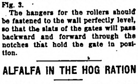
To uncatch, press down on the catch at D.

In Fig. 2, C is the part planked up. B B shows the position of notched pieces, a side view of which is shown in Fig. 3.

The notches in this piece are a little larger than the slats of the gates.

These notches rest over the gate slats and are fastened to the post dividing the pens.

These notched pieces are strengthened and held in place by an iron rod three-quarters of an inch in diameter and arranged as shown in Fig. 3.



Good Gate Arrangement.

The hangers for the rollers should be fastened to the wall perfectly level, so that the slats of the gates will pass backward and forward through the notches that hold the gate in position.

ALFALFA IN THE HOG RATION

Nothing of More Importance Than Feeding at Least Cost—Excellent for All Live Stock.

While the hog is a debt payer, it is necessary for the breeder, farmer or feeder to manage so as to make the greatest amount of money at the least cost in the quickest time, says the American Swineherd. To do this there is nothing of more importance than feeding alfalfa. The Illinois Farmer's institute states that alfalfa is the most important single product of the soil, a product that has been neglected to the detriment of every community.

Alfalfa as a storage plant for general use has no equal. It is easily grown, it is hardy under trying circumstances, and while it is an excellent food for all kinds of stock, and especially the hog, it at the same time through natural process improves the soil by drawing from the atmosphere nitrogen. Alfalfa is a gold mine which can be worked most successfully by the use of swine feeding.

Hog Tonic.

If hogs are to be kept in good physical condition they should have access to a supply of charcoal, ashes and salt whenever they feel a craving for them. If a little sulphur is mixed with the ashes and salt it will prove beneficial.

Breeding Stock.

Breeding stock should never be saved, as their offspring are always restless and chasing about the pasture, because a quiet disposition is no small factor in the production of cheap pork.

LIVE STOCK NOTES

Be careful about feeding the horse new oats at first.

The sow should be fed but little immediately after farrowing.

Raise hogs, but remember you must raise forage crops for them.

The most practical time for weaning a colt is when about five months old.

The only remedy for the cattle shortage is for the country to go back to cattle breeding.

The box stall is a better place for horses that require rest on account of lameness than a grass field.

The cheapest method of producing meat of any sort in almost every case is by keeping the animals on pasture.

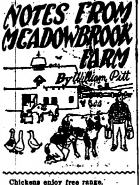
The man who has a good bunch of cows or stock cattle properly located these days has no cause to worry.

To avoid worrying the colt, tie with in sight of dam and give some grain. Be sure that the colt has plenty of exercise.

Plans are essential to success in feeding stock of all kinds. Mix some brains with your feed and get results.

Provide warm quarters for the litter of fall pigs. Don't let the youngsters get a backset. Keep them growing.

If you are about to buy a horse, don't judge the horse by the opinion the owner has of him—it may not agree with yours after you become the owner.



Chickens enjoy free range.

Keep all sleeping places dry.

Mulch the rhubarb with manure.

Clipping horses' legs is not a good practice.

As distributors of fertility on the farm, sheep have no equal.

The wolf is a noted enemy to sheep; so is the "tired" shepherd.

It is time now to prepare the ewes for the next mating season.

Give your boy a flock of lambs and make a business man of him.

Sheep prefer short fresh grass to that which is tall and coarse.

Indiscriminate crossing leads to failure; make a line and hew to it.

Salt the weeds in the sheep pasture and watch the sheep clean them up.

It is bad policy to wean young pigs suddenly and put them on cows' skim milk.

Sheep ought to be kept because of the influence which they exert upon fertility.

Try to arrange to give each horse on the farm a three weks' vacation on grass.

The time spent in company of the sheep will pay and success will crown your labors.

If winter dairying is to be the most profitable it must be planned for definitely in advance.

The young pig wants to be got out into the sunshine and on to the dirt as early in life as possible.

Sheep at six years of age lose their teeth; hence they should be fattened and sold before this period.

Feed your rams generously but not too well. An overfed pampered ram is of no earthly use anywhere.

Have you considered how impossible it is for the half starved ewe to properly nourish her offspring?

This is a good time to put a square of tar paper in the bottom of each nest box for the benefit of lice.

Do not neglect to provide clean water for the poultry. Dirty water is dirty at any season of the year.

If the strawberries have been picked two seasons, spade up the beds and sow the land for some late-planted crop.

Know whether a plant requires a situation dry or moist, hot or cool, sunny or shady to know where to put that plant.

The lady-bugs or lady-birds are small turtle-shaped beetles which feed upon plant life in both the larval and adult stages.

Some plants cannot be thoroughly weeded with the hoe. In these cases every weed should be carefully plucked by hand.

Plant a cover crop in the orchard. Rye, barley, wheat and oats are good non-leguminous plants, but the legumes are better.

The farmers and fruit growers of this country are losing over one billion dollars annually by reason of the ravages of insects.

A dense fleece is valuable not alone for the increase in quantity of wool, but for the protection that it affords the animal from the elements.

If lice and mites fail to pay enough attention to other treatments, try burning them out with a torch. But don't burn down the house in order to get the vermin.

As a rule, it will not pay to hold the pig crop for prices to rise, unless they are being held. While a few feeders win out in playing the market game, many more lose.

Corn and alfalfa usually can be attended to when the wheat needs no care, thus distributing the labor more equitably throughout the season.

Mushrooms, on account of the amount of nitrogen they contain, approach nearer to animal food than any other vegetable product. An analysis made by Prof. Attwood shows that mushrooms contain 3.5 per cent. proteids.

Anything that will destroy weeds is worthy of the farmer's attention; anything that will maintain the fertility of the land demands his attention. Sheep will do both, and are therefore entitled to the attention of every farmer.

It has been demonstrated to be an almost universal fact that topping cotton does not do the work it is intended—to check the growth of the leafy upper portion of the plant. Instead, in most cases, it has a tendency to cause the renewal of this growth and in the very place where it will do the most harm by shading the bolls in the middle of the stalk.

Turkeys relish green feed.

Dig holes for trees in the fall.

Vetches make good sheep fodder.

The scrub purebred is the greatest failure.

Cattle scarcity is still with us and will remain for the next two years.

A piece of alum in the drinking water will prevent throat and lung diseases.

Your horse may intend to please you, but does not understand your wishes.

Get on friendly terms with those little pigs. Study them. Kindness counts.

Own sheep for the good of your bank account and for the destruction of weeds.

Corn and alfalfa make a combination that cannot be equaled on the dairy farm.

Whenever hogs are confined to one feeding place a feeding floor should be provided.

A lump of sugar or a bite of apple will do more in the training of a colt than a whip.

Farming on a business basis eliminates small mules just as it displaces small horses.

A lamb that is large and strong will stand weaning better, and also winter better.

Many practical hog raisers are now using artificial wallows, built of either cement or lumber.

A good plan, followed by many poultrymen, is to mark the early moulters for breeding stock.

For aphis on sweet peas, use insect powder or tobacco dust, applying with a small bellows.

Five or six pounds of corn are usually required to produce a pound of pork in dry-lot feeding.

If pigs are well fed they will usually wean themselves at the proper time, without any trouble.

The key to the bee business is bee forage and the best bee forage known at present is sweet clover.

If a man cannot feed hogs as well as they should be fed, he ought to sell them to a man that will.

Sheep are a persistent agency of improvement to the soil of the farms on which they are kept.

The levelness with which a horse walks is one of the best evidences that his legs work in harmony.

To thoroughly clean milk utensils they first should be rinsed with cold water to remove all particles of milk

Gather up the dead branches and burn them, as they are apt to harbor bark beetles, one of the worst orchard pests.

Move the colony houses and brood coops on fresh ground every day or two, and the chicks will grow faster.

A chicken takes naturally to having feed handed it, but the turkey is almost self-supporting until cold weather.

Turkeys always find a ready sale and are almost clear profit. There is always a demand. The market is never glutted.

The little chicks do best on corn bread made of sour milk, soda and cracked corn. They should be fed on something clean.

The eggs from the matured hen will hatch better and produce stronger chicks than the eggs of pullets. They are usually larger, too.

Unlike other poultry, the turkey never has been thoroughly domesticated, but has remained practically a wild bird in its requirements.

The meat of yarded poultry is always more tender than that of fowls having free range, due to the extreme muscular development of the latter.

Never let young chickens perch until their breast bone can endure the strain, as a crooked breast bone decreases a fowl's market value, as well as breeding value.

A yield of 12 tons of silage may easily be obtained from one acre of corn. Allowing 30 pounds of silage as a daily ration, one acre of corn will furnish four cows with silage for 200 days.

New England dairymen find it profitable to feed grain to dairy cows even when they are on June pasture. Cannot we afford some corn fodder for our western cows now that pastures are drying up.

Chickens should have good, sweet feed to make good eggs, the same as a cow should have sweet grains to make good sweet milk. How quick a dairyman moves his cows when he finds garlic in his pasture.

Breeding poultry may serve a good purpose in the pot, but they should not be permitted to propagate their kind. Scrub hens should be mated to pure bred males so that the breeding has an upward rather than a downward tendency.

The cow that sucks herself is in almost every case a good milker. If you have one of this kind, try this before you sell her: Ring her as you would a bull and in this ring hang another, forming two links of a chain. It stops the sucking in most of the cases.

HIS MIND UP IN THE CLOUDS

Professor Imagined Appeal Was From Fido, and the Situation Became Embarrassing.

A great lover of animals, Professor Dryasdust was much given to having his pet dog sitting beside him at meal times eating tidbits from his own little plate.

The other evening he was at a dinner party, and his partner was a very great lady, who was proud of her title.

But the professor paid absolutely no attention to her. His mind had switched off on to some abstruse point and he was lost to the world over the problem.

The duchess did not approve of this, and presently, to attract his attention, she pulled him gently by the sleeve.

Then the professor woke up. Grabbing a half-picked chicken bone from his plate, he thrust it under her startled nose.

"Don't bother just now, Fido!" he said curtly. "Here, take this and go and eat it on the mat, like a good doggie!"

JUDGE CURED, HEART TROUBLE.

I took about 6 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills for Heart Trouble from which I had suffered for 5 years. I had dizzy spells, my eyes puffed, my breath was short and I had chills and backache. I took the pills about a year ago and have had no return of the palpitations. Am now 63 years old, able to do lots of manual labor, am well and hearty and weigh about 200 pounds. I feel very grateful that I found Dodds Kidney Pills and you may publish this letter if you wish. I am serving my third term as Probate Judge of Gray Co. Yours truly,

HANDS ITCHED AND BURNED

Abbotsford, Wis.—"My son had eczema on his hands for about one year. The eczema started with a rash. His hands were sore so he could not close them, and when he wet his hands they hurt him so he could hardly wash. His hands itched and burned just terrible and if he would scratch them, they would break out into sores. He could not get any rest or sleep, and his hands looked quite bad.

"We had medicine and salve and it kept getting worse all the time. I got some Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and after washing his hands with the Cuticura Soap and putting some of the Cuticura Ointment on two times a day and tying cloths on them for about six months they got well and have not broken out since. Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured him entirely." (Signed) Mrs. Lawrence Kiehl, Feb. 13, 1912.

WOMAN SICK TWELVE YEARS

Wants Other Women to Know How She Was Finally Restored to Health.

Louisiana, Mo.:—"I think a woman naturally dislikes to make her troubles known to the public, but complete restoration to health means so much to me that I cannot keep from telling mine for the sake of other suffering women.

"I had been sick about twelve years, and had eleven doctors. I had dragging down pains, pains at monthly periods, bilious spells, and was getting worse all the time. I would hardly get over one spell when I would be sick again. No tongue can tell what I suffered from cramps, and at times I could hardly walk. The doctors said I might die at one of those times, but I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got better right away. Your valuable medicine is worth more than mountains of gold to suffering women."—Mrs. BERTHA MUFF, 503 N. 4th Street, Louisiana, Mo.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

RICH ORE YIELDS.

Iron Drift 200 Feet Wide Encountered on Cuyuna Range.

Brainerd.—The event of the week in Cuyuna iron range circles was the rich strike made at the Kennedy mine of the Rogers, Brown Ore company at Cuyuna, when a drift 200 feet wide was uncovered in the west eighty, showing up a fine quality of ore. It is estimated there are two million tons of ore in the body, much of it assaying 62 per cent. This insures a full force at the mine through the winter.

A. J. [illegible] of Duluth has a drill on the [illegible] in the west half of the southeast quarter and the east half of the southwest quarter of section 22, township 47, range 29. William C. Hunt has filed a release of option to Sylvia J. Cook, the land being in the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 25, township 53, range 32.

[illegible] W. Pott and associates have placed a drill on the Earl Archibald forty in section 3, township 47, range 28, adjoining the Joseph Rudger forty on which the Hewitt Exploration company has an option and is drilling. The same company is reported to have bought the Sauls eighty at Bay lake on which it has been operating a drill for three months. The options were issued by F. L. Pott and by him assigned to the various drilling companies.

The [illegible] Mining company, which has Minneapolis directors and stockholders, has released options to lands in sections 1, 27, 21, 11, 4, 17 and 19, township [illegible], range 29.

Many residents of Brainerd will attend the Cuyuna Mille Lacs company excursion to the mine on Sunday and enjoy their first ride on the Cuyuna Northern railway, an extension of the Northern Pacific from Deerwood to the Cuyuna Mille Lacs company mine. A fish feed and a bear barbecue will be one of the features. A section of the Third regiment band of Duluth will furnish music.

The first ore of the south range was hoisted this week by the Barrows mine of the Virginia Mining company at Barrows, six miles south of Brainerd. It is of good quality and comes from shaft No. 2, where traces of copper were found. The manganese finds made at the Cuyuna Mille Lacs & Iron Mountain Mining company mines continue to attract the attention of mining men and ore merchants.

CHEMIST UNCONSCIOUS.

Federal Expert Probably Robbers' Victim.

St. Paul.—Dr. George C. Goode, who is a supervising chemist of the marine hospital service, Washington, D. C., was found unconscious at Ninth and Rosabel streets and remained for hours in a comatose condition. The police are inclined to believe that Dr. Goode had been waylaid and robbed, as a leather case in which he carried valuable papers belonging to the United States government, was missing. No trace of it has been found. They also point to the fact that no money or watch was found on his person at the time he was found in the street, which would hardly be likely for a man of Dr. Goode's prominence.

The locality in which he was found is in the one part of the city, outside the residence district, and the police are at a loss to understand how he came to be there unaccompanied. Many theories have been advanced as to how he came to be in this part of the city, but none seems plausible to the police except that he was possibly lured there for the purpose of robbery.

FRAUD IS ALLEGED.

Kimball, Minn., Man Arrested by Postoffice Inspector.

Minneapolis.—David Stanley, of Kimball, Minnesota, was arrested in Minneapolis by Postoffice Inspector Hughes on a charge of using the mails to defraud.

Stanley is the inventor of a coupling device and submitted a sample of his appliance to Secretary Cooley of the safety appliance department of the interstate commerce commission, asking for an indorsement. Mr. Cooley reported that the device was no better than others in use.

It is charged that Stanley used the letter head obtained from the commissioner and forged an indorsement, taking this way of securing several thousand dollars from capitalists, whom he succeeded in interesting in a plan to put the appliance on the market.

Anniversary for St. John's.

Winona.—St. John's Catholic church of this city will on Oct. 27 celebrate the silver or 25th anniversary of its organization. Rt. Rev. P. R. Heffron, D.D., will take a prominent part in the celebration and the Very Rev. Procopius Neuzil, O. S. B., of Chicago, will also be in attendance. At the morning mass, confirmation will be administered to a class of 20 by Bishop Heffron. A fine new pipe organ will be dedicated. In the evening the school children and choir will present a musical program.

Mad Cat Bites Children.

Minneapolis. — Walter Rabradka, aged four years, and Irene Waknits, aged three years, were attacked and severely bitten by a mad cat. Andrew Jordan came near being the cat's third victim, but finally succeeded in killing the animal.

$3,000,000 Baptist Fund.

Minneapolis. — The Baptist state workers who met at the First Baptist church unanimously approved the plan to raise $3,000,000 annually for home and foreign missionary work.

LINE ON COFFEE.

Says Three-fourths of Pupils at Mankato Drink Too Much.

Mankato.—Dr. Ernest B. Hoag of the state board of health, who has been taking a health survey of the public school pupils of this city, reports that three-fourths of the pupils drink coffee, many of the children drinking several cups a day. He advises the elimination of coffee from the children's diet, but said a little would probably not be injurious to a normal child.

Dr. Hoag found that from one to four children in each room go to school without breakfast, because they do not care for anything to eat. The three principal articles of diet of the meal were found to be coffee, bread and butter and cake. The percentage of children who have fruit of any kind is very small. Dr. Hoag considers fruit a much needed food at the morning meal.

Dr. Hoag suggested that proper breakfasts, hours for sleeping, etc., be taught to the pupils in their hygiene lessons, feeling that when the children take up the cause the parents will be easily persuaded.

WOMEN IN CAMPAIGN.

Itasca County to Be Thoroughly Organized for Equal Suffrage.

Grand Rapids.—The Grand Rapids Political Equality club is instituting a campaign which has for its end the thorough organization of every district to further the "votes for women" movement. The permanent organization committee comprises Mrs. M. C. Eble, Mrs. A. J. McGuire, Mrs. T. J. Peach, Mrs. Katherine Doran, Miss May Stanley, Superintendent E. A. Freeman, L. M. Bolter and A. L. La Freniere. This committee will have charge of the county campaign.

It is expected to organize clubs in all the villages of the county and also in all rural communities where the question is arousing interest. Literature is being issued from headquarters here.

The club is said to be the first in the state to undertake the work of thoroughly organizing a county for the equal suffrage campaign.

BONDS FOR SCHOOL.

Six Districts in Anoka and One in Isanti Combine.

St. Francis.—The St. Francis consolidated school district has voted $25,000 bonds for school purposes. Only four votes were cast against the bonds. The amount voted, with the money already on hand will buy a suitable tract and put up a fine brick and stone building with every modern improvement.

Six districts in northern Anoka county and one in Isanti county were recently consolidated here, giving strong support for the establishment of an agricultural high school. At present the high school classes are being taken care of in the Methodist church, but the equipment, after this year, will include ample laboratory facilities, rooms for manual training and domestic science, and over five acres for agricultural purposes.

Anoka bankers have rented a building here in which they will open a bank in a few days. It is also expected the new railroad from Minneapolis to Duluth will go through here. There is large waterpower here, only a small fraction of which is in use, so there is a safe foundation on which to build a good town.

Ortmanns Start Lawsuit.

Duluth. — At least half a million dollars is declared to have slipped through the hands of Marie A Selma Ortmann, widow of the late Chas. L. Ortman, a Detroit, Mich., millionaire, whose death occurred 14 years ago, according to claims made by her and Waldemar Ortmann, a son, in a lawsuit brought in district court. The widow and son are suing James Swan, a Detroit attorney, the Mosswa Mining company, in which he is interested, for the title to 640 acres of mineral land on the Mesaba iron range.

Albert Lea Office Robbed.

Albert Lea.—The third of a series of burglaries here the past week was discovered at the Smith, Wright & Sons office on North Broadway. Entrance was gained by breaking a window at the rear of the building. The cash drawer was broken into and $20 taken.

Waseca.—The Minneapolis & St. Louis road has awarded the contract for a new passenger depot to Matson Brothers of Minneapolis.

Runaway Lad in Aitkin Jail.

Aitkin, Minn. — A twelve-year-old boy, giving his name as Harold Girard, and his home as Chicago, was brought to Aitkin by a train crew who discovered the boy at Klondike, Minn., where he had spent the night on top of the water tank and was suffering from cold and exposure. The boy claims to have run away to try to locate an uncle whom he supposed lived at Klondike. The lad is now in the county jail, awaiting the arrival of his father from Chicago.

Minneapolis.—An unusually frisky breeze whisking around the corner of the Chamber of Commerce building caused a $115,000 rain. If the $115,000 had been generally negotiable, several persons could have been much richer than they are now. But the money was in checks, all indorsed, and payable to the Minnesota Grain company, 66 Chamber of Commerce building. The grain company stands to lose nothing, and finders of the checks will be no richer. The vagrant breeze caught the checks, folded loosely in a bankbook.

PIRATE PITCHER IS WELL THOUGHT OF Marty O'Toole, Pittsburg's Star Twirler.

Joe Tinker, captain of the Chicago Cubs, is quoted as saying of Marty O'Toole, the high-priced pitcher of the Pittsburg Pirates: "O'Toole is the best pitcher I have seen in years. He will certainly make good. I believe that free swingers, like Schulte, Mitchell and others of that class, will have unlimited trouble in making base hits off his delivery. The only man who looks to me to have a chance to hit him safely is the one who chokes his bat and chops at the ball. Marty's shoots have such a sharp break that the man who starts a free swing is likely to find his bat going inches under or over the ball as it crosses the plate. O'Toole throws his spitball with the same motion he uses for his straight pitch, and there is no way of telling what he is handing you. He makes the bluff of spitting on the ball every time, and this also fools the batter."

LAVENDER PROVES BIG STAR

Pitcher Is Shunted From One Club to Another Without Trial Finally Shows His Worth.

It is doubtful that any player now operating in the big leagues regards the national commission with more affection than Jimmy Lavender, pitcher extraordinary of the Chicago Cubs. Charley Murphy, owner of the Cubs, picked up Lavender in his draft dragnet last fall, but the recruit's name conflicted with one of Charley's vests, so he tried to shunt Jimmy to Montreal without giving him a trial. President Navin of the Detroit Tigers, who owns the Providence Grays, for which team Lavender performed last year, thought Charley was putting something over on him, and appealed to the national commission. That body decided Murphy either would have to return Lavender to Providence or keep the pitcher for a year. Murphy could not see Navin get the best of him, so he kept Lavender. And now, behold! Lavender is one of the greatest twirlers in the National league. Jimmy hails from Montezuma county, Georgia, which county threatens to make Royston and Alpharetta of the Cracker state hustle for their honors. Royston gave Ty Cobb to Detroit, and Alpharetta gave Nap Rucker to Brooklyn. Jimmy fooled around the minor leagues for a few years, when he was picked up by one of Connie Mack's scouts. The astute Cornelius took Jimmy on a training trip and then passed him over to Hartford of the Connecticut league. Jimmy tarried in Nutmeg league circles for a year, when he was graduated to the Providence tailenders of the International league. He was with the Grays for two years, when the Cubs procured him. Lavender is the guy who put the "mar" in Marquard's record and made it lively for the Giants all season.

Gossip Among Sports

Evidently Cornell is not much better prepared for shocks than last year.

Harry McCormick batted around .350 as a pinch hitter for the Giants this year.

Klawitter, former Giant pitcher drafted by Detroit, wants to quit pitching and be a shortstop.

Aside from being an automobile racer, what would be your favorite method of departing this life?

Times were hard for the minor leaguers drafted this fall. A large number of them were turned back in short order.

Too many Beau Brummels and not enough rough and readys on the squad is said to be the trouble with the Yale football team.

At first glance the baseball fan looks more rabid than the football rooter, but closer examination reveals this is a mistake.

Fans are strange beings. They would rather sit in a wood stand to see a good team than in chairs of gold to see losers.

Hugh Jennings must be peeved because he didn't land Doc Johnston when he had a chance to get the first baseman for $2,500.

If Clark Griffith would have his spring training in St. Louis, the Washington weather would feel like a summer resort to the players when they got back home.

FAMOUS ATHLETE TO RETIRE

Ralph Craig, Wonderful Runner, Who Captured Sprints at Stockholm, Quits the Game.

Athletics is to lose one of its brightest stars. Ralp Craig, the fleet-footed American boy who carried the stars and stripes to victory in the Olympic games at Stockholm, Sweden, will not be seen on the cinder path any more. Craig's folks are opposed to the young man following an athletic career and did not want him to contest at Stockholm. But patriotic pride impelled the great runner to go along with the other Americans and it was well for this country that he did. He won glory enough at the Olympic games to last a lifetime. Craig ran two grand races—the 100 and 200 meter events—and easily beat out the fastest sprinters in the world. Craig is a member of the Detroit Y. M. C. A, where his wonderful ability as a runner first attracted the attention of the athletic world.

Ralph Craig.

Hawley Is Pessimistic.

Coach Jesse B. Hawley, ex-Dartmouth star, and coach at Iowa university, is very pessimistic over the football situation at Iowa City. The state school hasn't turned out a strong eleven since 1899, when Clyde Williams played quarter. During that fall, and the two previous years, the Hawkeyes cleaned the Maroons, crushed Michigan, and didn't have their goal crossed during all three seasons.

Comiskey's Splendid Record.

President Comiskey, of the Chicago Americans, considers himself fortunate in having so many recruits blossoming forth into stars this season. Rath and Weaver shine in their infield positions, and Kuhn and Schalk have proved to be first-class catchers. The pitchers, however, have been a big disappointment. Delhi, Peters and Jordon all have failed to improve under persistent coaching.

Records Are Misleading.

You can't tell a pitcher by his record. Johnson would get the majority of votes in a contest against Wood, yet Wood beat him. McGraw thinks Nap Rucker is a world beater, yet he fell before Tesreau.

VARIETIES OF SALAD

MADE FROM VEGETABLES ALWAYS IN SEASON.

For Those Fond of Shrimps, Here Is a Delicious Recipe—So-Called Pilgrim Salad—Green Peppers, Grapefruit and Celery.

Preparing a Shrimp Salad.—Cut the contents of one can of shrimps into small pieces, add two cupfuls of celery and one cucumber cut into dice. Mix thoroughly with a boiled mayonnaise dressing. If cucumbers are not to be had substitute more celery, and garnish with slices of hard-boiled eggs and use plenty of dressing.

Pilgrim Salad.—Peel and cut tomatoes in half-inch slices, stamp out rounds from the center of each and insert four or five cooked asparagus tips. Lay them on crisp lettuce leaves. Cut the centers of the tomatoes into cubes and put these with several olives on one side of each plate. Put half a cupful of olive oil into a pitcher, the strained juice of half a lemon, the strained juice of half an orange, one teaspoonful of grated onion pulp, a quarter of a teaspoonful of salt, a quarter of a teaspoonful of paprika, one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, a quarter of a teaspoonful of mustard, and one teaspoonful of finely chopped parsley. Shake until thick and creamy and pour over the portions of salad.

Making Florida Salad.—Cut slices from the stem ends of green peppers and remove the seeds. Refill with grapefruit peeled and cut into cubes, add the tenderest stalks of celery cut into small pieces and finely chopped nut meats, allowing twice as much grapefruit as celery and one-third as many nut meats as grapefruit. Arrange in nests of endive and serve with mayonnaise dressing.

Kumquat Salad.—Peel a box of Kumquats, cut them in halves, add two peeled and chopped apples, and a can of chopped pears. Serve on crisp lettuce leaves with French dressing or mayonnaise dressing.

Stewed Chicken.

Required: A chicken or fowl weighing about four pounds, one onion chopped fine, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, one tablespoonful of salt, one-half a teaspoonful of thyme, one-half a teaspoonful of ground ginger, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of mace and one-quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper.

Cut the chicken into pieces suitable for serving, wash it and put it in a saucepan. Cover it with water and set it on to boil. When boiling add the onion, parsley and the spices. Cook it slowly for three hours or until tender, and about one-half hour before serving thicken it with three tablespoonfuls of browned flour and enough liquor from the stew to mix the flour. Be careful not to have it lumpy. When well mixed pour it into the stew and let it simmer for a half hour. Garnish with rice and sprigs of parsley.

Mushroom and Bacon Pie.

Cut the mushrooms in small pieces and sprinkle with salt and pepper. Cut thin slices of nice bacon in small pieces, put them in the bottom of a rather shallow baking dish. On these put a layer of mushrooms and over these put a layer of finely mashed potatoes seasoned. Fill the dish, alternating in this way, but have the potatoes on top. Now scatter bits of butter over. Put cover on and bake half an hour in a moderate oven. When nearly done remove the cover and brown the top.

Potted Chicken.

A chicken is cut up as for fricassee and to each pound of meat allow two tablespoonfuls of flour, one-half teaspoonful of salt (very scant) and a dust of pepper. Mix thoroughly and roll each piece of the meat in the mixture. Pack closely in a large bean pot and cover with boiling water; bake for three hours and a half. Cover after 10 or 15 minutes, but not before it boils.

Boiled Cauliflower.

Let the cauliflower lie in ice cold salted water fo ran hour. Cook in slightly salted boiling water, and skim gell. Drain and serve with a sauce made from four level tablespoons of sifted flour and the same amount of butter stirred together, with two cups of milkk. Sook ten minutes and season with salt and pepper.

Creamy Chocolate.

One-half cup granulated sugar, one-half cup sifted flour, one-half teaspoon salt. Into saucepan put one-half cup of finely shaved chocolate, add one quart of boiling water and stir till dissolved. Add the flour, sugar and salt, and boil gently five minutes, stirring constantly. Then stir in one quart of boiling milk and serve at once.

Boiling Cracked Eggs.

An egg that is cracked can be boiled by enclosing it in a piece of soft paper. When the paper becomes wet it adheres to the egg, and prevents it from coming through the shell. This process should be successful in every case where the crack is of a moderate length.

Tomato-Oyster Soup.

Neutralize a part of the acidity of a cupful of hot tomato pulp with a small pinch of soda, then add a pint and one-half of scalded milk, a tablespoonful of butter and a pint of parboiled oysters. Season with celery salt and white pepper and serve hot with oyster crackers.

Breaded Tongue.

Slice the left-over tongue in one-fourth-inch slices, dip in crumbs beaten egg, crumbs again; put in a baking pan, dot over with butter, bake about 20 minutes in a hot oven. Use the left-over gravy with the red currant jelly melted in it for a sauce.

Preparing Cauliflower.

Always put a cauliflower in plain water, so as to draw out any insects if salt is placed in the water it kills the insects and they are left in the vegetable.

BOYS' HANDICRAFT

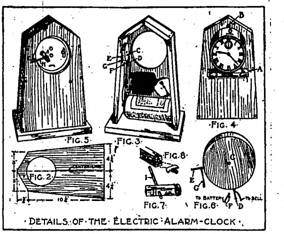
Author of "Handicraft for Handy Boys" and "The Boy Craftsman"



·DETAILS·OF·THE·ELECTRIC·ALARM-CLOCK·

AN ELECTRIC ALARM CLOCK.

Here is the best kind of an alarm clock for the sound sleeping boy who has difficulty in awakening on time. It will not only arouse him, but will keep on ringing until he gets up and turns the lever that opens the electric circuit.

You will see by examining the details of this electric clock that it is very simple to make. Almost any kind of an alarm-clock that you own can be used, but for a clock designed similar to that in Fig. 1 it should be of the common round form shown in Fig. 4. If you own a clock of a different kind, you can change the design of the wooden case to suit it.

Fig. 2 shows the pattern for the front and back of the wooden case for the electric clock illustrated. In order to get the sides of these pieces alike, first draw a center-line as shown, then each side of this lay off the measurements given. Box boards about ⅜ inch thick will do for material. The opening for the clock should be cut through each piece before the pieces themselves are cut out, so as to leave as much margin around the hole as possible; this will lessen the danger of splitting the wood in cutting the hole. Bevel the face edge of the hole cut through the front piece (Fig. 1).

The wooden case must be deep enough to allow for a dry battery. This battery will govern the width of the side and top pieces; the lengths of the side and top pieces will of course be determined by the front and back pieces already cut. Fasten the side and top pieces to each other and to the front piece, using finishing-nails for the nailing; then cut the base piece of the proper size to make a projection of ⅜ inch outside of the case all around, and fasten the case to it. The neatness of your work will depend a great deal upon the accuracy with which the ends of the side and top pieces are cut, so be careful in preparing them.

ELECTRIC·ALARM-CLOCK·

The alarm-clock is supported upon a narrow shelf fastened to the back piece (A, Fig. 4). The face of the alarm-clock should be set flush with the inside face of the front of the wooden case, so in fastening the clock to shelf A, you must take this into consideration. If the clock is exactly as deep as the wooden clock-case, the ring at the top of the back of the clock can be screwed to the wooden back (B, Fig. 4); if smaller, it will have to be blocked out away from the back piece. The bottom of the clock is held to the shelf by wiring the legs to nails, as shown. The back board is screwed to the case so it can be removed easily when the bell or battery requires attention.

The battery should be placed in the bottom of the case, and the electric-bell should be screwed to the inside of the face, as shown in Fig. 3. Cut the wooden block C a trifle smaller in diameter than the inside depth of the case (Figs. 3 and 6), drive the nails D and E into the edge at right angles, as shown in Fig. 6, and screw the block through its center to the side of the case on a line with the center of the alarm-clock (Fig. 3). Drive nail F into the side of the case one-half inch below block C and in line with its center (Figs. 3 and 6), then connect this nail and one of the binding-posts of the battery with a piece of electric-bell wire, connect nail D with one of the binding-posts of the electric-bell, and connect the remaining binding-post of the battery with that of the bell.

Cut a small slot through the back board of the case for nail E. You will see that when nail E is pushed up, block C will turn, and that when nail D strikes nail F the electric circuit will be closed and the bell will ring. The rubber-band G (Figs. 3 and 6) is necessary to break the connection when the pressure on nail E is removed.

Now all that is required to complete the mechanism is a lever extending from the winding key of the alarm of your clock far enough over to strike nail E, so that when the clock alarm goes off it will push up nail E and make the connection between nails D and F. This lever (H, Fig. 5) may be a piece of brass rod, or a large wire nail. It must be fastened in a wooden post (I, Fig. 5), and the end of this post must be cut to fit over the alarm-key and be wired to it, as shown in Figs. 7 and 8. All clock keys do not turn in the same direction when unwinding. If the alarm key on your clock turns from right to left in unwinding, the lever will press nail E down instead of up; in this case the contact nails D and F must be so placed that the contact will be made when the nail E is pushed down. To shut off the alarm, it is of course only necessary to give the alarm key a half turn.

As it will take very little material to cover the woodwork, you will probably have enough stain or paint left over from some other work with which to finish it.

WOMAN IS TREE CHOPPER

Does the Work of a Man in Lumber Camp in Backwoods of Maine.

D. Woodbury Bachelder of this city, engaged in the lumber business at Damariscotta, Me., has in his employ a most remarkable woman as regards strength and endurance. She is Mary Gregory, wife of Frank Gregory, says the Manchester correspondent of the Boston Globe.

She first entered the employ of Mr. Bachelder to provide meals for the fourteen men in the camp. This she was able to do and have half a day left in which to engage in the work of the men, and asked permission of Mr. Bachelder to take her place with the choppers.

Mr. Bachelder gave his consent and was astonished to see her perform. She wielded an ax and made a record one day of chopping, splitting and piling three cords of wood, a task that most men, hardened to the service of the woods, are incapable of equaling. Mr. Bachelder says:

"She is the strongest woman I ever saw. No sooner does she fell a tree than she is on top of it, limbing it out, and in every line of work she is the equal of the men in camp. She handles a cross-cut saw with all the skill of a man and not a laborer in the camp can surpass her in the amount of work accomplished."

She is thirty-five years old, weighs about 175 pounds, stands 5 feet 8 inches, and is as quick as a flash. She is fond of sport and expert as a wrestler. Mr. Bachelder says he has yet to see a man in camp who can match her at wrestling. She is not afraid to try conclusions with any of them. She has put every man who has been willing to wrestle her on his back, and yet is modest in speech and manner, the mother of seven children, a native of Nova Scotia, and prior to making her home in the Maine woods lived in Massachusetts.

Her husband works in the woods with her, but is far from being her equal in strength.

Follies of Court Procedure.

The prolixity of some lawyers and the length of some trials are indicated by the comment of Judge Hough on the testimony in the case of the Selden patent. "Reforms," he says, "sometimes begin with the contemplation of horrible examples, and it is therefore noted that the records in these cases . . . comprise 36 large octavo volumes. . . . There were counted over 100 printed pages recording squabbles (not unaccompanied with apparent personal rancor) concerning adjustments. All this," concludes the judge, "lumbers up the court record room, while clients pay for it."

Deadly.

"The most amusing story of an American in France that I ever heard," said a recently appointed attache to the French embassy, "is this."

"'A well-known French actor became involved in a discussion with an American, grew heated, drew his card from his pocket, threw it on the table with a tragic air, and stalked out.

"'The American regarded the card for some moments, then took out his fountain pen, wrote, "Admit bearer" above the engraved line, and went off to the theater.'"

Daffodil Vases Popular.

Mrs. Robert Goelet has taken a fancy to what are called daffodil vases. They are something new and odd. They are made of glass and are arranged in a row of six and twelve, all fastened together by silver or gold. The cases are slender and delicately carved, with long stems. They are arranged to hold just one flower each. It has proved quaint and effective to have just one flower in each vase.

VICE PRESIDENT SUCCUMBS

Nation Mourns Death of "Sunny Jim" Sherman -All Flags at Half Mast.

LEADER IN REPUBLICAN PARTY PASSES AWAY AFTER A LONG ILLNESS—DEATH DUE TO BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

FAMILY WAS WITH HIM.

Taft, in Letter of Sympathy, Pays Tribute to His Running Mate—Funeral Arrangements—Senate Will Attend in Body.

Utica, N. Y., Nov. 1.—After a long illness, Vice President James Schoolcraft Sherman died at his home in this city of uremic poison caused by Bright's disease.

He had been sinking for hours and it was realized that death was a question of only a few hours.

There was a slight reaction shortly before the end, caused by apparent improvement of the kidneys, but it did not prove real or lasting and at best gave only temporary hope.

Members of Family Present.

All the members of the immediate family were witnesses to the final scene. In addition to Mrs. Sherman there were in the death chamber their three sons, Sherrill, Richard U. and Thomas N. Sherman and their respective wives; R. M. and Sanford Sherman, brothers of Mr. Sherman, and Mrs. L. B. Moore and Mrs. H. J. Cookinham, sisters of Mr. Sherman.

Soon after Mr. Sherman's death, Dr. Fayette H. Peck, the attending physician issued the following statement:

Physician Issues Statement.

"The vice president died without regaining consciousness for a moment. He was perfectly quiet. He died in the presence of his wife, her brother and sister, his two brothers and his three sons and their wives. He died in a uremic coma as a result of Bright's disease, heart disease and arterio-sclerosis."

Mrs. Sherman Bears Up Bravely.

Mrs. Sherman bore up bravely under the shock of her husband's death as also did the other members of the family. Although it was said at the house that the hopelessness of Mr. Sherman fight against death had been realized since Friday, the blow nevertheless was a crushing one.

The announcement of the vice president's death spread quickly through the city. Universal sorrow was expressed and immediate steps were taken for the proper recognition of the sorrowful event.

Mr. Sherman was regarded as the first citizen of the city and all differences growing out of politics died with him.

Bell Tolls Out Doleful News.

The mayor gave out a statement voicing the general grief and the big bell at city hall as well as many church bells tolled out the doleful news to the public.

Not only did the Republican organization take recognition of the event, but the Progressives cancelled all meetings immediately, until after the vice president's funeral.

The Democrats signified their intention of removing a Wilson and Marshall banner which had been flung across one of the city streets and of suspending all political activity until after the funeral.

The mayor ordered that the flags on all city buildings should be placed at half mast and suggested that a similar course be followed with all other flags in Utica.

Prominent in Politics.

Washington. — The twenty-seventh vice-president of the United States and the only one re-nominated was christened James Schoolcraft Sherman. But in nearly a quarter of a century of public life, "Jim" Sherman he was to his intimates, and probably half the nation referred to him as "Sunny Jim," a sobriquet he earned by a never failing, all year round sunny disposition.

Sherman belonged to the school of Republicanism nowadays popularly called "regular" and he fought his political battles without compromise or flinching. The events he helped to shape are so comparatively recent that history cannot assign him to his proper place until it also records the work of his contemporaries.

Elected Representative in 1887.

To the house of representatives of the fiftieth congress he came in the winter of 1887, just passed his thirty-second birthday, with the energy and optimism of youth, college bred from the halls of Hamilton, which has given to public life many other statesmen and public figures, none without some mark of distinction. He had been elected mayor of Utica two years before. Like many others who came to lead in the national legislature he brought with him an education in law. He was well born and well bred. His father, Richard Sherman, was an editor and public figure in New York state.

Nominated Vice President.

Two sessions of congress found Sherman defeated and out of office, but not for long. Henry W. Bentley of Booneville, Oneida county, beat him by less than a thousand votes in the race for the fifty-second congress. In the interim Sherman went back to Utica, built up his law practice and returned to the fifty-third congress with a signal victory. He remained in the house without defeat to the sixtieth congress when he was nominated and elected vice president on the ticket with Mr. Taft.

Sherman's Work in House.

Any review of Sherman's life would not be complete without a reference to his work in the house. Briefly, there is recorded no time when he moved galleries to applause by an address from the floor or changed any votes by eloquence, but the statutes bear marks of his work in committees and caucus, and the results of his labors on the rules committee, the interstate commerce committee and other branches of the machinery of the house where the real legislating is done, while speeches prevail upon the floor.

In New York state politics Sherman was a leading figure. He always was active in state convention and a figure at all national gatherings of the party.

Sherman went to preside over the senate just about at a time when what popularly is known as "senatorial dignity" was beginning to feel its first break. In the chair, Sherman was dignity itself, fair in his rulings, his colleagues said, quiet, firm, sure and seldom reversed an appeal.

Roosevelt Sends Message.

New York.—Just after he left the Madison Square Garden meeting Colonel Roosevelt was informed of the death of Vice President Sherman. The colonel immediately sent a telegram.

WASHINGTON MOURNS.

Every Attache the Vice President's Friend.

Washington, Nov. 1.—News of Vice President Sherman's death, though it had been expected hourly, was received with profound sorrow in official Washington.

At the capitol, where every attache considered him a friend, in the government headquarters where he was a frequent visitor, among the cabinet officers and in the diplomatic corps, where he had many close friends, the announcement caused genuine regret.

President Taft issued a proclamation directing that for 30 days all the United States embassies and legations abroad shall observe mourning. The flags over the White House, the dome of the capitol and the public buildings in Washington have been half masted.

From the navy and war departments orders were flashed to all army posts, ships at sea, navy yards and insular possessions to put flags at half mast on the day of the funeral.

Governor Wilson Shocked.

Princeton, N. J.—When Governor Woodrow Wilson reached his home here from Burlington, where he spoke he learned of the death of Vice President Sherman. The governor said he was shocked at the news and expressed deep sorrow.

Suspects Still at Large.

Chicago, Nov. 1.—Charles D. Conway, high diver, circus clown and acrobat, and his wife, Beatrict Ryall, a burlesque actress, wanted by the Chicago police in connection with the murder of Sophia G. Singer, has not been found after a search that extended throughout the entire country. Reports that the two had been seen in Rochester, Ind., caused extra activity among the police of that state. The body of Miss Singer will be taken to Baltimore, her former home, where her family is prominent.

Sixty Women, Violators.

Sydney, N. S. W., Nov. 1.—For going about the city with their hat pins protruding, sixty women, most of them prominent in society, were tried, convicted and fined in one Sydney court. The women went to jail rather than pay their fines, declaring they would not submit to "iniquitous and unnecessary legislation." The city authorities face a situation similar to that growing out of the very recent suffrage demonstrations which have been so frequent in England.

MISS BLANCHE SCOTT

Since the death of Miss Harriet Quimby, Miss Scott is the only professional woman aeroplanist in the United States.

BECKER PLACED IN SING SING

EXECUTION WILL BE STAYED BY FILING OF AN APPEAL.

Former Police Official Was Convicted of Instigating Plot to Murder Rosenthal.

Ossining, N. Y., Oct. 31.—Former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker is in the "death house" at Sing Sing prison, under sentence to die in the electric chair during the week of Dec. 9. He was convicted of instigating the plot to murder the gambler, Herman Rosenthal.

Becker was brought here from New York immediately after sentence was pronounced upon him by Justice Goff, in the court room where he was found guilty six days ago.

Becker's execution will be stayed, however, by the filing in the interim of a notice of appeal from the verdict. In this lies Becker's only hope of escape of death. His last words before the gates of the prison were shut behind him, were:

"I come here an innocent man. I never had a chance. I was 'railroaded.' But the fight has only begun. I expected a reversal of the verdict, and a new trial."

With stolid countenance and head erect, Becker withstood the ordeal of the walk to the prison.

A window of the warden's office framed a woman's tear stained face as Becker marched up the prison walk. It was the convicted man's wife, who had accompanied him from New York and had driven ahead of him from the railroad station. Becker waved his hand sadly and the woman threw a kiss.

An hour later, after the formality of taking the prisoner's pedigree had been disposed of, Becker was in his death cell in solitary confinement, attired in prison garb and entered as prisoner No. 62,499. Ten other condemned murderers occupy cells in the "death house" with him.

HOCKIN EXPOSED MANY.

Witness in Dynamite Trial Says Defendant Confessed.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 31.—Robert J. Foster, a detective, testified at the trial of the 45 accused "dynamite plotters" that Herbert S. Hockin, one of the defendants, made the following statement to him: "I am not going to be the only goat. When you take me, you'll take the whole bunch. I'll be satisfied if I get off with a few years, but I will not go on the stand. It would be worth my life for me to testify against the others."

Foster testified Hockin so spoke while the federal grand jury last winter was investigating alleged illegal transportation of dynamite on passenger trains and just before Hockin, who is secretary of the International Association of Bridge and Structural Iron Workers, turned over the keys of the unions' office here.

Doctrines of Socialism.

Minneapolis, Oct. 31.—Eugene V. Debs, Socialist candidate for president, preached the doctrines of his party to more than 3,000 persons at the Auditorium. A large crowd that was unable to gain admittance to the Auditorium was addressed in the annex. Mr. Debs declared that there are in reality but two political parties, those representing the capitalist classes and the Socialist party, representing the working people. He drew no line between the Republicans, the Democrats and the Progressives.

Court Martial for Ordaz.

Vera Cruz, Oct. 31.—With the capture of Colonel Diaz Ordaz, the revolutionary spirit in the state of Vera Cruz is completely broken. Ordaz was taken by mounted police who were previously under his command. He will be tried by court martial within a few days. General Diaz is for the present lodged in the city hall.

Sixty Women, Violators.

Sydney, N. S. W., Oct. 31.—For going about the city with their hat pins protruding, sixty women, most of them prominent in society, were tried, convicted and fined in one Sydney court. The women went to jail rather than pay their fines, declaring they would not submit to "iniquitous and unnecessary legislation." The city authorities face a situation similar to that growing out of the very recent suffrage demonstrations which have been so frequent in England.

TURKS LOSE THE FIGHT IN THRACE

BULGARIANS REPEAT VICTORIES ACCORDING TO DISPATCHES FROM SOFIA.

LULEBURGAS CAPTURED.

Terrible Atrocities Laid to Ottoman Arms in Christian Villages, According to Reports.

London, Oct. 31.—The silence of Sofia concerning the great battle in Thrace has at last been broken by a brief dispatch announcing a Bulgarian victory and the capture of the town of Luleburgas.

This dispatch and equally laconic dispatches from the Turkish commander contain the only news yet available and still leave the situation rather obscure.

Two Battles Described.

The message from Sofia apparently refers to early events, while the dispatch of Nazim Pasha, the Turkish minister of war, describes two battles, one a sortie from Adrianople, in the direction of Maras, the other in the direction of Visa, from which it must be inferred that the engagements are extending over a long front.

A Sofia dispatch sent before the capture of Luleburgas was known throws a new light on the disposition of the Turkish forces. It is evident that earlier reports of the taking of this town were premature.

It appears that the Turk's first line of defense extended along the Erkene river with a second line from Demotica to Luleburgas.

Both Sides Claim Victory.

Both sides claim victory but there is no reason to doubt that the Turkish second line of defense has been broken. Up to the present the Bulgarian official dispatches have been more reliable than the Turkish.

Nazim Pasha claims victory in the Visa region.

Turkish Atrocities Reported.

Athens.—New and more terrible Turkish atrocities in twenty Christian villages in the Janina region are officially reported. The villages were destroyed, the inhabitants massacred, women and children being burned alive.

It is also officially reported that three-fourths of the Turkish wounded at the beginning of the fighting were Christians. Now only about one-fourth of the wounded are Christians, which is taken to mean that the Christians were placed in the forefront of the battle.

Blacque Bey Is a General.

St. Paul.—Word was received by St. Paul relatives from Constantinople of the appointment of Richard Edward Blacque Bey to a generalship in the Turkish army. Blacque Bey was married a year ago to Miss Josephine Kalman, prominent socially in St. Paul.

Blacque Bey at the time was secretary of the Turkish embassy at Berlin. He was later promoted to the position of counsellor at Vienna. He was actively associated in the rebellion in which the young Turks were victors.

The father of Blacque Bey was Turkish ambassador to Washington during President Grant's administration. His father was of Scotch and French descent.

The marriage of Miss Kalman to Blacque Bey was one of the most notable social affairs held in St. Paul in many years.

NEGRO CASE CONTINUED.

Federal Grand Jurors Will Take Up Inquiry of Pugilist.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—Federal jury investigation into the relations of the negro pugilist, Jack Johnson, with white women and members of his own race, precipitated by the rescue from association with him of Lucile Cameron, a Minneapolis girl, by her mother, was put over until Nov. 7. No work will be done by the grand jurors in the interval, but agents of the department of justice it was announced would continue their search of evidence relating to Johnson's acts.

Mrs. Adah Banks Davis, the mulatto singer in Johnson's cafe, testified regarding occurrences there and is said to have told the inquisitors the facts about the report that she shot Johnson in the leg during a fit of jealousy. Her husband has in court, a suit for $25,000 against the pugilist, charging alienation of affections.

Services for Military Man.

Black River Falls, Wis., Oct. 31.—Memorial services were held here at the court house to honor the memory of the late Colonel C. C. Pope.

Insect Causes Heavy Cotton Loss.

Washington, Oct. 31. — The cotton bollweevil, the greatest pest of the South, has caused a loss of $125,000,000, represented by 2,550,000 bales of cotton, since the weevil first invaded this country, according to an estimate of the department of agriculture.

Sneed at Liberty on Bail.

Austin, Texas, Oct. 31.—J. Beal Sneed, slayer of Al Boyce, Jr., at Amarillo, Texas, has been granted bail by the court of criminal appeals under $20,000 bond.

6 NUNS DIE SAVING CHILDREN

ORPHANAGE DESTROYED BY FLAMES—TWO BABIES DEAD.

Eighty-Five Saved By Sisters' Heroic Work—Women Sacrifice Lives.

San Antonio, Texas, Oct. 31.—Sacrificing their lives to rescue the thirty-seven orphan children in their charge, six Sisters of Charity perished in a fire which destroyed St. John's orphanage. One babe fell to its death with Mary of the Cross, mother superior of the institution, who left her place of safety in a vain effort to save the child. Another orphan is missing and it is feared it did not escape.

Roused from their sleep, the nuns marshaled their charges, whose ages ranged from 2 to 13, to fire escapes, remaining at their posts until flames barred the way to safety. Two of the sisters, Marry Kostka Farrell and Monica Montez, were killed by jumping.

Three sisters escaped. Instructed to pilot the first column of frightened children out of danger, they gained the ground in time to escape the crash of falling walls.

The children owe their lives to the initial daring and self-sacrifice of the nuns. While attaches of the orphanage hospital hurried to the burning building and dashed through bursts of flame to help in the rescue work, yet many of the orphans would have been cremated in the dormitories if the nuns had not braved the first outburst of fire and piloted them to places of safe egress.

The death of the mother superior, Mary of the Cross, was the sequel to a demonstration of remarkable courage. She returned to the burning dormitory when she heard the cry of a child who had been overlooked in the hurry and excitement.

Crystal Globe in Court.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—A solid globe of crystal glass nearly a foot in diameter, into whose mysterious depths Mrs. Louisa Lindloff gazed and then announced, according to witnesses, the forthcoming death of members of her family, was introduced into evidence by the state in the trial of the woman on charges of poisoning her 15-year-old son, Arthur. No evidence previously produced was of as intense interest to the crowded courtroom as this flawless globe of glass with which the seeress professed to read the future.

Graft on U. S. Warships.

Washington, Oct. 31.—A system of graft in the commissary department of the navy, which may reach every ship in the Atlantic fleet, has been revealed by a secret investigation which Rear Admiral Osterhaus reported to the navy department, has resulted in the confession of G. T. Davis, chief commissary steward of the battleship Louisiana.

Winnipeg, Man., Oct. 31.—Edgar Guy Lees, 18 years of age, living at the exhibition grounds, and Henry Keano, 25 years of age, were drowned during the storm that swept over this section.

DAILY MARKET REPORTS.

Twin City Markets.

Minneapolis, Oct. 31.—Wheat, December, 86¾c; May, 92⅛c; No. 1 northern, 86@88½c; No. 2 northern, 85⅝c; No. 1 durum, 84¾c; No. 3 corn, 65c; No. 3 white oats, 30½c; barley, malting, 66c; No. 2 rye, 62½c; No. 1 flax, $1.48¾c.

Duluth, Oct. 31.—Wheat, December, 86⅝c; May, 91⅞c; No. 1 northern, 87⅝c; No. 1 durum, 88¼c.

South St. Paul, Oct. 31. — Cattle — Steers, $6.00; cows, $4.00@5.00; calves, $4.00@9.25; hogs, $7.25@7.55; sheep and lambs, $3.50@6.40.

Chicago Livestock.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—Cattle — Receipts 17,000; market steady to shade lower; beeves, $5.30@11; Texas steers, $4.35@5.65; western steers, $5.50@9.25; stockers and feeders, $4.25@7.50; cows and heifers, $2.70@7.25; calves, $6.50@10.50. Hogs—Receipts 22,000; market slow, 10c to 15c under yesterday's average; light, $7@7.75; mixed, $7.25@7.85; heavy, $7@7.85; rough, $7@7.20; pigs, $4.25@6.85; bulk of sales, $7.45@7.75. Sheep—Receipts 32,000; market steady; native, $2.40@4.50; western, $3.50@4.50; yearlings, $4.50@5.65; lambs, native, $5@7; western, $5.25@7.

There was another break in the hog market today, price dropped 10@15c. Buyers, however, were not so bearish after the recent heavy slump. Good steers held at steady prices. There was a strong tone in the mutton trade.

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—Accord between Russia and Austria concerning the Balkans forced the wheat market today to a lower level. Bearish temper was increased by the flattering crop outlook in Argentina. Prospects were also for continued liberal receipts northwest. Opening figures showed ⅛@⅜c to ⅝c decline. December started at 91⅛c to 91⅜c, a loss of ⅛ to ⅝c, and fell to 91⅛c, a loss of ⅜c to ⅝c, and fell to 91¼@91⅜c.

A further break occurred as a result of the world's available supply showing a big increase. The close was steady, with December 1@1⅛c net lower at 91@91⅛c.

Corn turned heavy on account of general commission selling. Support was poor, especially for October, which fell 3⅝c to 56½c on a few transactions. December opened ⅛@¼c to ⅜@½c lower at 52⅛ to 52⅜c and sagged to 52@52⅛c.

The market suffered an additional setback owing to fine weather. The close was easy at 51⅞@52c for December, a net loss of ⅝c.

Big receipts weakened oats. December started unchanged to ⅛c off at 32c to 32⅛c and seemed disposed to keep within these limits.

6,000 Burned.

Belgrade, Oct. 31. — Six thousand Servian and Turkish corpses were piled in a heap, soaked in kerosine and burned by the Servian victors following the recent battle of Kumanova, acording to a message.

Consecrated Suffragan Bishop.

Faribault, Minn., Oct. 31.—Rev. Dr. Frank Arthur McElwain, dean of the Protestant Episcopal cathedral at Faribault, was consecrated suffragan bishop of Minnesota with solemn church ceremony here.

PROPOSED
--BY THE--
Extra Session of 1912.

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL.

St. Paul, Minn., July 3, 1912.

Hon. Julius A. Schmahl,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by Section 25 of the Revised Laws, and Amendment, I have the honor to furnish you herewith a statement of the purposes and effects of the respective amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, proposed by the Legislature of 1911, which are to be submitted to the electors of this State at the general election in 1912.

I have also furnished a statement of the purposes and effect of the law proposed by the Legislature at the extra session of 1912, known as Chapter 9, Laws of 1912, relating to the taxation of railroad companies, which, under the Constitution of the State, must be submitted to a vote of the people of the State, and be adopted and ratified by a majority of the electors of the State voting at the election, before such Chapter 9 shall take effect or be in force.

AMENDMENT NO. I.
Increased Road Fund.

Chapter 390 of the General Laws of Minnesota for 1911, proposes to the people of this state, for their approval or rejection, an amendment to Section 16 of Article 9, of the Constitution. This Section now reads as follows:

"Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges, there is hereby created a fund, to be known as the 'state road and bridge fund,' said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the income derived from investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund, however provided.

"The legislature is authorized to add to such fund, for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of this state, by providing, in its discretion, for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state of not to exceed in any year one-fourth (¼) of one mill on all the taxable property within the state.

"Provided, that no county shall receive in any year more than three (3) per cent or less than one-half (½) of one (1) per cent of the total fund thus provided and expended during such year; and provided, further, that in no case shall more than one-half (½) of the cost of constructing or improving any road or bridge be paid by the state from such fund."

This Section, if amended, will read as follows:

"Section 16. For the purpose of lending aid in the construction and improvement of public highways and bridges, there is hereby created a fund, to be known as the 'state road and bridge fund,' said fund shall include all moneys accruing from the income derived from investments in the internal improvement land fund, or that may hereafter accrue to said fund, and shall also include all funds accruing to any state road and bridge fund, however provided.

"The legislature is authorized to add to such fund, for the purpose of constructing or improving roads and bridges of this state, by providing, in its discretion, for any annual tax levy upon the property of this state of not to exceed in any year one mill on all the taxable property within the state. Provided, that no county shall receive in any year more than three (3) per cent or less than one-half (½) of one (1) per cent of the total fund thus provided and expended during such year."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The approval of this amendment will authorize the Legislature to levy, in its discretion, a one mill tax upon all the property of this state for the benefit of the roads and bridges therein; and will repeal certain limitations as to the amount which may be paid by the state for such roads and bridges.

The present constitution authorizes the Legislature to add to the road and bridge fund by providing, in its discretion, for an annual tax levy upon the property of this state not to exceed one-fourth (¼) of one (1) mill, while the amendment permits the Legislature, in its discretion, to provide for an annual tax levy of one (1) mill on all taxable property within the state.

The present constitution provides that in no case shall more than one-half (½) of the cost of constructing or improving any road or bridge be paid by the state from such fund. The amendment proposes to remove the limitation which now exists in the constitution as to the amount which the state may pay for such fund towards the cost of constructing or repairing any road or bridge and leaves the whole management of such fund to be provided for by law, as the Legislature shall deem wise.

AMENDMENT NO. II.
Insurance of Crops.

By this amendment it is proposed to add an entirely new section to Article 9 of the Constitution, to be known as Section 17, and which shall read as follows:

"The legislature may provide for the payment by the State of Minnesota of damages to growing crops by hail and wind, or either, and to provide a fund for that purpose, including the necessary expenses of giving effect to this act, may impose a specific tax upon lands the owners of which, at their option, have listed the same with county auditors for that purpose, and no payment shall be made of any such damages except from the fund so provided."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. This amendment, if adopted, will authorize the state to act in the collection and disbursement of a fund for the payment of damages to growing crops by hail or wind, or either. This fund is to be created and maintained by a specific tax imposed by the legislature upon the lands of such persons only as shall voluntarily list the same with their respective county auditors for that purpose. Under it, there could be no tax for such purpose imposed on the lands of any owner who does not consent thereto. The legislature is also authorized to include in the fund to be raised by taxation of such listed lands the necessary expenses of administration of the law. The adoption of the amendment will authorize the legislature to direct that the taxing machinery of the state be used to levy and collect the tax necessary to raise such fund, and to provide for the disbursement of same by the officers of the state; but any payments to be made by the state by reason of damage by hail or wind will have to be made from such fund, and from no other. In the settlement of any such damages, the state would assume no liability beyond the amount of such fund and could not further be rendered liable.

PROPOSED LAW RELATING TO THE TAXATION OF RAILROAD PROPERTIES.

CHAPTER 9, LAWS OF 1912.

AN ACT providing for the taxation of railroad properties, the collection and times of payment of such tax and repealing acts inconsistent therewith.

Be It Enacted by the Legislature of the State of Minnesota.

Section 1. Every railroad company owning or operating any line of railroad situated within, or partly within this state, shall, during the year 1913, and annually thereafter, pay into the treasury of this state, in lieu of all taxes and assessments, upon all property within this state, owned or operated for railway purposes, by such company, including equipment, appurtenances, appendages and franchises thereof, a sum of money equal to five per cent of the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within this state.

On or before August 15, 1913, and annually thereafter, each such railroad company shall make, according to law, a true and just return of all such gross earnings for the six months ending June 30th, next preceding, and the said tax of five per centum thereon shall become due and be payable to the State of Minnesota in manner provided by law, on September 1st, next thereafter.

On or before February 15, 1914, and annually thereafter, each such railroad company shall make, according to law, a true and just return of all such gross earnings for the six months ending December 31st next preceding, and said tax of five per centum thereon shall become due and payable to the State of Minnesota in manner provided by law, on March 1st next thereafter; and the payment of such sums at the times hereinbefore set forth shall be in full and in lieu of all other taxes and assessments upon the property and franchises so taxed; provided nothing in this act shall be construed as modifying any agreement entered into between any municipality within the state and any railroad company relating to the payment of local taxes or assessments.

The lands acquired by public grant shall be and remain exempt from taxation until sold or contracted to be sold or conveyed as provided in the respective acts whereby such grants were made or recognized.

Sec. 2. The term "the gross earnings derived from the operation of such line of railway within in this state," as used in Section 1 of this act is hereby declared and shall be construed to mean, all earnings on business beginning and ending within the state, and a proportion, based upon the proportion of the mileage within the state to the entire mileage over which such business is done, of earnings on all interstate business passing through, into or out of the state.

Sec. 3. All acts and parts of acts not inconsistent herewith, regulating the payment, collection, time of payment, enforcement or reports involving the amount of taxes upon the gross earnings of railroad companies within this state or providing penalties for the non-payment of such taxes, are hereby made applicable to this act so far as may be, and all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Sec. 4. Upon failure to pay the amount of such taxes legally due, upon the respective dates hereinbefore set forth, collection thereof may be enforced in addition to existing remedies in a civil action brought in the name of the State of Minnesota in the district court of any county.

Sec. 5. Before any railroad company shall be heard to contest or continue to contest the validity of this act or any part thereof, such railroad company shall as a condition precedent thereto, pay into the treasury of the State of Minnesota the amount of taxes due or payable from such railroad company under the existing tax laws of this state.

Sec. 6. This act shall be submitted to the people of this state for their approval or rejection at the next general election for the year 1912.

The secretary of state shall cause to be printed in bold type upon the ballot used in voting for state officers or upon a separate ballot, if so provided by law at the said election, in manner conformable with the requirements of the general election law, the words, "For increasing the gross earnings tax of railroad companies from four to five per cent, and providing for the payment of the gross earnings tax semi-annually."

Yes.............................

No.............................

And each voter voting at such election shall designate his vote by a cross mark made opposite one or the other of the words "Yes" or "No" and the said election shall in all respects, conform, as far as may be, to the requirements of the general election law, and the returns of said election shall be made, canvassed and certified, and the results thereof declared in the manner provided by law for returning, certifying and canvassing votes cast for state officers.

Approved June 15, 1912.

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The law now in force relating to the taxation of railroad properties is Chapter 253, Laws of 1903, ratified by the people at the general election of 1904. The only language of the proposed law of 1912 which differs from the old law of 1903 is set forth above in bold-faced type. Under the present law, the taxes upon railroad property are computed at the rate of four per cent upon the gross earnings of the company owning or operating the same. The purpose of this new law is to change that rate from four per cent to five per cent and to make the taxes payable semi-annually on March 1st and September 1st of each year, instead of annually, as under the existing law.

AMENDMENT NO. III.
Mortgage Loans to State.

This amendment, if adopted, will permit the permanent school and university fund of the state to be invested in first mortgage loans upon improved and cultivated farm lands of the State. This amendment would change Section 6, Article 8, of the Constitution, which now reads as follows:

"The permanent school and university fund of this state may be invested in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, but no such investment shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this state; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the bonds to be issued or purchased would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed fifteen per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than three per cent per annum, nor for a shorter period than five years, nor for a longer period than twenty years, and no change of the town, school district, city, village or of county lines shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of the issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds."

So as to read as follows:

"Section 6. The permanent school and university fund of this state may be invested in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state, and in first mortgage loans secured upon improved and cultivated farm lands of this state. But no such improvement shall be made until approved by the board of commissioners designated by law to regulate the investment of the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund of this state; nor shall such loan or investment be made when the bonds to be issued or purchased would make the entire bonded indebtedness exceed 15 per cent of the assessed valuation of the taxable real property of the county, school district, city, town or village issuing such bonds; nor shall any farm loan or investment be made when such investment or loan would exceed 30 per cent of the actual cash value of the farm land mortgaged to secure said investment; nor shall such loans or indebtedness be made at a lower rate of interest than 3 per cent per annum, nor for a shorter period than five years, nor for a longer period than twenty years, and no change of the town, school district, city, village or county lines shall relieve the real property in such town, school district, county, village or city in this state at the time of issuing of such bonds from any liability for taxation to pay such bonds."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The present constitution authorizes the investment of the permanent school and university funds of this state in the bonds of any county, school district, city, town or village of this state. This amendment, if adopted, will permit, in addition to the foregoing investments, said school and university funds to be invested also in first mortgage loans secured upon improved and cultivated farm lands of this state.

AMENDMENT NO. IV.
Commission Form of Municipal Government.

By this Amendment it is proposed to amend Section 36 of Article 4 of the Constitution, which now reads as follows:

"Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city consistent with and subject to the laws of this state as follows: The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper, for a board of fifteen freeholders, who shall shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the district judges of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated, as the legislature may determine for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall, within six months after its appointment, return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of said charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof. Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next election thereafter, and if four-sevenths of the qualified voters voting at such election, shall ratify the same it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, become the charter of such city or village as a city, and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; Provided, that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established. Before any city shall incorporate under this act the legislature shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state, and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof. Such charter so deposited may be amended by proposal therefor made by a board of fifteen commissioners aforesaid, published for at least thirty days in three newspapers of general circulation in such city or village, and accepted by three-fifths of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next election and not otherwise; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of the commission relative to submitting amendments of charter to the vote of the people, and shall provide that upon application of five per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village, by written petition, such commission shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition. The board of freeholders above provided for shall be permanent, and all the vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members. It shall be a feature of all such charters that there shall be provided, among other things, for a mayor, or chief magistrate and a legislative body of either one or two houses; if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by general vote of the electors. In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto to the qualified voters of such city or village any alternate section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter or any amendments thereto. The legislature may provide general laws relating to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty thousand and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty thousand and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all such cities of either class, and which shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for. But no local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

So that said Section 36 of Article 4 of the State Constitution shall read as follows:

"Section 36. Any city or village in this state may frame a charter for its own government as a city, consistent with and subject to the laws of this states, as follows:

The legislature shall provide, under such restrictions as it deems proper for a charter board of not to exceed fifteen freeholders, who shall be and for the past five years shall have been qualified voters thereof, to be appointed by the judges of the district court of the judicial district in which the city or village is situated as the legislature may determine for a term in no event to exceed six years, which board shall within six months after its appointment return to the chief magistrate of said city or village a draft of a proposed charter, signed by the members of said board, or a majority thereof, and, if the same be not ratified may thereafter in like manner return other draft or drafts of a proposed charter until one thereof shall be ratified as herein provided.

Such charter shall be submitted to the qualified voters of such city or village at the next general or special election thereafter, and if a majority of the qualified voters voting at such election shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of thirty days thereafter, or at such other time, if any, as shall be specified therein, become the charter of such city or village as a city and supersede any existing charter and amendments thereof; provided that in cities having patrol limits now established, such charter shall require a three-fourths majority vote of the qualified voters voting at such election to change the patrol limits now established.

Duplicate certificates shall be made setting forth the charter proposed and its ratification, which shall be signed by the chief magistrate of said city or village and authenticated by its corporate seal. One of said certificates shall be deposited in the office of the secretary of state and the other, after being recorded in the office of the register of deeds for the county in which such city or village lies, shall be deposited among the archives of such city or village, and all courts shall take judicial notice thereof.

Such charter so deposited may be amended, or revised, by proposal therefor made by said board and accepted by a majority of the qualified voters of such city or village voting at the next general or special election thereafter; but such charter shall always be in harmony with and subject to the constitution and laws of the State of Minnesota. The legislature may prescribe the duties of said board relative to submitting amendments of such charter to the vote of the people and shall provide that upon application of ten per cent of the legal voters of any such city or village by written petition, such board shall submit to the vote of the people proposed amendments to such charter set forth in said petition.

The board above provided for, shall be permanent and all vacancies by death, disability to perform duties, resignation or removal from the corporate limits, or expiration of term of office, shall be filled by appointment in the same manner as the original board was created, and said board shall always contain its full complement of members.

Any such charter or any amendment or revision thereof may provide for the commission form of government having legislative and administrative powers, or it may provide for a mayor or chief magistrate, and a legislative body of either one or two houses and, if of two houses, at least one of them shall be elected by a general vote of the electors, or it may provide for any other plan or system of municipal government; provided that the plan or form of government so adopted shall not violate the constitution of the state as hereby amended.

In submitting any such charter or amendment thereto, or revision thereof to the qualified voters of such city or village, any alternative section or article may be presented for the choice of the voters and may be voted on separately without prejudice to other articles or sections of the charter, or any amendments thereto or revision thereof.

The legislature may provide general laws relative to affairs of cities, the application of which may be limited to cities of over fifty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of fifty thousand and not less than twenty thousand inhabitants, or to cities of twenty thousand and not less than ten thousand inhabitants, or to cities of ten thousand inhabitants or less, which shall apply equally to all cities of either class, or if so specified in the law, to all cities in either such class not having charters adopted pursuant to this amendment, but no general law limited to one or more of said classes of cities shall apply to any city existing under a charter framed under this section of the constitution unless such general law shall be made applicable to such city by a declaration, therein, naming the city. Such laws shall be paramount while in force to the provisions relating to the same matter included in the local charter herein provided for.

The legislature shall enact any and all laws necessary or proper to carry into effect the provisions of this amendment, and shall prescribe by law the general limits within which such charter shall be framed. No local charter, provision or ordinance passed thereunder shall supersede any general law of the state defining or punishing crimes or misdemeanors."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and object of this amendment is to permit cities already incorporated and villages desiring to be incorporated as cities to include in their charters, or by amendment or revision thereof, a commission form of government having legislative and administrative powers. The amendment sought enlarges the power of such municipalities in framing their own charters, reserving to the legislature, however, the authority to prescribe the general limits within which the said charters shall be framed.

A commission form of city government is generally understood to include the following characteristic features: 1. A small governing board; 2. The exercise of both legislative and administrative duties by this board; 3. The division among the members of the board of the administrative work of the city by departments over which a single member of the governing board of the city has control; 4. The election of the members of the governing board by all of the voters of the city and not by wards, precincts or districts. 5. The adoption of methods of direct popular control over the action and the continuance in office of the members of the governing board.

AMENDMENT NO. V.
County Superintendents of Schools.

By this Amendment it is sought to enlarge the provisions of Section 7, of Article 7, of the Constitution, which Section now reads as follows:

"Section 7. Every person who by the provisions of this article shall be entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office which now is, or hereafter shall be, elective by the people in the district wherein he shall have resided thirty days previous to such election, except as otherwise provided in this constitution, or the constitution and laws of the United States."

So that it will read as follows:

"Section 7. Every person who by the provisions of this article shall be entitled to vote at any election shall be eligible to any office which now is, or hereafter shall be, elective by the people in the district wherein he shall have resided thirty days previous to such election, except county superintendents of schools who shall be required to have educational and professional qualifications to be determined by the legislature, and except as otherwise provided in the constitution, or the constitution and laws of the United States."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and effect of this amendment is to authorize the legislature to require educational and professional qualifications, in addition to all the other qualifications now required by law, for any person seeking the office of County Superintendent of Schools. As the Constitution now stands, any legal voter is eligible to the office of County Superintendent of Schools.

AMENDMENT NO. VI.
State Senate.

Section 2 of Article 4 of the Constitution now reads as follows:

"Section 2. The number of members who compose the senate and house of representatives shall be prescribed by law, but the representation in the senate shall never exceed one member for every five thousand inhabitants, and in the house of representatives one member for every two thousand inhabitants. The representation in both houses shall be apportioned equally throughout the different sections of the state, in proportion to the population thereof, exclusive of Indians not taxable under the provisions of law."

It is proposed to substitute therefor the following:

"Section 2. Number of members. The senate shall be composed of sixty-three (63) members, and the house of representatives shall be composed of such number of members as may be prescribed by law. The representation in both houses shall be apportioned as nearly equal as practicable, throughout the different sections of the state in proportion to the population thereof, exclusive of Indians not taxable under the provisions of law. Provided, however, that a county may be divided into several legislative districts, but no county or any of the parts thereof shall ever constitute or be a part of more than seven (7) senatorial districts and not more than seven senators shall ever be apportioned to any one county."

PURPOSE AND EFFECT. The purpose and object of this amendment is to limit the State senate to sixty-three (63) members and to prevent any one county having more than seven (7) senators.

Yours respectfully,
LYNDON A. SMITH,
Attorney General.

BOYS' HANDICRAFT

DETAILS OF CABINET FOR THE BOY MAGICIAN'S "DISAPPEARING DOLL" TRICK

THE DISAPPEARING DOLL TRICK FOR THE BOY MAGICIAN.

Every boy is greatly interested in conjuring, but today there is such a variety of things to keep him busy that he hasn't the time to give up to this subject that he would have had a few years ago when there were fewer pastimes for boys. In the same way that newer pastimes are occupying the attention of boys, later novelties in entertainment are crowding out stage magic. But magical stunts are about the simplest acts to prepare for a boys' show, and they are always greatly appreciated by an audience, so they should occupy a prominent place upon the program.

It is not my intention at present to go into the subject of conjuring beyond the point of describing how to make and operate the apparatus for a very unique stunt "The Disappearing Doll." This trick is a modification of one of the so-called "cabinet" tricks, which is extremely simple to carry out and always mystifying to an audience.

In the professional act, the magician places a woman inside of a cabinet that stands upon a table, after having exposed all sides of the cabinet to view of the audience, then he closes the front, binds the cabinet lengthwise with heavy rope, sets it down upon the floor, and places it inside of a sack which he ties. Then after the use of his wand and the utterance of some words of magic, the operations are reversed, the cabinet is removed from the sack, the ropes are cut, the front is opened, and behold! the lady occupant has vanished.

You will understand this trick when I explain our disappearing doll stunt, which is carried out in the same way but on a small scale. Fig. 2 shows the completed cabinet. This should be made out of a box about 6 inches deep, 7 inches wide, and 11 inches long. Remove one end of the box, being careful not to split it in doing so, and pivot it between the sides as shown at A (Figs. 3 and 4), driving a brad through each side into the center of each end edge. This piece must be carefully placed so it will swing up into its former position in the end of the box, without showing any indication of being pivoted. A nail-head should be driven in each side of pivot nail A, as at B (Figs. 3 and 4), to give the appearance of a solidly fastened end. It may be necessary to plane off a trifle of the back edge of the end piece to make it turn easily. To provide for locking the end so it will not turn, make a small hole through the back of the box (C, Fig. 4) and in the back edge of the end piece (D), and push a small brad into these holes for a locking pin (E). Hinge on the cover of the box with strips of leather, and the constructive part of the work will be finished.

The doll used in the trick must have a small enough head and body to slip through the rear opening in the end of the cabinet. Line the inside of the cabinet with cloth of a bright color, gathering it around the edge and stuffing in a little cotton or cloth underneath to give it a soft padded appearance.

The boy magician needs an assistant for this trick, who must be concealed either underneath a table by means of a drapery fastened around the legs, or in the box of a table made out of a packing-case similar to that shown in Fig. 1. The cabinet must first be turned around so the audience may inspect all sides, then the doll must be placed within, the cover closed, and the cabinet tied with a heavy cord. Upon the tying of this cord much of the success of the trick depends, for with a cord passed around the box both lengthwise and crosswise, it will appear to the audience impossible for any portion of the box to open. However, you will see by Fig. 4 that the pivoted end opens very easily when the cord tied lengthwise of the cabinet comes just to one side of the center of that end.

While passing the twine around the sides and ends, the cabinet should be kept near the center of the table. If a cloth has been spread over the table, the audience can plainly see that there is no possibility of the doll disappearing through a trap door in the table. When the ends of the cord have been brought around to the top, the cabinet can be rested upon the edge of the table without arousing the suspicions of the audience, for they have seen the cord passed around all sides; this is the time for the assistant to act quickly. He must reach out from his position under the table (Fig. 1), withdraw the locking pin E (Fig. 4), turn the pivoted end of the cabinet, pull out the doll, and then close and lock the pivoted end. In the professional trick, the occupant of the cabinet escapes similarly through a trap-door in the stage floor, after the cabinet has been tied up and stood upon the floor. The cabinet should now be placed inside of a small bag, a wand passed around it and a few magic words spoken; then it should be taken from the bag, untied, and the empty interior exposed to the view of the audience. After making the doll disappear, you can bring it back into the cabinet by having the assistant replace it in the same way that he removed it, while the magician is tying the cord around it; and by preparing two cabinets, it is a simple trick to make the doll pass from one cabinet to the other, and back again.

HELPS TO SATISFY THIRST
A Little Acid in Cool Water Has Most Beneficial Effect on the Whole System.

Thirst is the cry of the entire system for water. It is referred to the throat, very naturally, and for the same reason that hunger is referred to the stomach. This is especially noticeable if the mouth has been kept open, as in fear or excitement, or in walking or working in this very improper way, simply because the rapid breathing has dried the throat by evaporation. The same effect is seen when the throat has been irritated by drinking ice-water, or holding ice in the mouth, either of which increases the sensation of thirst.

What is most needed is a good drink of cool water. If the water be slightly acidulated the dryness of the throat is relieved, probably because the acid starts the flow of the saliva. Lemon juice, or a little citric or tartaric acid, or a few drops of cider vinegar added to the glass of water is sufficient. Sweetening does not interfere with this effect.

Effective Finger Prints.

Finger prints of new-born babes, it has been demonstrated, will serve to identify them through life. The Survey approves the offer by the Men and Religion Movement in this city, acting on Capt. Joseph A. Faurot's suggestion, to persuade all men of the churches, and, in fact, all residents, to place the impressions of their fingers in the records of the police department. It is important for the innocent, as well as for the guilty, that a method be employed to ascertain whether they have ever been under arrest. There is nothing inherently disgraceful in a finger-print record, any more than in a personal signature.—New York Tribune.

Useful Memorial Given State.

A mountain as a memorial to General Harriman, governor of New Hampshire from 1867 to 1868, has been given to the state by his son-in-law, Joseph Lesson, to be known as the Walter Harriman reservation, includes Stewart Mink hill, 1,800 feet high, and an extensive tract of land around it. The summit of the hill has a fifty mile view of the White mountain scenery, and the slopes are covered with picturesque timber growths and meadows. The state will utilize the reservation for the study and teaching of forestry. It will be open to the public as a park.—Magazine of American History.

Man's Inconsistency.

"You have attained fortune and are enabled to live at ease, surrounded by every luxury."

"Yes," replied the successful citizen: "and yet I have to miss a lot of pleasure. I'm terribly disappointed because I won't have time to sneak off at daybreak with a sandwich in my pocket and wade waist deep in a mountain stream suspected of containing trout."

Uses for Dandelions.

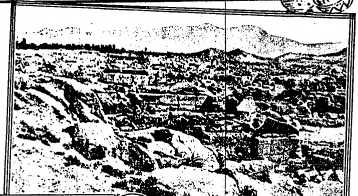
Dandelions, says a writer in the Country Gentleman, can be used for many appetising dishes, and from them can be made also a kind of dandelion "shrub," a dandelion "coffee," and dandelion preserves. They may also be canned and kept for use in seasons when suggestions of spring will be welcome.

The DEAD CITY of CAJAMARQUILLA

By Charles Warren Currier, Ph. D.

Of the thousands of people who inhabit Lima, or of the many who, in the winter months, take a run up to Chosica, on the Oroya railway, there is probably not one in a hundred who knows anything of Cajamarquilla. I was about to leave the capital of Peru without dreaming that, within a stone's throw, there were slumbering the ruins of a prehistoric civilization that had not yet passed away when Pizarro laid the foundation of the City of the Sovereigns.

The sacred city of Pachacamac is known to, and mentioned by every traveler who includes Lima within the limits of his itinerary. It has been visited and described from the days of the Conquistadores with more or less accuracy, until Dr. Max Uhle made a special study of it and published his monumental work. If these ruins of the Lurin valley are world famous, it is not thus with those of the valley of the Rimac, and if Pachacamac is known to all, solitary Cajamarquilla is buried in an obscurity as deep as the sand that covers it, while few, very few, authors even make mention of it.



RUINS OF CAJAMARQUILLA, PERU

CEMETERY OF NIEVERIA NEAR CAJAMARQUILLA

STREET SCENE IN CAJAMARQUILLA

I said that I was about to leave Lima. It was the eve of my departure when I learned from Professor Saville, of New York, the well-known Ecuadorian explorer, that he had visited the ruins that very day. How I wished that I could have accompanied him! I concluded that regrets were useless, and I was about to relinquish all hope of ever seeing the old Peruvian city, when I learned that the departure from Callao of the Ucayali had been postponed for a day. Communicating this fact to Doctor Saville, he most graciously volunteered to accompany me on the morrow. It was an opportunity I readily grasped.

Thus it happened that we met by appointment at the Lima station of the Oroya railroad at 8:30 on a morning early in July. Gray clouds, as usually, hung heavily over the city when we boarded the train, which soon pulled out of the station, to begin the steep journey up the Andean slopes. A little way outside of Lima the sun was shining in a cloudless sky, scattering its rays through an atmosphere as transparent as any you could wish to see in Castile or Aragon. Here and there on the route the adobe ruins of pre-Inca civilization might be observed, for the Rimac valley is richer in such ruins than any other part of the coast.

The morning was bright and exhilarating when we arrived at Santa Clara railway station. Leaving Mrs. Saville to proceed to Chosica, the professor, his young son, and myself alighted. A little mule car, run on tracks, awaited us. It might accommodate about nine persons. We sprang to the seats, the driver whipped up his mules, and off we were on the long, sandy road between fields of sugar cane. Poor mules, cut and bleeding, how we pitied them! But in those countries animals are handled without mercy.

A run of a couple of miles or more, passing on the way the little train that is used to haul the cane, or carry the laborers, we arrived near the dwelling of the hacienda, now leased, I understand, by Chinese. Some distance from the house we alighted, to continue the journey on foot in the direction of the mountains. For a while we had a good, though dusty road, but the greater part of the journey had to be made through sandy plains, which did not improve our personal appearance, so that we presented a picture of dust and wretchedness on our return to the Hotel Maury in Lima. Our way was now and then obstructed by adobe walls, or by the canals used for irrigation, and over these we had to climb or jump. It was not long before we caught sight of the ruins, solitary and abandoned. With the exception of a herd of cattle and the mounted herdsmen, besides an occasional buzzard or vulture, no living being was in sight.

Cajamarquilla lies about 23 miles from Lima, as you ascend the valley of the Rimac, but in a side valley, in a plain among the spurs of the Andes. The valley is watered by a canal, dug, probably, at a period antedating the advent of the Spaniards. In the vicinity are several haciendas, such as Huachipa and La Niverca, and an occasional "tambo" or rural inn, where, if you care to, some kind of refreshment may be had. These, however, are hardly visible from the ruins, near which one solitary hut is to be seen. Years ago, when Squier visited the place, the ruins were the haunt of robbers that gave no little trouble to the Peruvian authorities, but the railroad has driven them out of business, and it is now quite safe to visit Cajamarquilla. In fact, the thought of robbers was not connected in my mind with Cajarmarquilla, until I read Squier's work.

During our brief stay among the ruins it was impossible to make anything like measurements, except with the eye, but as far as the vision extended towards the mountain we saw nothing but ruins which stretched to a great distance to right and left. Toward the river they seemed to melt away into the plain. Squier says that they cover an area of nearly a square league, and Middendorf estimates their extent at four square kilometers. From my observations, the ruins consist of houses built of immense adobe blocks, closely adjoining each other, here and there separated by streets. Some of the houses consist of several apartments. Admission is gained through a low doorway, but nowhere is there a sign of a window. As in Pompeii, the roofs, whatever may have been the material of their construction, have long since fallen in. Outside the buildings, the soil has risen to a great height, sometimes nearly to the top of the wall, but inside the walls the depth gives an idea of the original height of perhaps 10 feet or more. Toward the mountain, a large portion of the city is almost completely buried in the sand, which in the course of ages has come drifting down from the hills. There are within the city a few elevations or small hills, which may have been occupied by temples or forts. Pits are everywhere within and without the houses, with a width of from two to four and a depth ranging from six to twenty feet or more. Human remains in the shape of skulls and bones are found within the pits or scattered over the ground, together with bits of pottery and other articles, such as corncobs, which were probably interred with the dead. Some of these pits are said to have served the purposes of storehouses or granaries, while others were certainly graves. The inhabitants of the city buried their dead within or in the immediate vicinity of their houses, although the mass of the people must have used the necropolis, some distance away from the residences. Many of these pits, excavated in the hard soil, are in the form of a jar or urn, while others are square.

Squier thus describes the ruins as he saw them:

"These consist of three great groups of buildings on and around the central mass, with streets passing between them. It would be impossible to describe this complicated maze of massive adobe walls, most of them still standing, albeit much shattered by earthquakes, or to convey an idea of the pyramidal edifices, rising stage on stage, with terraces and broad flights of steps leading to their summits."

He adds that the history of the place has been lost to tradition.

As standing on an eminence, surrounded by the ruins, with the silence of death upon you, you look down upon what was once a city, capable of containing a population of ten or twelve thousand, you wonder what people dwelt there. The accumulation of soil and the fact that a large part of the city is buried would indicate remote antiquity, and a possible destruction of the place long before the advent of the Europeans, were it not for what Estete tells us. Miguel Estete accompanied Hernando Pizarro from Caxamarca to Pachacamac, at the time when Atahualpa's people were scouring the country to collect sufficient gold for the ransom of their unfortunate chief. He gives us the itinerary of Hernando day by day until the return to Caxamarca. Wherever he goes he finds the country thickly populated with towns and villages, surrounded by cultivated fields of maize and orchards, with flocks of a kind of sheep. He judges that Pachacamac is of considerable antiquity, and he finds within it a certain number of ruins. No mention is made of Cajamarquilla, yet it is probable that his journey led him through the valley of the Rimac, and Markham even supposes that he passed over the present site of Lima.

According to Middendorf, who infers his statement from Estete's narrative, the valley was at that time thickly populated, having besides many smaller places three large towns, Huadca, now Huatica, Armatambo, and Cajamarquilla. Huadca, he says, was the principal town of the district. Its ruins still exist between Lima and the village of Magdalena, but they seem to be even less known than those of Cajamarquilla.

The valley, together with the entire coast, was overrun and conquered by the Incas, a century or more before the arrival of the Spaniards, about the time that these lords of the Peruvian uplands imposed their rule on the Grand Chimu farther north and on Pachacamac. Though there is little or nothing to indicate an Inca occupation at Cajamarquilla, it is quite likely that after the conquest its population more or less mingled with the conquerors. To judge from the names of places in the conquered districts, the victors imposed their language, no doubt gradually supplanting the original tongue of the valleys and coastlands. Caxamarca is a Quechua name, meaning "rock city." Caxamarquilla is the Spanish diminutive of Caxamarca. The city in the Rimac valley was thus called Little Caxamarca, to distinguish it, no doubt, from that other Caxamarca to the north, so intimately connected with the sad history of Atahualpa.

Among old writers who have treated of the coast people that preceded the Incas, Don Francisco de Avila, priest in the principal village of Huarochiri, may be profitably consulted. His work was translated and published by Sir Clement Markham, in the forty-eighth volume of the Hakluyt series.

Unfortunately, Cajamarquilla furnishes little data to the archaeologist. It contains no inscriptions, no works of art, and its pits have been opened and searched, probably by treasure hunters, who have long since carried off any objects of value they may have contained.

Yet the ruins are of the greatest interest for the beauty of their situation, their general plan, and their adobe architecture. Cajamarquilla must rank as one of the finest remains of that mysterious pre-Inca civilization which existed on the coast between the Pacific ocean and the mighty Andean ranges. Unlike the massive ruins on Lake Titicaca, or the oft-mentioned Pachacamac, it has attracted little attention on the part either of tourist or scientist, and its history does not exist. Yet a careful study of its houses, with their apartments, of its streets, and of its burial places may, I think, throw some light on the mode of life of the primitive people that once dwelt within it. The ethnologist may also find some material in the skulls that lie scattered throughout the ruined city, or buried in its pits.

As you wander through the Rimac valley and contemplate its vast solitudes and crumbling ruins, you ask yourself what has become of the population. Alas, what has become of the Indian population of the West Indies, and where are our Indians of the United States? They have melted away before Caucasian civilization.

Some day a patient explorer and archaeologist may pitch his tents among the ruins of Cajamarquilla to study them in detail and force them to reveal some of their secrets. At least he may give us a plan of the city, and reconstruct it, drawing some order from its confusion.

For the present, Cajamarquilla is a mystery. It has neither history nor tradition; no legends cluster around it; its existence is ignored; even archaeologists appear to neglect it. It is, in very truth, a dead city of the desert.

Passed an Unquiet Night

Traveler, Lost in the Bush, Was Glad to Do Without the Blessings of Slumber.

But I had never given a thought to the course I had taken in my gallop across the veldt. I kept on and on, and before long it grew dark and somewhat cold. So I dismounted, and after thinking it over, I knee-haltered the horse and let him go, crept head first into a large ant-bear hole for a night's lodging, and made myself as comfortable as possible under the circumstances, using the blesbok hide for a blanket. The night was dark as pitch.

Sleep was out of question. I suppose it was the haunches and the raw hide that attracted the creatures, but before long it really seemed as if I had settled down in a village of wild pigs and insulted the whole community. To begin with, squealing incessantly, they seemed to be racing round and round in a circle, taking me for its center. Then a number of jackals drawing nearer and nearer, joined in the chorus. But I soon discovered that if I disliked the noise I fairly dreaded the silence. During the quiet spells I knew that something was chewing industriously at the projecting ends of the raw hide in which I was enveloped. It was hard work for me to keep from kicking incessantly, but whenever I rested for a minute the chewing developed into vigorous tugs, the significance of which it was easy for one in my position to appreciate.

However, I kicked the night through in safety, and early in the morning, to my delight, I found my horse a short distance away, nibbling contentedly at his breakfast.—Atlantic Monthly.

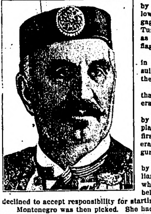
WHO'S WHO AND WHY

KING NICHOLAS PICKED TO START WAR



Declaration of war against Turkey by King Nicholas of Montenegro, followed quickly by several severe engagements between Montenegrin and Turkish forces, are regarded merely as the beginning of a general conflagration in the Balkan states.

It is believed that the other units in the Balkan coalition will follow suit as soon as the mobilization of the armies is complete.

There is only a faint hope now that the representations of the powers will avert general hostilities.

Montenegro's move is considered by many to be part of a prearranged plan. It is asserted that Greece was first selected by the Balkan confederation to force the issue and inaugurate the war.

This could easily have been done by Greece seating in the Greek parliament the deputies from Crete, which was certain to prove a casus belli to Turkey. Greece, however, declined to accept responsibility for starting the flame of battle.

Montenegro was then picked. She had a long standing quarrel with Turkey over the boundary question and Turkey's refusal to grant satisfaction was seized upon as justification for Montenegro's resort to arms. One leading European diplomat said:

"It looks as if our fine European diplomacy had been beaten by the cleverness of the Balkan states. These states have grown weary of Ottoman promises. Turkey's recent decisions to inaugurate reforms, which were considered unsatisfactory, and the slowness and hesitancy of certain powers to join in urgent intervention, has led the Balkan peoples to feel that the battlefield was the only sure means of exacting what they felt to be justice."

NEW FIELD OPEN TO E. T. FAIRCHILD

E. T. Fairchild, president of the National Educational association, and superintendent of education of the state of Kansas, has been tendered the presidency of New Hampshire Agricultural college.

The practical benefits of education have been emphasized by Mr. Fairchild in his work in Kansas. The conventional treatment of the sciences in the secondary schools was objected to by Mr. Fairchild as unsuited to the pupil and to his actual needs when he got out of school. It is his idea that all text books, especially in high schools, should follow the plan demanded by teachers of arithmetic—that all the problems presented be of things that concern the active life of the child.

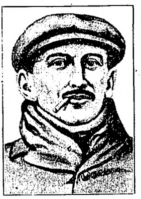
"The present text books are for advanced work and are not practical," Mr. Fairchild said recently. "While the books are written for boys and girls of high school age, still they are so technical and so full of definitions that often they are of no practical use to children after they are through school.

"I believe there is a real demand for textbooks in botany that shall abandon, to a degree at least, the conventional treatment and that will use, as illustrative material, the plant life about us. It is possible to study with profit the trees, the flowers, the wheat, and to learn from them the great truths of the vegetable kingdom.

"There is much practical knowledge to be gained in the physics, but in these too much stress is laid to the theories and not enough to the practical everyday propositions which come up around the farm or the home."

Mr. Fairchild has worked for the betterment of the rural schools. His investigations showed that of the 12 million rural school children in the United States only 25 per cent were completing the grades. That condition was due in a large measure, Mr. Fairchild believed, to the rural schools themselves, their unattractive surroundings and the impractical method of teaching.

LE GAGNEUX BREAKS ALTITUDE RECORD



M. G. Le Gagneux, the aviator, who the other day at Paris reached the tremendous height of 7,067 yards, more than four miles, when he broke the man-flying record for altitude, has given a graphic description of his feat and sensations.

That his achievement was even greater than it at first seemed was proven by the official and corrected calculations made from the self-registering instruments which he carried on his marine monoplane.

Le Gagneux has gone farther from the earth in a flying machine than any other.

Le Gagneux says: "In two and a half minutes I was 1,500 yards in the air. In seven and a half minutes I was 2,500 yards up, and a little higher I flew into a dead calm. At an altitude of 3,125 yards I found myself in a fog so thick that I could see nothing.

"It grew very cold. I was warmly clad but I felt the chill keenly. The moisture turned to icicles on my face. Only by my barometers could I tell I was still ascending. At 5,020 yards I began to inhale oxygen, as I had been advised. They tell me I used forty quarts of oxygen. In thirty-five minutes I had reached 5,260 yards, beating all records, but I kept on up, up.

"At 12:45 I remembered my luncheon engagement. Ten minutes later I had reached the height of 7,067 yards. I descended like lightning. At 1 o'clock I was at my rendezvous for luncheon, feeling certain that I could have gone higher."

SENATOR T. P. GORE BLINDED IN YOUTH

United States Senator Thomas Pryor Gore of Oklahoma is known as "The man that never sleeps" and "The man that never forgets anything." He is one of the remarkable men in American history, because from a poor little boy in Mississippi, blind from the time he was eleven years old, he has arisen by his own effort and indomitable will and courage to become a statesman, a scholar and a foremost citizen.

"The blind senator from Oklahoma" is known all over the country and the people like him because of his amiability, his intelligence, his high character, his oratory and his success as a statesman.

Many persons wonder how he became blind. His sight is totally destroyed. When he was about eight years old he was struck in the left eye by a stick which a young companion threw on the ground and which bounded back. The eye was destroyed. And when he was eleven years old he was a page in the Mississippi state senate. He bought an air gun to take home as a present for a brother, and at the hotel where he was stopping several children were eager to see how the thing worked. Young Gore was just as anxious to show them.

In endeavoring to manipulate the gun a rod become stuck in the barrel and young Gore "peeked" into the barrel with his good eye to see what was wrong. In some manner the gun was discharged and the rod destroyed the right eye. For a time he could still distinguish certain objects, but by the time he was fifteen years old his sight was entirely gone, and he has been totally blind ever since.

GOT RICH IN THREE YEARS

EXPERIENCES OF A BRITISH IMMIGRANT IN CANADA-WEST.

The following straightforward statement needs no comment to add to its force and effect. It appears in a recent issue of the Liverpool Mercury.

H. Patterson, of Nutana, Saskatchewan, Canada, when he arrived from Liverpool, had "Six of us to support," to use his own phraseology, and his funds were getting low. He secured a homestead 32 miles out from Sundurn, and started living on it April 15, 1907. The previous fall he put all his money, $137, into a shack and lot, making sure of a home. As cook and caterer in a local hotel he made $75 a month, and out of this had some savings out of which he paid his breaking and improvements on the homestead. The shack was sold to good advantage. Then Mr. Patterson tells the story after he had removed his family to the homestead:

"For the first month life was so strange and new that I hadn't time to think of anything, only fixing up our new home. I was so 'green' to farm life that I didn't know the difference between wheat and oats (I do now)! Between working out, cropping my place, and with my gun, we managed to live comfortably for the three years, which time was required to put in my duties. I had accumulated quite a stock of horses, cows, pigs, fowls, and machinery in the three years.

"In October, 1909, I secured my patent to my land, so took a few days' holidays to Saskatoon to locate a purchased homestead (viz., 12s. per acre) from the Government. Instead of getting the purchased homestead, I secured a half section (320 acres) on the Saskatchewan River for $25 per acre on easy terms, nine years' payments with a cash payment of $1,000. I mortgaged my first homestead, obtained chattel mortgages on my stock, and on December 24th, 1909, took possession; on June 10, 1910, I sold out again for $40 per acre, clearing, besides my crop (140 acres), $4,800. I also sold my first homestead, clearing $1,800 and two Saskatoon town lots, which we value at $1,000 each today. We placed all our capital in another farm (river frontage) and some trackage lots (60), also a purchased homestead (river frontage). I remained as Manager of the Farm I had sold on a three years' contract at a fine salary and house, garden, and numerous privileges.

"So by the time my three years have expired, with my investments and the increased value of my frontage and lots, I am hoping to have a clear profit on my $137 investment of $50,000. My land doesn't eat anything, and it is nearly all paid for. I hold a good position (and secure)"—Adv.

Choosing a Wife.

An old Virginia gentleman who said he knew the way to pick a wife was willing to recommend it to young men. His advice is: See how she looks in the morning! The old Virginia gentleman, when getting married himself sent his valet across the country to take a look at two sisters in the early morning. One looked well and one didn't. One found a husband. One didn't. So, ladies, beware! these facts are important if true. And true they are as sure as you are women. Men hate a woman who looks frowsy in the morning.

WOMEN SHOULD BE PROTECTED

Against So Many Surgical Operations. How Mrs. Bethune and Mrs. Moore Escaped.

Sikeston, Mo.—"For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I cramped and had backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to take and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do my own housework, hoe my garden, and milk a cow. I can entertain company and enjoy them. I can visit when I choose, and walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the month. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl."—Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Murrayville, Ill.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a very bad case of female trouble and it made me a well woman. My health was all broken down, the doctors said I must have an operation, and I was ready to go to the hospital, but dreaded it so that I began taking your Compound. I got along so well that I gave up the doctors and was saved from the operation."—Mrs. CHARLES MOORE, R. R. No. 3, Murrayville, Ill.

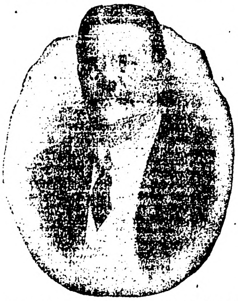
HARRY E. IVES



Harry E. Ives, republican nominee for clerk of the district court, has been a resident of what is now Pennington county, continuously since 1883.

He was appointed clerk of the district court for the newly created county of Pennington by the board in November, 1910, and we think he has made good as an official. He has attended strictly to the duties of the office, has been courteous and obliging, has a good understanding of the duties, has been impartial, and has honestly administered the duties of the office, and is, we think, fairly and justly entitled to an election. He was nominated in the republican primaries on Sept. 17, winning over three opponents by a large plurality. We think we can easily promise the voters of Pennington county that if they elect Mr. Ives they will have a clerk of court who will attend strictly to the duties of the office in an efficient, honest and impartial manner.—Thief River Falls News-Press.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald. The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Saturday, November 2, 1912.

The village council has found it necessary to call another election for the purpose of voting on the question of bonding the village, the proceedings relative to the first issue having been found illegal on account of technical errors. The voters should turn out and make a better showing the next time.

This ballot mix up works both ways. The Roosevelt electors are barred in Idaho and the Taft electors in South Dakota. Regardless of which may suffer and which may benefit, it is an unsatisfactory and an un-American proposition. Every voter should have full opportunity to vote for the man of his choice, whether it is Roosevelt in Idaho or Taft in California.

President Pennington of the Soo railway has an opportunity to become a British lord. He is in line as heir to the estate of his uncle, Lord Muncaster, who is 75 years of age and childless. To accept the estate and title President Pennington would have to quit America and become a British citizen. He very sensibly refuses to do this, stating that he has a better job where he is. The head of an American railway system is a bigger man than any lord in Britain.

Farmers Warned against Socialism

The declaration in the socialist national platform threatening to deprive 5,000,000 American farmers of their farms, has roused former Governor W. D. Hoard of Wisconsin, editor, agriculturist, and statesman, to protest against the socialist proposals. The portion of the socialist program to which he most objects, as a representative of the farmers, is that demanding:

"The collective ownership of land, wherever practicable, and in cases where such ownership is impracticable, the appropriation by taxation of the annual rental value of all land held for speculation or exploitation."

In his arraignment of socialism as applied to the farmer, the former governor says:

"Socialism; as I see it and as expounded by most of its theorists, is, I believe, a dangerous doctrine for the American farmer. It means the destruction of his former individuality and independence; his control over his own fortune and property. It enters into the minor details of his life, socially and vocationally, subjects him to the interference of the state as to the conduct of his business to an extent never dreamed of by the founders of our government. It seeks justification for this interference under the assumption that there is an undue amount of evil and hardship in the relations of men. This may be admitted with the observation that socialism will not change human nature.

"A change of system will bring its own evils as hard or harder to bear. Our present arrangement of community life and government has at least this advantage: We understand it; we know with what we have to contend.

"Socialism seeks justification by indicting our system of living together as a people. It ignores the good we have done, the improvements in the methods and comforts of life, the advancement of our civilization, and says our whole system is wrong because, forsooth, certain evils exist, when evil is inseparable from human nature and always will be.

"The antipathy with which the average socialist regards capital and all property that he cannot control is very suspicious to my mind. There is more than the dream of a theorist in it. It is a scheme to obtain control over the minds and judgments of men; and particularly over their votes, whereby to secure mastery over the taxing power. In all ages just in proportion as the electorate have given control of the power to levy taxes to a select coterie, they have been most sorely exploited.

"So far the socialists have made but little headway with the voters who have earned and possess landed property. Their strength lies in large cities, where there is a large number of voters who do not own the homes they live in, but who have votes.

"The farmer is both a capitalist and a hand laborer. If he can be induced to abandon his present well entrenched position, of the rights of individual ownership, the socialists will have achieved a great triumph and the farmer suffer a complete destruction of his native independence and control over his own destiny.

"The American system of law and government is being attacked, as Washington foresaw, by many foes from within. Great unrest prevails, and largely so because the people, and the farmer with the rest, have been too prosperous. The amassing of great riches on the part of certain capitalists has been accomplished also by the massing of great numbers of the poor in dense communities, and much distress and hardship has ensued. But the right to own property is an American right, from the millionaire down to the humblest house owner and the smallest farmer. 'There is no such thing as property rights without human rights.'

"The weekly wage of the laboring man is capital—his capital—as well as the dividend of the millionaire. Organize society to destroy the right of the rich to their property, and you will soon invalidate the right of the farmer to his farm and the laboring man to his wages.

"In my opinion the farmer can find no safer form of government, no better system of relationship with his fellow men than that bequeathed to him and all other classes by our fathers. If he is wise to his own salvation he will stand like a rock for representative government; the right of property as humanity. If he does this he will turn a deaf ear to all the wiles and sophisms of socialism."

A Gift with a Thought in It

There's one very simple way out of the Christmas shopping problem; don't shop, but sit quietly at home and subscribe for The Youth's Companion. The chances are, too, that no present you could buy for the young friend or the family you delight to honor could confer so much pleasure as this gift of The Youth's Companion for a whole round year—fifty-two weeks' issues, and the fifty-second as keenly anticipated and enjoyed as the very first.

There will be stories for readers of every age; sound advice as to athletics; suggestions for the girl at college or making her own way in the world; good things for every member of the family—all for $2.00—less than four cents a week.

The one to whom you give the subscription will receive free all the remaining issues of 1912, as well as The Companion window transparency and calendar for 1913, in rich translucent colors. It is to be hung in the window or over the lamp shade. You, too, as giver of the present will receive a copy of it.

Fine for the Ladies

A new German invention for supplementing natural tresses in hair made of artificial silk, which has the texture of real hair. It can be dried the exact color of natural hair, no matter how difficult the shade may be. This new silk hair is certain to be extremely popular. It is clean, to begin with, and may be washed at any time as easily as any other kind of silk. Besides that, it has a great deal of body, and when made into tails and transformations holds much better than real hair. It is glossy and will submit to brilliantine or oil like the loose hair switches, and when once curled keeps the curl much better than ordinary false hair. This is almost as much of an improvement as golden grain belt beer is over the old-fashioned kind. Alex Thompson, agent, Crookston. adv

Council Proceedings

Special meeting of the village council of the village of St. Hilaire held Oct. 30, 1912, for the purpose of considering bond issue.

Meeting called to order by President J. C. Dahl. All members present.

On motion duly made and carried the proceedings of the village council relative to the bond issue voted upon Aug. 30, 1912, were revoked, they having been found illegal on account of technical errors.

The following resolution, offered by C. Swanson and seconded by Councilman Hovet, was duly adopted:

Resolved by the village council of the village of St. Hilaire, Pennington county, Minnesota, that said village, acting under and by virtue of chapter 123 of the laws of Minnesota for the year 1905, and for the purpose of refunding its floating indebtedness, issue subject to the approval of the legal voters, its bonds to the amount of four thousand dollars, to bear date Nov. 9, 1912, to mature 15 years from the day of the date thereof, and to bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, payable annually; and that said proposition be submitted to the qualified electors of said village for their approval and determination at a special election to be called for that purpose and to be held on the 9th day of November, 1912.

There being no further business the meeting adjourned.

WENT BACK ON BENEFACTOR.

Philanthropic Women Disappointed in Their Protege.

The late Mrs. Clara Dewey How of Philadelphia, whose philanthropic work among immigrants made her well known, had a trenchant wit, and one afternoon in Philadelphia, discussing the woman suffrage movement with a clergyman, she said:

"You men are all alike. You all resemble the orphan that Mrs. Stanton and her friends brought up. Mrs. Stanton and a body of ladies from her church all interested in woman suffrage, once took a little newsboy from the gutter and educated him superbly. They sent him through school and college and finally made a minister of him.

"This young minister, the work of their hands, preached his first sermon in their church. That was a proud Sunday morning for the good ladies. They thought they had at last firmly planted among the male sex a strong and splendid supporter. So, in their best bonnets, they filled the church that Sunday morning. They were on tiptoe with expectation. Who could tell but that their young charge might preach in their honor a woman suffrage sermon?

"Imagine their emotions when the youth arose in the pulpit, looked calmly and even sternly over the congregation and announced that his text would be from St. Paul:

"'Let the women keep silence in the church.'"

Made Carlyle "[illegible] Out."

Rev. Thomas Alexander, a Presbyterian minister, long resident in Chelsea and well known as a brother Scot, was most anxious to know Carlyle, but had no opportunity of getting an introduction to him. One day in the King's road he saw Carlyle coming in his direction and took advantage of the opportunity by going up to the sage and saying: "Thomas Carlyle, I believe?" Carlyle's reply was: "Tom Alexander, I know!" They became good friends, and later Mr. Alexander wrote to Carlyle for a subscription toward a school building fund, and Carlyle wrote back a refusal in doggerel, whereupon Mr. Alexander replied that if he did not send him £5 ($25) he would sell his poetry to a collector or publish it. The £5 was at once forthcoming.

Seagulls of Auchmithie.

In the fishing village of Auchmithie you may frequently witness seagulls flying into the houses of the fishermen and partaking of food from their hands. One of these sea birds was in the habit of staying in a fisherman's house all the year round except at the breeding season, when it left. About a fortnight ago, while the gull was away, the fisherman removed his home some three and a half miles from the former place.

The fisherman never expected to see his old friend the gull again. It was therefore, much to his astonishment that he beheld on a recent Sunday the sea bird come walking into his new residence with stately steps to resume his old familiarities and household ways.

The undersigned desires hereby to express thanks and appreciation to his friends throughout the towns of Pennington county for the excellent vote and support accorded my candidacy at the primary Sept. 17.

I appreciate especially the support tendered me by the women vote. Let us all join in the work of raising our schools to the highest standard of efficiency.

Trusting that I anew may merit your indorsement in order that the nomination tendered may result in my re-election at the polls on Nov. 5, I beg to re-affirm my devotion to the cause of education and pledge my best endeavor toward the upbuilding of our schools. Knowing the teachers, the conditions of our schools to some extent, and being in the work, I trust to be able if elected to serve, even to a higher degree than in the past, the people and our schools.

Yours fraternally,
E. A. MOSTUE.

Paid advertisement $1.30 paid by George L. Netteland;

For County Superintendent

I am very thankful for the generous support accorded my candidacy at the primaries, especially by the people of Rocksbury, St. Hilaire and vicinity. I am better known to the voters now than I was then, and I hope to receive a liberal majority at the general election.

I am familiar with our schools and their needs. In order that our schools may reach a high standard of efficiency, I believe that the "stay at home" spirit should be encouraged among our farmer boys and girls, and some instruction along agricultural lines, where it is practicable, ought to be encouraged.

I wish to assure you that if I am elected I shall devote office hours—and all my time—to the attendance upon my official duties, and shall conscientiously devote my energy to the importance of a mutual cause.

Sincerely,
GEORGE L. NETTELAND.

Notice of Special Election

Notice is hereby given that there will be a special election of the qualified electors of the village of St. Hilaire held in and for said village on the 9th day of November, 1912, pursuant to a resolution of the village council of said village and by virtue of chapter 123 of the laws of Minnesota for the year 1905, at a meeting thereof held on the 30th day of October, 1912, for the purpose of determining whether the action of said council at their meeting last aforesaid, authorizing the issue of the bonds of said village to the amount of four thousand dollars, to be dated Nov. 9, 1912, to mature 15 years from the day of the date thereof, to bear interest at the rate of six per cent per annum, payable annually, and issued for the purpose of refunding the floating indebtedness of said village, should be approved and said bonds issue; and for the purpose of transacting such other business as may properly come before such meeting.

Order for Hearing on Petition for Correction of Defective Probate Proceedings

State of Minnesota, County of Pennington. } ss

In Probate Court, Special Term, Oct. 11, 1912.

In the matter of the estate of Helmer E. Sevre, deceased.

On reading and filing the petition of Albert Sevre, representing, among other things, that the description of certain lands belonging to said estate is erroneously described in the petition for license to sell land and in the order of license to sell land as the e½ sw¼ section 7, twp. 153 n, r. 43 w., and praying that the same should be corrected so as to describe said lands as the e½ sw¼ sec. 8, twp. 153 n, r. 41 w.,

It is Ordered, That the said petition be heard before this court on Wednesday, the 20th day of November A. D. 1912, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at the probate office in the city of Thief River Falls in said county.

And It is Further Ordered, That notice of the time and place of said hearing be given to all persons interested by publishing this order once in each week for three successive weeks prior to said day of hearing in the St. Hilaire Spectator, a weekly newspaper printed and published at the village of St. Hilaire in said county.

Dated at Thief River Falls, Minn., the 11th day of October A. D. 1912.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. [illegible] D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 300. All Fargo banks and [illegible] others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school offers such endorsement.

Our $60 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $35 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association), supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course under two expert reporters, and high grade stenographers. The stenographers for the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. graduates. No other schools offer this PROOF of superior training!

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (350,000 cubic feet space), is seated with roll top desks, has 200 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. The pupils deal with each other and with [illegible] banks, using regularly equipped offices, using [illegible] money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils love them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C." Next term begins soon. For free catalog write,

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap-book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making the Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

Halloween was well observed here. The Spectator wondered at the unusual attentions that had been bestowed upon us, until we learned who was the ringleader of the honorable squad—a man who has made himself famous throughout the northwest wherever he has made his haunts. The harvest home cantata, "Fling Out the Banner," given by the children of the M. E. Sunday school was a success, financially and otherwise. All the numbers were taken nicely and showed a great deal of work and patience on the part of those in charge. Where all did so well it is hard to make special mention, but the "Address of Welcome" by Sverre Steen, the solo, "Asters and Golden Rod" by Margaret Patterson, the recitation by Curtis Post, and Albert's Breeches, by Albert Elliott, are worthy of note. Prof Bohem rendered some fine selections on the trombone; and Mrs. Post, Misses Alice and Grace Hall sang, "Crown Him King of Heaven," with trombone obligato by Mr. Boehm. The affair was directed by Mrs O. F. Post with Miss Alice Hall as assistant, and Miss Esther Palmer as pianist.

INSTINCT THAT SAVED A LIFE.

Thoroughbred Horse Refused to Step on Body in Roadway.

Stories of the wisdom of animals are not few in the present day, when the humane societies are doing so much to promote the rights of our dumb brethren, yet each new tale is not without its own peculiar interest.

The following true story concerns a horse belonging to a man living in Worcester, Mass., writes Mrs. A. R. Knowlton, in Our Dumb Animals.

Prince was a thoroughbred, his naturally fine instincts sharpened and rendered more acute by his training, for he had known life on the race track, until some slight accident unfitted him for that career and transformed him into a carriage horse.

He was being driven homeward one evening in winter when dusk was fast rendering even nearby objects invisible. Suddenly he stopped short, trembling all over.

In vain his driver urged him to proceed. Prince refused to stir, and the quivering of his muscles increased.

At last the driver left his seat to discover the cause of this unusual behavior. It was soon explained. Just in front of the horse—in fact almost beneath his upraised foot—lay a woman who had slipped, fallen and was unable to rise.

To avoid doing her injury that splendid animal had resolutely held up his fore foot for more than a minute. No wonder he trembled from the strain of his unaccustomed position.

How to Go and Forget.

I know how to hold
As the lovers of old—
How to cling to you, sing to you,
Let all the world know the song that I bring to you,
But I do not know yet
How to go and forget.

I know how to call
To the God over all—
How to sigh for you, cry for you,
Fight down the terrible dark till I die for you,
But I do not know yet
How to go and forget.

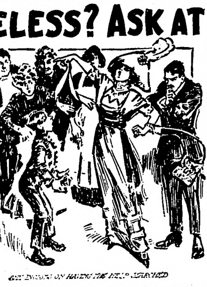
WOMEN CARELESS? ASK AT THE HOTELS



SHE INSISTS ON HAVING THE HELP SEARCHED

[illegible] THE DESK

IT was the afternoon hour when the corridors of the Waldorf-Astoria are usually crowded with women. Every one of the restaurants was filled, and the tables had overflowed into the oak room and the foyers. A continuous stream of femininity came in at the entrance in the Thirty-third street side nearest Fifth avenue, hurried through the "tunnel" leading to the foyer, turned into Peacock alley, progressed slowly and glacially through it to the office, turned to the left, crossed past the office desk, sought one or more of the [illegible] loiterers crowding and sitting about, hurried through the [illegible] on the [illegible] Thirty-third street corridor, [illegible] to find a [illegible] or perhaps [illegible], or [illegible] start [illegible] on the [illegible].

A woman hurried up to the lost and found [illegible] of the office desk. She held up a gold mesh handbag.

"I saw a woman who had this bag in her hand sit down in the corridor," she said. "She got up a few minutes later and went away, leaving it. I thought she might return, so I kept my eyes on it for a while; but now I have got to go, and as she has not come back I thought I had better turn the bag in to you."

A few minutes later another woman came up to the same place and asked whether anything had been heard of a feather boa, which she was sure somebody had stolen. After a search the clerk produced the boa and she went out of the hotel.

Fifteen minutes afterward a taxicab driver entered and turned in at the office a feather boa which he said a fare from the hotel had left in the cab. To the clerk it looked familiar. He examined it carefully. It was the same boa that had been claimed only a quarter of an hour before.

Only a few minutes had passed when a third woman rushed up. She asked the clerk to please to tell the hotel detectives or the police or the newspapers, or somebody, to find a valuable fur muff which had been stolen from her. She was positive she had left it in her room. The clerk listened attentively to her description. Then he ducked under the counter and solemnly handed her the muff.

"Why, where did you get this?" she demanded.

"It was picked up in the corridor, madam," was the reply.

She signed her name to the receipt book and then went away in the same haste she had come. When the clerk looked up from the book he found she had left her pocketbook on the counter.

The rewards given by women, and men, too, to those who have returned lost property are sometimes astonishingly small. Two women who were occupying an apartment in an exclusive hotel went away to spend the Christmas holidays. One got back the day before the other. When she entered the bedroom she was amazed to see lying on the dressing table a diamond bar pin belonging to her friend. It contained 15 jewels, and was worth several thousand dollars. She was going away from town that same day and simply enclosed the pin, together with a note, in an envelope, and left the latter on the dressing table.

The next morning the other woman showed up. The day after that she sent a hurry call downstairs for the manager.

"Oh, this is tragic!" she exclaimed when the latter entered her room. "My diamond bar pin is gone. It was stolen, I am sure, and you must have the chambermaid arrested."

The manager looked at her. She answered his questions impatiently, but they drew from her the information that when she entered her bedroom the day before she had found a note on the dressing table from her friend, but she was in such a hurry to dress for dinner that she had thrown it aside; and yes, she admitted after some hesitation, it was possible it might have fallen over into the waste basket that stood near.

The chambermaid had straightened up the apartment that morning, and under ordinary circumstances the contents of the waste basket would by this time have been on their way to the city incinerating plant. But it happened to be New Year's day, and the trash collector doesn't work on that holiday, and what had been in the waste basket was now in a big bin below stairs, six feet deep by twelve feet long.

With a chambermaid and a porter the manager betook himself to the basement, and stood by while the two took out the refuse, piece by piece, from the bin. After a solid hour's work, the porter found an envelope, from which he took the missing pin. The owner of it gave him one dollar.

Somewhat similar was the case of another woman at a different hotel, who on the night before she was due to sail for Europe came down to the desk in great excitement. Her valuable pearl necklace was gone. She had wrapped it, she said, during the morning in tissue paper, preparatory to packing it, and must have left it on the bureau.

To the manager the idea of the tissue paper suggested the waste basket. The contents of the waste basket had been taken to the cellar and had been compressed with other refuse into a 250 pound bale. There was but one thing to do, and that was to examine this bale. The manager and the steward set themselves at the task. Piece by piece the paper was removed, but at the end of almost three hours not a sign of the necklace had appeared.

The day after the departure of the steamer the manager received a letter from the voyager, sent ashore by the pilot.

"I am so sorry to have given you so much trouble," it read. "I have found the necklace in my trunk."

A woman from Washington, who always travels with a lot of diamonds, arrived one night at a New York hotel unaccompanied by the maid, who usually traveled with her. About half past nine o'clock the next morning she came downstairs breathless.

"I want those doors locked and nobody permitted to leave this building," she cried. "My chamois bag, in which I carry all my jewels, is gone, and I want all the help searched. When I went to bed last night I laid the bag under a piece of crumpled newspaper in a corner of this shelf in the closet."

"Are you sure that after all you did not put it in your trunk?" suggested the manager.

The woman was indignant at the idea, and demanded that police headquarters be communicated with instantly. When the central office detective reached the hotel the manager called him aside, explaining the situation, and advised him to insist upon the woman opening the trunk. Ten minutes later the sleuth came downstairs grinning.

"The bag was where you said it was, all right," he said to the manager.

An engagement ring figured in a theft charge at a Fifth avenue hotel. A young woman who had been out shopping entered the hotel breathlessly one morning and hurried to her room. In a very short time she was downstairs again, with a demand upon the manager that he have the chambermaid arrested. She said that her engagement ring, which had cost $600 had been stolen from her room and as the chamber maid was the only person who had access to the room, she simply knew the woman had it.

She was so positive in her statement that the manager immediately telephoned to the nearest police station for a plain clothes man. The chambermaid had been in the hotel many years, and was well thought of. A few questions convinced the detective of her innocence. Then he put some questions to the woman who had lost the ring.

She was indignant, but finally remembered that she had put the ring, together with four others, into her pocketbook that morning before breakfast. The purse she had left on her dressing table when she went downstairs to breakfast. That must have been the chance the chambermaid took, for when later in the morning she opened her purse in a department store to pay for some purchases the engagement ring was missing. She insisted that the detective arrest the chambermaid.

The sleuth refused, and decided to make a thorough examination of the room, in spite of the young lady's protests. At one end of the dressing table, on the floor, stood a pair of high shoes. The detective picked one up, and turned it upside down. Out rolled the missing solitaire ring. Apparently when its owner had swept the five rings together to put them into her purse, the solitaire had rolled off the table.

They looked for to express at least some gratification over the recovery of the trinket; but no, she was so enraged over her mistake that she made no amends to the chambermaid she had accused and did not even thank the detective.

Somewhat similar in its outcome was the experience of a woman from Washington. She arrived at a hotel in a fashionable district one night about nine o'clock, and her first order was for a pitcher of ice water. A bellboy took it up and placed it on a table in he rsitting room.

The next morning she called up the manager in a condition bordering on hysteria, and informed him that a big marquise ring containing 32 diamonds was missing. The only person who had been in the room besides herself was a bellboy, and she remembered that before the bellboy entered her sitting room she had taken off her ring and placed it on the table while she was washing her hands.

The bellboy bore a good record. After a search of the room he was put through the third degree. He convinced the manager of his innocence.

The next day, just as she was about to leave the hotel, the woman came in to the manager.

"I feel very much mortified," she said. "I found the ring just now as I went to pack my trunk. "I left the window open the other night and the wind must have blown the curtain so that it swept across the table and took the ring with it. A pair of rubbers was standing by the side of the table, and when I went to pack them in my trunk just now the ring rolled out of one of them."

American Fruit Consumpton.

Statistice for 1909 show that the apple crop of the United States was worth $83,000,00, peaches $28,000,000, grapes $22,000,000, and strawberries $170,000, oranges reaching the same large figures. The people of the United States consumed $10,000,000 of plums and prunes, $7,000,000 of pears and cherries and $5,000,000 of the raspberry.

One of the curious features of this production of fruit has been the lessening of the apple crop, which in the past decade, with a growing population, has decreased from 175,000,000 to 150,000,000 barrels. On the other hand, the production of tropical fruits in continental United States has about trebled in the same time, and ten times as many pineapples are grown now as were produced ten years ago.

Gen. Booth Died a Poor Man.

General William Booth, who made the Salvation army the great organization that it is, died poor. His personal estate amounted to only $2,440 aside from a fund of $26,475 which was settled on him for his private use. General Booth never drew on the army funds for his support or expenses.

Special Marks for Lightning

Nowhere else do the electrical discharges of the atmosphere assume so intense and terrifying a character as on the summits of high mountains. Last August the laboratory of the Society of Observatories, built on the summit of Mont Blanc, was struck by lightning, with fatal results to one of its occupants. This building is of wood, roofed with sheets of copper, and is not provided with lightning rods. It was practically buried in snow at the time of the disaster. The famous Janssen observatory on Mont Blanc was repeatedly struck, although it bore numerous lightning rods, connected by cables to some rocks a few hundred feet distant. This building was of wood and was built on the snow. The effects of the lightning were extraordinary and appalling; the metal tableware was frequently melted or perforated; the bolts and nuts in the walls were melted; the woodwork charred; the metal cap of the large telescope was pierced with holes.

Bees Hold Freight Train

each of whom seemed to have a single thought, to sting as one, proved themselves mightier than the train crew of a Great Northern mixed freight and passenger train between Minneapolis and Hutchinson recently, and there are persons scattered at stations from Crystal Bay to Hutchinson who are wondering why their baggage or freight did not arrive. When the train started from Minneapolis there were ten hives of bees consigned to Rev. Francis Jaeger at St. Bonifacius, Minn. By the time the bees got to Crystal Bay three of the hives were smashed, and as a result no feight was left there, and the car door was closed with a ten-foot pole. At Minnetonka Beach a policeman was asked to restrain the bees from interfering with interstate commerce, but he "flunked" on the job. Father Jaeger now has his bees at St. Bonifacius, but is waiting until their tempers improve before unloading them, and the car—with all the rest of the freight—will stand on the sidetrack for some time.

The Consistency.

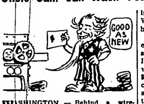
"How do you mean?"

"In it, do you not notice that the brow of the hill is always placed above the mouth of a stream?"

NATIONAL CAPITAL AFFAIRS

Uncle Sam Can Wash Your Money While You Wait



WASHINGTON. — Behind a wire-screened cage employes of the United States government have now gone into the laundry business. They are washing United States bank notes and ironing them. It is not generally understood that when anybody gets old greenbacks, it does not make any difference whether a dollar or a thousand, if he sent it to the treasury department and requested a new bill he would have to have it. All the bankers in the country have always had the right to turn in all old money and get new for it. The old money was assorted, counted and tied in packages in the treasury department and then taken to a big eyelet machine, where great holes were cut through the bundles of money, and from there it was sent to a macerator, where it was chewed up into fine pulp and then molded to make trinkets for sale. They are not a bit pretty, being a nasty greenish-gray, and are nearly always warped out of shape; but they sell them for souvenirs, as there is a kind of fascination in knowing that the tiny imitation of the Washington monument which you hold in your hand represents $250,000.

The washing machine is still in an experimental stage, it is said, and seems to be doing pretty good work. It is estimated that this will save a vast sum for the treasury. It costs $13.30 to make 1,000 bank notes. It cost but about 50 cents to rejuvenate the same number. Every day there are more than 35,000 bills withdrawn from circulation and destroyed. The cost of replacing these is $465.50, but the cost of washing them and making them as good as new will be but $15.

The machine is 15 feet long and five feet wide, and looks something like a newspaper printing press. It has dozens of rolls, many gears and operates with the same clash and clang. The money is placed between two canvas belts at one end of the machine. It runs through a solution of laundry soap and boiling hot water, where it is thoroughly cleansed. It then enters another vat, in which there is a solution of stiffening material and germ-killing solution. From this vat it is drawn between a gas-heated mangle, where it is ironed.

It emerges from the machine two minutes and 15 seconds after it has started on its 64-foot trip, and is to all intents and purposes a perfect bill. When running at full speed the washing machine can clean about 4,000 bills an hour.

Parson Warns Newlyweds Against "Turkey Trot"

ADMONITIONS as to their future conduct and a warning against the seductions of the "turkey trot" and other such "fancy doin's" were interpolated freely into the marriage ceremony with which Rev. John H. Bunday, pastor of an African Methodist Episcopal church, united a negro couple the other day in the private office of Judge Gorter.

Windeld Boyer, 20 years old, small in stature and not a little frightened, consented to wed Esther C. Newman, 14 years old. Judge Gorter gave an order for a marriage license, offered the use of his office for the ceremony and had an official of the court hunt up a minister.

The preacher read the ceremony impressively, but turned aside now and then to offer advice to the pair where he thought it might have effect.

"Will you live with this woman as your wife always?" he demanded of the trembling bridegroom at the proper part of the ritual. "Not for a little time," he added. "I marry so many of you niggers and tomorrow you are single again. Now you are hitched good; do you understand that?"

"Speak it with your heart, not your lips," he demanded, in putting the question. "Wilt thou have this woman?"

When the ring should have been forthcoming the minister glared at Boyer and asked:

"What have you got to give this woman? You know you must give her something."

The bridegroom, minus the necessary ring, was silent. Bailiff Charles S. Eggleston took off his ring and tendered it for temporary use.

"Don't forget to give it back to the gentleman," the preacher reminded Boyer. "You must get a ring to keep."

Other admonitions were woven into the ceremony, at the end of which the minister delivered a short lecture.

"Live right and stick to each other," he said. "Keep out of foolishness; there's a whole lot of new-fangled fool things in the world today. Don't you have anything to do with this here 'turkey trot' and 'bunny hug' business."

Washington City The Ideal Educational Center

GRADUALLY but surely America is becoming recognized as one of the leading nations in the world for the educational facilities it offers its peoples. The little red schoolhouse is still here, and of necessity will remain in the sparsely settled communities for some years to come. The bad roads that made it difficult for the child of tender years or slight physique to be a regular attendant at these minor but still important seats of learning are gradually becoming better, something which is greatly appreciated by young America.

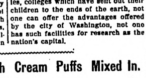
These bad roads are bound to disappear in time, and, strange to say, their improvement means the beginning of the end of the small country school. The amalgamation of school districts will follow; the country high school, located at the Four Corners, will take its proper place as it has already done in some districts; children will gather at central points and be carried to school in community wagons, and the educational standard will be advanced.

Before Washington became the populous and up-to-date city of today it was not looked upon in the same light as other places were, especially by those who had never visited the nation's capital, and regarded it simply as the seat of government—temporary residence for the nation's statesmen.

Times have changed. Washington is now probably better known in outside states for the advantages it offers to those seeking an education than it is at home.

Washington today is looked to as the country's seat of learning, not merely from an academic standpoint, but from a broader vision. It is realized that traditions, the beautiful examples of art as shown by the best works of famous artists, sculptors, architects have an influence for good on those that come here to study, to work. These things have been appreciated by our educational leaders, and while there are famous colleges in other cities, colleges which have sent out their children to the ends of the earth, not one can offer the advantages offered by the city of Washington, not one has such facilities for research as the nation's capital.

A Street Tragedy With Cream Puffs Mixed In.



NEVER run after a street car; nine times out of ten you don't overtake it, and, besides, another will come along some time.

A woman in a linen dress and a great hurry rushed along the south side of the avenue, waving frantically at a car going south. She had only one bundle in her hands, but she handled it rather gingerly, and as it was something in a sack, she grasped it around the top, much as a darky is supposed to hold a chicken by the neck. She sprinted across the walk paying little or no attention to anything but the car, and as she reached the curb she miscalculated the step, stumbled and fell. It wasn't one of those knee-drill falls they teach with the Delsarte style of stunts, but a fall, pure and simple.

She fell on the bag.

Cream puffs are rather tempting looking and decidedly tasty, when properly handled, but connoisseurs and epicures alike are agreed that they ought never to be sat upon, much less lain upon; they have rather a peevish nature, as it were, and are apt to start something. Those in the bag were no exception. They sent out a creamy protest that started somewhere up around the woman neck and continued all the way down her dress front. Vesuvius in its most hilarious moments never poured out a greater flow, in comparison to its size, than that paper bag. The woman was helped to her feet by sympathetic onlookers, who promptly retired when she gave her dress a shake and sent flecks of cream in ninety-seven different directions.

Opposed to It.

"I suppose you are in favor of the principle of home rule?"

"Not any more."

"Then I assume that you were once. What has caused you to change your mind about it?"

"I got married several years ago."

Reasonable Fear.

NERVOUS HEADACHE

And Numbness in the Hands and Arms.

This Iowa Woman Was in a Serious Condition and Her Cure Will Interest Many.

A cure of unusual interest and importance is related by Mrs. J. H. Morgan, of Correctionville, Iowa. After being a hopeless sufferer from sick headaches, she is now entirely free from attacks. She tells of her cure by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, as follows:

"Some years ago I was in a terribly nervous and run-down condition and suffered greatly from nervous headaches. I was treated for three months by a specialist in Chicago, who advised me to wear glasses, but he did not help me. My head seemed as though it would burst, and I had frequent dizzy spells. I was in despair of getting well until I read about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and began taking them. A few boxes cured me and since then I have used them as a family medicine.

"Before the birth of my last child I suffered untold agony with pain and numbness in my hands and arms up to the shoulders. My hands were so swollen and the muscles so sore that I could hardly dress myself. For a time I could not close my left hand. During the day if I kept moving the pain did not seem to be so bad, but my hands were always numb. I again used Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and found them good for this trouble also, as they entirely relieved me."

Unless properly treated sick headache is a disease of many years duration, as it occurs before the twentieth year in two-thirds of the cases and recurs with more or less regularity until the fiftieth year or later. It is usually hereditary and is probably directly caused by a defect in the process which changes the food we eat into blood. Most sufferers are troubled with obstinate constipation which makes it necessary to use a laxative.

An ideal combination treatment is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and the new laxative pills, Pinklets. This treatment is fully described in a little booklet, "The Treatment of Sick Headache," which is free on request, together with a sample of Pinklets, the little laxative pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are for sale at all druggists, or will be mailed to any address, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y. Adv.

Alphabetically Speaking.

Among a recent batch of candidates for appointment to the police force of Washington was a big darky, evidently of rural origin, who announced his readiness to stand examination.

"Are you a native of this city?" he was asked.

"No, suh. I am from the first state in the Union?"

"A New Yorker?"

"No, suh. I am from Alabama!"

"Alabama is not the first state in the Union, as the saying goes," responded the examiner.

"Alphabetically speaking it is suh," said the candidate with conviction. "Alphabetically speaking."

BAD BACKS DO MAKE WORK HARD

Backache makes the daily toil, for thousands, an agony hard to endure.

Many of these poor sufferers have kidney trouble and don't know it.

Swollen, aching kidneys usually go hand in hand with irregular kidney action, headache, dizziness, nervousness and despondency.

When suffering so, try Doan's Kidney Pills, the best-recommended kidney remedy.

FACE ALMOST COVERED WITH PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

Atchison, Kan.—"For a number of years I suffered very greatly from skin eruption. My face was very red and irritated, being almost covered with pimples and blackheads. The pimples were scattered over my face. They were a fine rash with the exception of a few large pimples on my forehead and chin. My face burned and looked red as if exposed to either heat or cold. It was not only unsightly but very uncomfortable. I tried several remedies but couldn't get any relief. I was recommended to use Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment.

"I applied the Cuticura Ointment in the evening, leaving it for about five minutes, then washing it off with Cuticura Soap and hot water. I washed with the Cuticura Soap and hot water also several times during the day. After about four months of this application, my face was cleared of the pimples. I still use the Cuticura Soap." "There, mamma," he exclaimed, rising, "I've done my best, haven't I? 'Course, if God chooses to keep me from dawdling he will, and if he don't I can't help it. But," with a sudden, joyous energy, "I'll bet you a dollar I'll be just as slow tomorrow as today."

FOR COUGHS AND COLDS

NOTES from MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt

Cull the ewe flock.

Be careful in milking.

Sheep need care and feed.

Good fences are important.

Lime may be applied to the soil at any time.

The best seed corn is that grown on one's own farm.

Potatoes are as cheap this year as they will ever be again.

The dairy cow should essentially be a large and rich milker.

A coat of whitewash in the poultry house adds both beauty and profit.

Hogs running in the corn field are healthier than those shut in a pen.

To have horses of endurance give the colts a chance to develop their muscles.

Don't waste your time cutting corn for fodder after one good frost strikes it.

The only way to make sheep pay is to keep the best sheep and give them the best care.

Change of pasture makes fat cattle, they say. Variety in feed also makes cows better milkers.

The value of a hog depends upon his ability to make good pork. This is equally true of all breeds.

Are you keeping the boys and girls properly supplied with good "tools" to do their work in the schoolroom?

Your lambs ought to be big enough now to bring a good price. Let them go and give the rest a better crance.

The hay stock without a good top is just about on a par with the corn shock that has nearly twisted down.

Feeding the drop apples to the stock will save much grain and act as a good appetizer for the animals.

Because a cow is a hearty eater is no sign that she is profitable, but all large and profitable cows are hearty eaters.

Millet should be cut before the seeds are ripe, in fact, after it is well headed out it is a candidate for the mower.

Don't leave the sheep in a dry, short pasture. Give them a chance in a fresh pasture or give a good grain ration.

Corn is ready to be cut for silage when the grain is in the dent and glazed but can still be broken with the thumb nail.

If you produce your own seed grain it is important to select it early out of the best part of the crop and take good care of it.

The fatality among pigs during the abnormally heated spell was in many cases increased, if not wholly caused, by putrid swill barrels.

Lung troubles in swine are frequently the result of dust and filth snuffed through the nostrils while feeding on the ground.

Pigs that have been properly grown up to five months with big strong frames, can be rounded up quickly for market with a ration consisting largely of corn.

If more sheep were kept by farmers right along, instead of having them when feed stuffs are high in price and sheep vice versa, more money could be realized.

Keep your eye open for a better ram than you have been using. No use tramping the same ground over year after year. Get a little farther along the road to better things.

There is no better balancer for stock wintered on corn fodder than cowpeas. They furnish just the elements that are lacking in all feeds like corn, cane or kafir fodder and timothy hay.

Churning troubles appear as soon as cold weather sets in. But not all the churning troubles are due to cold weather; the cow that has been giving milk for a long time is apt to furnish cream that is slow to "come."

Feed is plenty this fall and cheaper than it has been for some time. This does not mean that it will stay cheap all winter for should it be a hard winter the feed would lessen fast. The time to buy feed, if any is needed, is in the fall.

Just as soon as wire fencing begins to rust, it begins to deteriorate in value, and this deterioration can be easily and quickly checked by applying a coat of cheap paint whenever the galvanizing starts to peeling off in spots.

Buy the best eighteen or twenty pound milk cans. Light weight cans are all right around the home dairy, but they are not economical for the hauling to milk to the factory or being banged around on trains and railroad platforms. They will not last.

Fly time has passed.

Clean the poultry yard.

Pigs must have sunshine.

Burn the old nesting material.

In producing wool and mutton there is no waste.

A foul dairy makes no producer of prize-winning butter.

Livestock is the basis of most farmers' success in farming.

Sharpen and repair the garden tools for next season's use.

Feed is cheaper and more plentiful than it has been for years.

A cork soaked in oil makes a good substitute for a glass stopper.

All fruit should be graded and crated, especially for private marketing.

So far as can be done select the largest, and best sows for breeders.

Corn will dry out better if the shocks are kept down to a reasonable size.

Deep plowing and the gas tractor are the Gold Dust Twins of the new agriculture.

Wrap the young fruit trees early, to prevent the rabbits from gnawing and killing them.

Many of the troubles with both young and old horses may be traced to bad teeth.

Hogs will be high next year and it will pay to give those fall pigs a good start towards winter.

The first cold rains are hard on the cows and they should be kept in the barn in such weather.

A good pasture makes a brimming milk pail; and silo makes possible good winter pasture.

A little clover or alfalfa mixed with the silage when filling the silo will prove a profitable mixture.

Bran is worth more, pound for pound, as a part of a ration for a work horse than alfalfa meal.

The man who makes a business of cow keeping instead of a chore is on the right road to better profits.

In the development of horses, as well as elsewhere, judgment must be exercised as well as the muscles.

Just how long a breeding sire should be kept depends upon the excellence of the animal in question.

The way to increase the appetite of a horse, if such a thing is necessary, is to change his diet frequently.

'Twill soon be time to bind something around those small fruit trees, to stop rabbits from feasting on the bark.

Baling corn fodder is a new idea, but if it works out well it will save a good deal of hard and disagreeable work.

After all that may be said in favor of other pastures, clover stands at the head when it comes to right thing for pigs.

Mulching isn't to keep the strawberries from freezing, but to keep them from thawing after the ground is frozen.

Extremes and sudden changes in feeding, watering and salting will cause acute indigestion in sheep that is usually fatal.

Bear in mind that corn fodder, or fodder corn, must not be cut early for it means a loss of a large part of its feeding value.

Keep all the rotten fruit well cleaned up around the orchard, as these constitute the winter quarters of numerous orchard pests.

Look over the young stock carefully before disposing of it. A prize heifer or an exceptional colt may slip away and the credit and benefit go to some other man.

In the rush and hurry to keep up with the fall work we must not forget to provide plenty of bedding for all stock and see that it is dry. Wet bedding is a disease producer.

Every sheep that has lost one single tooth through old age is a candidate for the meat market. Don't stand in the way of her getting there; she may not weather another winter.

The most suitable time to apply lime in rotation is when preparing the land for wheat or hay following potatoes and corn, or as a top dressing on young clover and grass.

Use a low, wide-tired wagon in the orchard, and thus avoid cutting up the sod and dragging the lower limbs over the bed, peeling and breaking them.

When ironing, place a folded rug or piece of carpet to stand on. The amount of ease this will give the feet has only to be tried to be appreciated.

Don't put off till spring any outside work that can be done now. Clean up the garden and haul out manure, and when possible push the plowing before snow flies.

To secure the most seed, clover for thrashing should be allowed to thoroughly ripen before being cut, as the hulls must be brittle and easily opened, so the clover huller will thrash out the seed well.

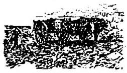
Potatoes that have taken a second growth are spoiled for table use and are greatly weakened for seed. The same holds good with beets; a second growth destroys the sugar content and makes them woody and tasteless.

FARM AND BEES

USE KELP AS A FERTILIZER

Many Farmers Along Maine Coast Gather Seaweed in Large Quantities and Scatter on Land.

The main in the picture is one of the many farmers on the Maine coast who gather kelp to put on their lands as fertilizer. Kelp is a seaweed which is washed up on the shore, and at low tide, farmers along the Atlantic coast gather it in large quantities and spread it upon their land. This makes a very good fertilizer, particularly as so few animals are raised in New England that stable manure is scarce. However, as kelp is now being used quite extensively in the manufacture of drugs and other things, it is becoming more valuable for those purposes than for fertilizer, and the wonder is what these seashore farmers will do next to obtain something to enrich their soil.



Gathering Kelp.

BEE-KEEPING FOR A FARMER

No Agricultural Property Will Make Equal Returns for Trouble Caused by Honey Insects.

A great many farmers seem to think that honey bees are not worth anything, but still they value what they make very highly. Every one of them would be glad to have honey on his table all the time. If they would just take a little extra time and labor they could have all they wanted.

Just have a few hives in the back yard, and you will have all the honey you want for your own use. If you have not any time at all to spend with bees, why not let your wife or the children have a few colonies?

Bee-keeping is a light, pleasant outdoor work. Considering the time required and money spent, there is nothing that will net the owner any more than the keeping of bees.

As high as ten dollars' worth of honey has been gathered by a single swarm of bees; but generally they gather about two dollars' worth in one season.

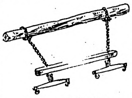
Many people would keep bees if it were not for their stings. A beekeeper does not get stung often—he would not any more think of getting stung in picking up a handful of bees than you would in picking up a towny little chick.

Honey is a good food for the sick and well, old and young. It can be used a great many ways in the kitchen in preparing things for the table.

TO HITCH A CORNSTALK POLE

With Fastening of Chain Near End of Each Double-Tree Considerable Trouble Is Obviated.

Hooking a stalk pole by fastening a long chain from notches to cleavers in the center of the double tree, often causes a lot of trouble by the ends jerking back and forth, caused by light and heavy places in the stalks. With the fastening of chain near the end of each double tree the trouble is obviated.



Hooking a Stalk Pole.

Locating the Apiary.

In starting an apiary the first thing to be considered is the selection of a suitable location for the hives. This should be in some open or nearly open place where there will be no overhanging branches from trees to interfere with the operation of the apiarist, convenient to some building to be used as a shop for preparing and storing hives and apparatus, and near enough to the house to be easily watched in swarming time, and, above all, in a place sufficiently level to make it easy to get around the hives and keep the grass mowed about and around them.

Buying Bees.

Bees may be bought at this season very cheaply and, if you are a good judge of colonies, they may be bought and moved a few miles in a spring wagon if handled very carefully. But it is next to impossible to ship hives full of bees and honey by railroad at this time of year. Anyone contemplating buying had better contract now and ship in early spring after the most of the honey has been consumed, and the combs toughened by age.

Bees in the Winter.

Late in the fall after the close of the honey flow bees cluster in a compact mass for the winter, usually on the central combs, and so remain until settled weather in the spring, or until brood rearing is well established.

Winter Income.

Many farmers have little or no income during the winter months. A small greenhouse rightly managed will insure a nice little income, and will add not only dollars, but pleasure and satisfaction to the farm life.

KILLING SURPLUS OF DRONES

California Bee Keeper Gives Description of Sieve He Has Used and Found to Be Satisfactory.

W. A. Sedding of Monterey, Cal., gives in Gleanings the following quick way of killing a surplus of drones:

"I have read in the bee journals a description of a queen-sieve and its uses, but never saw a drone-sieve described, although the occasion for its use may arise in every apiary sometimes. Here is one that I have been using with good results: I nail a queen-excluder to the bottom of an empty hive body and set it on top of another hive body close to the hive to be operated on, and shake into this sieve bees and drones from every comb except the queen, and cover it as quickly as possible. After replacing the combs I put a Porter bee escape on top, and on this the sieve with the drones, after having brushed off the bees that have clustered on the under side of the sieve. Next morning you find all the bees that remained with the drones have passed down the escape, and the drones on their backs kicking the bucket. To shorten the agony of death, I put the sieve over a teaspoonful of burning sulphur, and in a minute it's all over."

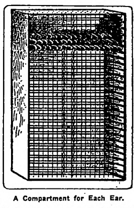
REPOSITORY FOR SEED CORN

Details of Rack That Is Mouse-Proof and as Each Ear Is Separate They Dry Out Quickly.

Here is a very useful rack for saving and drying seed corn. To make it, take two pieces of 2x6, 4 feet long, for the bed pieces, and two pieces of 3x4, 6 feet long, for the upright posts. Gain the posts on to the bed pieces and bolt and nail them securely, says the Farm and Home. Then take two six-quart milk pans and place the end of the post in the center of the pan and mark it.

Cut two slits cornerwise across the place marked on the pan, turn up the points and slide the pan down over the post to a point 20 inches from the bottom and nail it to the posts. Now take 1x12-inch hardwood boards of whatever length you wish to make the rack and nail them to the posts 1⅛ inches apart.

With a pair of dividers set to 2⅝ inches, commence at one end ¾ inch from the lower edge of the bottom of the board and space up to the top of the boarding. Space up the same on the other end and with a chalk line strike lines from end to end.



A Compartment for Each Ear.

Then set the dividers at 1½ inches, and commencing ½ inch from the inside of the post space lengthwise on top and bottom of boarding. With a straightedge or chalk line make perpendicular lines. With a 11-64 bit or drill bore a hole at each intersection, and drive 20d spikes from both ways as illustrated. This will give a 3-inch circle for each ear of corn.

If you cannot get a 1x12-inch hardwood boards for this purpose, get 2x 12 plank and use 30d spikes. A space 2½ feet square, using both sides of the rack, will hold a bushel of corn. The rows at the bottom of the cut show the heads of the spikes. This rack is mouse-proof and as each ear is kept from coming in contact with the others, the corn will quickly dry out.

Improving the Farm.

A farmer may not seem to be adding to his bank account at all these hard times, but so long as his farm is improving he is all right. A man who starts with a common farm and ends with a good one has made a success, and a good farm will carry him safely through the declining years of life.

Bees and Farm Notes

Cut the silage into one-half inch pieces.

Distribute thoroughly in silo and pack well.

Kep bees at any rate. They are no trouble.

Corn cut too early makes sour, watery silage.

Cut corn for silage when kernels begin to glaze.

Good farming is impossible without good teams.

A little wet straw with oats sown on it seals the silo effectively.

The improvement and utilization of muck land is increasing rapidly.

When plowing in the fall is one of the best times for deepening the soil.

If corn is dry when put into the silo, wet it by running water into the blower.

Watch your machinery for loose bolts and nuts, and don't forget the oil can.

Barbed wire fences are not worth while if you can't keep them well stretched and stapled.

There is a tendency on the part of some seedsmen to introduce old varieties under new names.

Muck is an abnormal soil consisting largely of the remains of plants in an advanced stage of decay.

Invent a better way to save the barnyard manure and you have a sure thing game you can play for profit and win.

READY FOR CONFERENCE.

Over Two Hundred Delegates Expected to Attend Annual Meeting.

Austin.—The twenty-first Minnesota [illegible] conference of Charities and Correction will open here in the Methodist church. The delegates commenced to arrive and there is prospect of over 200 from a distance.

At the opening meeting Mayor A. C. Page made an address of welcome with a response by Miss Caroline M. Crosby, of Minneapolis, head resident of the Unity Settlement House. Rev. John F. Ryan, D. D., of St. Paul [illegible], president of the conference, made [illegible] address on "The Attitude of the State Toward Social Distress." Professor Charles D. Merica, the new superintendent of the state training school for boys at Red Wing, [illegible] on "The Boy Who Goes Wrong."

Friday was "legislative day," and [illegible] of subjects connected with the [illegible] money, labor legislation and [illegible] and other [illegible] problems was discussed. Saturday was "health day," and the subject of tuberculosis was prominent. [illegible] of inspection of schools, visiting nurses and public health crusades were [illegible] the special subjects brought up and discussed. The conference closed Sunday evening.

The Women's clubs of Austin entertained the women delegates to the conference at a reception held in the Commercial club rooms on Friday afternoon. The delegates were taken in a party around Austin and its suburbs.

The officers of the conference are: President, Rev. John A. Ryan, of St. Paul; vice presidents, [illegible] W. Johnson, [illegible], Dr. A. F. Kilbourne, Rochester; secretary, Henry F. Burt, Pillsbury Settlement House, Minneapolis; enrolling secretary, Professor George A. Franklin, Austin. Efficient local committees have made adequate arrangements for the care and comfort of all delegates and visitors.

The Minnesota child labor committee held its annual meeting, W. D. Washburn, Jr., being chairman. E. E. Holmes, of the state labor bureau, spoke on "The Operation of the New Child Labor Law," and the general discussion was led by Mrs. James S. Thurston, of Minneapolis.

The general program contains the names of many of the leading experts of the west on subjects relating to charities and correction of poverty and causes and the promise is for one of the most helpful and effective conferences ever held.

VICE CRUSADE ON.

Conviction Against Owners of Property Only Solution.

Minneapolis.—A very sweeping recommendation, which, if carried into practice, promises an effective step toward the control of the vice problem of Minneapolis, has just come from the Hennepin county grand jury.

A resolution was passed urging the city council to make some provision by which owners of property, which has been found to be used for immoral purposes, may officially be notified of that use so that in the event of a second conviction of a tenant for operating a disorderly house, the owner may be presumed to have been aware of the use to which his property had been put.

The question has been under consideration by the grand jurors for several weeks. Under the present law, owners of property are liable for the acts of their tenants, if their buildings are used for immoral purposes, if it can be shown that the owner is aware of such use. This law has been difficult to enforce, because of the task of proving that the owner possessed such information.

Wife Loses Race With Death.

Rochester, Minn.—Just a few moments before his wife arrived at his bedside in a fast race with death, C. Sheridan, prominently connected with the street railway company of Duluth, passed away in this city. Mr. Sheridan came to Rochester a few days ago to consult the Drs. Mayo. Wednesday his condition became serious and a telegram was sent to Mrs. Sheridan telling her to come at once.

Frost Wrecks Train.

Minneapolis.—The frost covered rails and a steep grade hurled a Soo freight engine drawing fifty cars into the ditch near Robbinsdale, piled six cars in a heap and endangered the lives of the train crew. The long train blockaded wagon traffic on the Osseo and Rockford roads and lines of teams and autos were lined up for a quarter of a mile on either side while the wreckage was being cleared.

Politicians Arrange Debate.

Brainerd.—Immediately following the announcement of a union meeting in politics at Pequot in which Colonel Freeman Thorp, a noted artist, has arranged to have Democratic, Roosevelt, Socialist and Taft speakers participate, comes notice that the Crow Wing county Socialist central committee has engaged the Brainerd opera house November 2 for a joint debate between Colonel Thorp and Beecher Moore, of Minneapolis, debating respectively Republican and Socialist issues.

Great Linseed Oil Producer.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis now leads the world in the output of linseed oil and its by-products. The oil industry ranks with that of flour milling in placing this city in a conspicuous place on the commercial map.

Prairie Fire Sweeps 10,000 Acres.

Crookston.—What is the first prairie fire of the season burned over 10,000 acres of land near Euclid Wednesday, threatening a portion of the village and destroying several [illegible] of hay.

NEW MINE LOCATED

Pascoe in Charge of Operations for Duluth Company.

Brainerd.—The Thompson mine of the Inland Steel Company, at Crosby, has commenced stockpiling. Officials of the Cuyuna-Duluth Mining Company have decided upon the location of the mine to be established on the townsite ground leased by the Cuyuna-Duluth Company and John H. Hill and E. A. Lamb, Jr.

Captain William Pascoe, who made such a good record sinking the shaft of the Cuyuna-Mille Lacs Company mine, will have charge of the sinking. Work will be prosecuted vigorously and the company expects to ship heavily next season.

Captain James Bale and W. L. Gorrie, of Duluth, visited the property of the Section 30 Development Company during the week. Carl Zapffe, the geologist, and W. A. Barrews, a mining man of Brainerd, accompanied M. S. Stutchburg, an English capitalist, over the range and gave him a comprehensive view of the mining and development work being done. Crosby and other range towns were visited.

The Brainerd-Cuyuna Mining Company, of which Duluth men are officials and stockholders, recently held a meeting to consider the advisability of sinking a shaft this season. The matter is still under consideration.

S. F. Alderman and wife, of Brainerd, have given an option to Charles W. Potts, of Deerwood, to purchase for $12,000 the east half of the northeast quarter, the east half of the west half of the northeast quarter of section 29, township 45, range 30, the consideration being $500 and the option expiring Nov. 1.

Percy A. Gough, of Deerwood, has filed a release of option on lands in the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 8, township 45, range 28, and owned by M. K. Schwartz, of Brainerd. J. F. Lawson has given to Charles W. Potts, of Deerwood, an option for thirty days to purchase for $800 lands in section 6, township 45, range 29. Pitt brothers have placed a drill at the east side of the Bay Lake in section 14, township 45, range 28, outside of the Clearwater district. They have optioned a few tracts. Gaylord & Guith are drilling for them. Joe Raymond, of Crosby, has put in a drill on his addition near Crosby.

DRAGS HIMSELF HOME

Probably Dying Man Found in Pool of Blood on Steps.

Minneapolis.—Very probably dying, with his skull fractured in five places and deep knife gashes in the back of his neck, wounds received in a desperate battle with two highwaymen who stopped him at Third street and Twelfth avenue south, Charles Novasat crawled on his hands and dragged himself seven blocks to his home.

In his only moments of consciousness since he collapsed on the steps, Novasat said two dark-skinned men held him up and that he battled with them as long as his strength held out. Believing the dark-skinned men might be negroes, Detectives Frank Regan and Fritz Ohman arrested Joseph Brooks, negro porter in a saloon. Residents said he had been going about the district with a revolver.

A large revolver was found on the prisoner, but he was able to establish an alibi as to his whereabouts throughout the night. Captain Louis Hansen, chief of detectives, said a charge of carrying concealed weapons likely

MAN GORED TO DEATH.

Fatal Accident to Janitor of Lutheran College at Fergus Falls.

Fergus Falls.—The Park Region Lutheran college at this place keeps a small herd of cattle to supply the students in the boarding school with milk and the cattle are in the pasture a short distance from the college buildings.

Among them is a fine Jersey bull which was presented to the college by the Red Wing seminary. Friday evening O. J. Langlie, the college janitor, went to the pasture to milk the cows and when he failed to return search was instituted and the body was found late in the night. He had been attacked by the bull which had gored him in a horrible manner.

For Vice Suppression.

Minneapolis.—Two very effective steps, looking toward the regulation of the social evil in Minneapolis have been taken by the city council. It has adopted an ordinance creating a public morals commission.

Party Born at Winona.

Winona, Minn.—That the city of Winona is the birthplace of the National Progressive party was the statement of John M. Parker, prominent New Orleans Democrat, aligned with the Roosevelt followers, in an address in this city. He asserted that when President Taft delivered his famous Winona tariff speech he uttered the words that started the growth of the Progressives. The seed sown then budded last June at Chicago. Mr. Parker's address was delivered at the first local Progressive rally.

Meagher Is Bound Over.

Minneapolis—After being re-arrested on a charge of manslaughter, L. E. Meagher, appeared in municipal court and was bound over to the grand jury. His bail was fixed at $5,000, which he furnished and was released.

Meagher is charged with causing the death of Clara Mattson, at Seven Corners, when he struck and knocked her down with his automobile. Meagher is a member of the commission firm of Meagher & Parsons, 123 Sixth street north.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Hastings. — All slot machines and gambling devices have been ordered out of business houses in Hastings.

White Bear, Oct. 26.—John Claypool 22 years old, a laborer, was killed when struck by an inbound Northern Pacific.

Caledonia. — The new Caledonia State bank has been chartered by the secretary of state. The bank is capitalized at $25,000.

Waseca. — Fire broke out in the three-story brick building belonging to the Grapp Furniture company and destroyed the entire contents of the store.

Park Rapids.—Business men here have organized a credit association. A paid official will keep a rating record of all credit customers in the community.

Caledonia. — Stock shippers have large numbers of cattle and hogs on hand and find it impossible to secure sufficient cars. From eight to ten cars are being shipped daily.

Minneapolis. — Starting out from Minneapolis Monday or Tuesday night, a special train will tour the state next week in the interests of President William Howard Taft.

Buhl.—John Hill, who is a miner, has been arrested and jailed on a charge of furnishing liquor to Mrs. Nicholas Mattson of Spina, that resulted in her intoxication and which was followed by the cremation of her two young children.

Rochester.—The city of Rochester was visited by a disastrous fire early Sunday that totally destroyed a half block of business buildings and for a time threatened to wipe out the entire section of that district. The loss will reach $50,000 or more. Twenty-two horses were burned to death.

Marshall. — But little interest is manifested here in politics. M. E. Mathews of Marshall and Judge I. N. Olson of Sleepy Eye are running a close race for judge of the ninth judicial district. G. B. Bjorson of Minneota will have no opposition for the legislature. The only county office contested for will be that of sheriff. Elmer E. Foster (rep.) and John Munroe (dem.) are making a thorough campaign, both claiming to be in the lead.

Minneapolis.—A total of more than 173 Soo Line pay checks, aggregating in value $8,000, and all easy to cash at stores and saloons, are at large in Minneapolis, following the bold daylight robbery of a youthful messenger through an elaborately worked-out ruse. The messenger boy, Oscar Christianson, 16 years old, was relieved of the checks by a robber who succeeded in convincing the lad that he was an employee of the road sent to take the checks back to the paymaster's office to rectify certain errors.

Austin.—At the donference of state charities and correction here, Judge E. F. Waite, of the juvenile court, Minneapolis, was elected president of the conference for the next year and Minneapolis was chosen as the place of meeting, the time to be designated later by the executive committee. Other officers chosen: First vice president, G. A. Franklin, superintendent of the city schools, Austin; second vice president, Mrs. C. G. Higbee, St. Paul; general secretary, Miss Jean A. Poirtier, Duluth; enrolling secretary, Otto W. Davis, assistant secretary of the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association.

Pipestone.—A. C. Finke of Hills, who was nominated for the legislature on the republican ticket at the recent primary election, will without doubt be the representative of the sixteenth district, taking the place of Colonel Harrison White of Luverne, who was defeated at the primary. Soon after the primary there was talk that an independent candidate would be placed in the field against Finke, and efforts were made to get S. B. Nelson of Luverne and C. W. Gilmore of Pipestone to file independently. These efforts were fruitless, and now Rev. H. N. Hanson of Pipestone, prohibition candidate for the legislature, announces he will not make the race against Finke, but instead will assist him in his campaign.

St. Peter.—Nicollet county is one of the first in the state to appropriate money for a county hospital, as provided for under the state law. Availing themselves of the authority conferred upon them, the members of the board of county commissioners have formally designated the Harlow hospital in this city as the Nicollet county hospital, and have appropriated $1,000 to be used for the purchase of equipment. The institution is provided with a considerable quantity of necessary equipment, and the appropriation was made to purchase the remainder. In return the management for a period of ten years. Heretofore agrees to furnish a bond of $2,000 to conduct the institution as a hospital county charges requiring hospital treatment have been sent to New Ulm and Mankato.

Pipestone.—Lively competition was entered into by the bidders for the big sewer job to be done by the city of Pipestone, and George S. Redmon, a local contractor, landed the contract on a bid of $11,300.85. The work includes the laying of extensions in sewer districts already established and work will probably be commenced this fall.

Mankato. — Three hundred tons of coal stored in the new detached heating plant of the State Normal school was discovered to be on fire. After several hours' work the source of the fire was discovered and extinguished.

Brainerd. — Mrs. Mary Phillips, age 52, wife of E. J. Phillips, was thrown from a buggy in which she was riding with her husband and struck on her head, suffering concussion of the brain, which caused her death four hours later. The accident occurred east of the city as the couple were driving to their home.

St. James. — While George Nelson and Joe Thuel were crossing the Minneapolis & St. Louis tracks in this city last evening, a freight train collided with their automobile. Thuel sustained a broken leg and other injuries and Nelson was badly bruised.

PUZZLES IN FOOTBALL

Line Must Be in Two Places at Same Time.

Present Revival of Regulations Promises to Give Many Coaches More Worries—Situation Not Clear to "Rooter."

Wizards of football, the men who devise the plays and direct the big college elevens, are facing a proposition this fall that has never been presented before in the history of the sport, that of mapping out a defense that will be in two places at the same time and that can cover a territory which may extend over almost the field. While the radical departure from the old smashing game that came with the change in the rules in 1906, gave trouble to the coaches for a season or two, the present revival of the regulations promises to give them even more worries.

During the career of the forward pass, the twenty-yard zone placed a limitation upon the hurling proclivities of the offensive team that could be governed by the secondary defense of the opponents' backfield. It was comparatively easy for the backs, stationed as they were behind the line of scrimmage and near the ends, to block the forward passes. But with abolishment of the twenty-yard zone, the secondary defense is left without a base to work from. Now it will be possible to pass the ball as far forward as the team pleases, which means practically as far as a swift end can travel while opposing team is being blocked. To the secondary defense, or to some new arrangement of defense, will be left the task of stopping such plays, and judging by the speed of the ends that was displayed last season it will not be an easy one.

On the other hand, the game as predicted from the new rules, offers exceptional opportunities for a modified form of the old line smashes. With four trials to make the required ten yards instead of the three downs, this year's game promises the use of the plunging play. Plunging under the three-down rule and with assistance prohibited gave little opportunity for long gains where the defense was fairly strong. Now with an additional trial, just that much more chance is brought in play. And besides the secondary defense bids fair not to have its strong position immediately back of the line and ready to stop any back who tackles. This defense will be watching for long forward passes and the work of playing thirty yards down the field and immediately back of center seems impossible.

So it is indeed a problem, and one that will be watched with interest by every lover of the gridiron game. That such geniuses as Fielding H. Yost and Walter Camp have already formed some plan goes without saying. They have always had plans way in advance. But for the average "rooter" and the coach of less ability, the situation is far from clear and probably will not be till the masters have shown the way.

Gossip Among Sports

Stagg believes in mud balls to condition athletes.

Princeton has won all five games played with Harvard since 1887.

Nobody seems to known what becomes of football coaches during the "off" season.

Wolgast and McFarland will fight. Wolgast and McFarland won't fight. Take your choice.

Griffith says if he can land one more .300 hitter for his outfield he will cop the rag next year.

Sam Crane calls Johnny Evers "the will-o'the-wisp unpiratical visionary." It sounds good, anyway.

The veteran Bob Unglaub is said to have applied for a position as umpire in the American association.

A new peril has been added to football in the north of Ireland. They have injected politics into it.

Rube Waddell's winning figures are stated at .625 per cent. for the season. Not so bad for a down-and-outer.

Cornell has been able to win only one game from Pennsylvania in all the years they have met on the gridiron.

Plans are being made to send a squad of American athletes to Australia to take part in some exhibition meets.

Under Joe Birmingham's administration the Naps won eighteen out of twenty-four games, which is going some.

Greedy promoters have been blamed for many things, but they never were a circumstance to the greedy boxers of the present.

Christy Mathewson is willing to pitch any day but Friday. He says he can't remember when he has won a game on that day.

Claude Derrick, formerly of the Athletics, who has been playing with the Baltimore team, is to get another trial in the big show, this time with the New York Highlanders.

Among other things, our notion of a great baseball story is one written by a man who starts out by confessing he didn't take much interest in a game and didn't pay much attention to it.

Clark Griffith believes if he had had Chick Gandil at the start of this season instead of six weeks after he would have been able to cop the big honors.

"Too much is always expected of a champion," philosophizes a noted sporting writer, commending on the game pugilistic. But not nearly as much as the champion expects in percentages.

GREATEST 1912 FOOTBALL ATTRACTION

Jim Thorpe, Noted Carlisle Athlete.

Glen Warner, coach of the Carlisle Indian eleven, skilled above any of his rivals in the ability to pack stadiums where his elevens appear, has this year in the presence of Jim Thorpe the greatest drawing card on the football field.

Thorpe, fresh from his triumphs in the Olympic games at Stockholm, is now the best-known athlete in the world. He would be famous were he a white man, but to be the most notable of all-around performers, and also an Indian, thus carrying all the romance that goes with aboriginal extraction, is going to mean a rush to see Thorpe perform on the gridiron.

This is a big consideration at Carlisle, where there is no athletic association to furnish funds to support the team, no rich graduates to come to the rescue. The government does not make any allowance for the training of the squad nor the support of football.

This puts the proposition sharply up to Warner, and he has shown his ability to make good. His fast flying fighting Indian teams have for the past decade proved the best drawing cards of all football elevens.

Outside of the turnout for special games like Yale-Harvard, Yale-Princeton, Harvard-Princeton, Army-Navy, Pennsylvania-Michigan, etc., no eleven attracts the multitudes who go to see the Indians, and this year with Thorpe as a member the interest will be still greater.

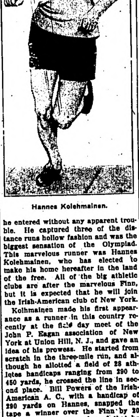
Thorpe is captain of the team, and is rated among the greatest players the institution ever produced. He is a fighting tactician, cool, but furious. He can do everything. He is a vicious tackler, great line buckler, wonderful runner with the ball in an open field and a master drop kicker.

The triumphs of the taciturn redskin at Stockholm are going to yield a rich harvest of dividends to Carlisle.

GREAT FINNISH RUNNER HERE

Hannes Kolehmainen Will Establish a Permanent Residence in the United States.

The best distance runner in the world, Hannes Kolehmainen, has recently come to this country and will make America his future home. Kolehmainen is accompanied by his brother, Willie, a professional Marathan runner. At the Olympic games in Stockholm the best of the American distance men and, in fact, those from all of the other countries, were outclassed by a marvelous Finnish runner, who won the races in which he entered without any apparent trouble. He captured three of the distance runs hollow fashion and was the biggest sensation of the Olympiad. This marvelous runner was Hannes Kolehmainen, who has elected to make his home hereafter in the land of the free. All of the big athletic clubs are after the marvelous Finn, but it is expected that he will join the Irish-American club of New York.



Hannes Kolehmainen.

Kolhmainen made his first appearance as a runner in this country recently at the field day meet of the John P. Eagan association of New York at Union Hill, N. J., and gave an idea of his prowess. He started from scratch in the three-mile run, and although he allotted a field of 28 athletes handicaps ranging from 290 to 450 yards, he crossed the line in second place. Bill Powers of the Irish-American A. C., with a handicap of 290 yards on Hannes, snapped the tape a winner over the Finn by 20 yards. Kolehmainen showed that he possesses wonderful speed by covering the three miles from scratch in 14:07.

The ease with which the Finn passed one after another of the field showed that Uncle Sam's best talent will have to work hard if Kolehmainen is to be kept from cornering the market on distance races. Only three laps from home the Finn was ninth, three-quarters of a lap from the leader. In that short distance, however, after being informed by his brother Bill, the professional Marathoner, that he must catch Powers to win the race, Hannes cut loose with a sprint that cut down all of the contestants but Powers.

PRESIDENT MURPHY IS RIGHT

Milwaukee Sentinel in Commenting on Ruling of Chicago Cub Head, Hits Hero Worshipers.

Commenting on the declared intention of President Murphy that he would insert a temperance clause in his players' contracts for next year, the Milwaukee Sentinel says:

The sensation of the week, made so, possibly, by the long statement and unnecessary comments aroused by it, was President Murphy's declared intention to put into next year's contracts with his ballplayers a "temperance clause," similar to that which has been in the Pittsburg contracts for the present season. Naturally enough, announcement of this policy created a riot of comment, most of which was an attempt to be facetious, but some of which was as serious as the condition warrants.

President Murphy has a perfect right to insert this clause in his contract and indeed it is one which ought to be there. It is just as much a matter of contractual right as anything else. When a manager or owner engages the services of a ballplayer for a liberal salary, he has a perfect right to expect the best services that player can give, and to that end he has a right to impose such conditions as tend to insure or guarantee it. If the ployer does not care to reduce to writing such conditions as will assure such services as he is bound to give, then that player ought to have the privilege of playing somewhere else. He certainly has the right to refuse to sign a contract with this stipulation as a part of it.

There will be some unthinking players who will make a fuss about this particular provision, but those who are thoughtful and honest will say to themselves that Murphy's position is entirely right and there are those who are willing to predict that the time is coming when every manager will incorporate this or a similar provision in all contracts.

The trouble with ballplayers lies not in themselves so much as in the public. There are a lot of fool hero worshippers who get a wonderful amount of delight out of hanging around hotels and fraternizing with ballplayers. They seem to think there is something unusual about the society of a ballplayer and it flatters them in some way to be seen with them and to be permitted to buy them drinks and other refreshments. These idiots make it hard for ballplayers not to accept their hospitality and the consequences are perfectly natural. If a ballplayer knew that his job depended on his leaving these people alone, they would have small chance of puffing themselves up at the expense of ballplayers.

The Cleveland Naps are the only team in the American league to get an even split with the Red Sox.

DOES AWAY WITH KNEADING

Old Bread-Making Recipe Surely a Labor-Saver and Possibly Worth a Trial.

Bread making without kneading seems somewhat of a novelty, but this recipe is over fifty years old, and comes from the housekeeping book of an old lady who was a noted cook. The recipe is called "Aunt Mary's Bread," and runs as follows:

Take one quart of milk and water, half of each (blood warm); two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, one tablespoonful each of butter and sweet pure lard, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one cake of compressed yeast and enough twice sifted flour to make a soft, smooth dough.

Rub the butter and lard into the flour. Sift in the sugar and salt. Dissolve the yeast in a little water from the one quart and add. Begin with a small amount of flour, and mixing with a spoon, and beating thoroughly, gradually add more flour, until it is dry enough just not to stick to the pan. Do not touch it with your hands. When dry enough, set it to rise in a warm place.

The next morning, or when it is sufficiently risen, take it up on your floured hands, touching lightly and gently just enough to mold it into leaves, and put it in pans to rise again from about fifteen minutes to half an hour. When it begins to blister put into a moderate oven.

This will make to medium size loaves that will cut as smooth as cake. If it browns too rapidly, cover with paper, to prevent the crust from getting tough.

GOOD USE FOR LEFTOVERS

Meat Patties May Be Made of One Variety, or a Combination May Be Employed.

For these use either cold chicken and ham, or veal and ham, or even cold beef or a mixture of cold meats. One pound of good short crust pastry, two cupfuls of cold meat, one cupful of sauce, one tablespoonful of finely chopped parsley, salt and pepper, and one egg. Roll out the pastry to about a quarter of an inch in thickness, then stamp it into rounds slightly larger than the gem pans, allowing two rounds to each gem pan. Cut the meat into small dice; if chicken and ham, or veal and ham are being used, add white sauce; if dark meat, use brown sauce, stir the meat into the sauce; add the parsley, salt and pepper to taste. Grease the gem pans, line each with pastry, put on the lid, not forgetting to first wet the edges. Make a hole in the top of each, brush the top of the patty with beaten egg and bake them in a hot oven for 25 minutes. Put them on a sieve until cold.

The Cup That Cheers.

Women who pride themselves on their tea making assert that tea to be good, should be made in an earthen pot, never in a metal one.

Tea is never good when long standing, but in some cases it cannot be helped. It should be poured off the leaves into another heated pot and covered with a "cosey."

If cream is taken a less expensive grade of tea may be used than when lemon is preferred.

An old-fashioned idea is to drop a few shavings of dried orange peel into the pot in which the tea is made. Some like this, while others believe that it spoils the flavor of the beverage.

Bits of cinnamon and two or three cloves dropped in are other way of varying the flavor of the cup that cheers.

Scotch Griddle Scone.

Sift together twice one cupful of flour, one-half teaspoon of baking soda, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, a pinch of salt, and a tablespoonful of sugar. Add a small piece of butter or lard, a few chopped raisins or caraway seeds, and enough sour milk to make a stiff dough. Turn upon a board and work by gentle kneading into a round cake. Flatten it with a rolling pin and place on a hot griddle. Brown on one side, then turn and brown on the other. If preferred, this scone may be baked in the oven. The raisins, or seeds, or both, may be omitted.

Codfish Soup.

One-half turnip, one or two parsley roots (or leaves if not roots), three onions. Slice all these and boil until done in two quarts of water, then add cup shredded codfish and boil a little longer. Take one cup milk, one egg, one teaspoon flour. Beat this well together and add to the above. Let thicken and then season with little ginger and pepper. By cooking fresh fish until it can be removed from the bones you can make same as codfish soup, only add a little salt and butter size of an egg.

Tartare Sauce.

One cupful mayonnaise, one teaspoonful finely chopped capers, one teaspoonful finely chopped olives, one teaspoonful finely chopped green cucumber pickles and one teaspoonful finely chopped parsley will be needed for this recipe.

Mix in the last four together and press dry in a cloth. Add gradually to the mayonnaise.

Mint-Glazed Carrots.

Wash and scrape three carrots and cut in one-fourth inch slices. Parboil for ten or fifteen minutes, drain, put into a saucepan with one-third cupful each of sugar and butter, and one tablespoonful of chopped mint leaves. Cook very slowly until glazed and perfectly tender. Serve hot, and as a border surrounding a mound of green peas.—Good Housekeeping.

Cake Filling.

Mix three-fourths cup sugar, one tablespoon flour, one cup boiling water, one cup chopped raisins and nuts and cook until it thickens. Roll the dough very thin and place the filling between two layers. Bake.

Chopped Carrots.

Boil the carrots in salted water, then chop them fine and season with butter, pepper, salt and a little hot milk to make them moist.

WOODROW WILSON

New York, N. Y.—Only the uncertainty of a few close states, whose electoral vote in no way can affect the election of Wilson and Marshall, speculation over the popular vote of the three presidential candidates and the complexion of legislatures that will name United States senators had interest last night in the final returns of Tuesday's general election.

The total of the Republican electoral column was apparently fixed at the 12 votes of Idaho, Utah and Vermont; but the footing of the Wilson and Roosevelt columns flickered alternately as late returns from Iowa, Kansas, South Dakota and Wyoming gave indications of change from the results accepted Tuesday.

Wilson May Get Doubtful States.

On the basis of the latest returns, with the vote of Iowa, South Dakota and Wyoming placed in the "doubtful" column, President-elect Wilson had 287 certain votes in the electoral college: Colonel Roosevelt 89, and President Taft had 12.

The doubtful states, except South Dakota, gave more or less certain indications of landing in the list of Wilson electoral votes; while South Dakota's returns showed a general trend toward a Roosevelt plurality.

Woman's Suffrage Gains.

A phase of the general election that became known yesterday was the success of women's suffrage in four of the five states where constitutional amendments were submitted to the people.

The victory of the women was complete in Kansas and Arizona and possibly Michigan, late returns from Oregon indicating it had succeeded there also, while from Wisconsin came returns showing the decisive defeat of the equal suffrage proposal.

Wilson's Popular Vote Enormous.

Estimates of the popular vote polled by Governor Wilson ranged through many millions during the day. It was found impossible to compute, with any accuracy, the popular vote of any of the presidential candidates and it will be a number of days until the counting of the three cornered contest in the different states is concluded and an accurate tabulation of the popular vote made possible.

Assertions were made from several quarters where an effort had been made to gather preliminary popular vote figures, that Governor Wilson had not secured a majority of the votes cast throughout the country. Estimates ranged from a small majority of all votes to figures nearly 1,000,000 below a majority. The popular votes, however, would in no way effect his election or his complete control of the electoral college, should it show his total to be less than that of the combined vote for Roosevelt and Taft.

Many Surprises.

There were many surprises. Early, New Hampshire, first credited to Taft, went in to the Wilson column with a majority of about 1,500 for the Democratic candidate.

Returns from Idaho, which came in scattering form early in the day, favored Wilson as strongly as to create the belief that it would give him its electoral vote; but late returns made it the third state to go certainly for President Taft.

The Roosevelt forces watching the returns hourly as they came from Illinois, suffered a scare as the downstate Democratic returns reduced Roosevelt's plurality from Cook county until it promised to disappear. Late in the day a complete report from Cook county again swelled the Roosevelt majority in the state and seemingly made certain the control of Illinois 29 votes by the Progressive candidate.

Kansas in Question.

Kansas, which had been conceded to Roosevelt by all interests on the preliminary returns last night, gradually slipped back during the day until it had become a question whether Wilson or Roosevelt would control its 10 votes.

The Democrats, in the wide-spread victories of Tuesday have secured control also of the United States senate. In many states, where counting still was going on, the control of the legislatures is in doubt.

Control of Senate Certain.

Washington. — It has become almost a certainty that the Democratic party will control the United States senate when only the possible loss of West Virginia stands in the way of success.

Of the 19 seats held by Republicans which were at stake in Tuesday's election it became necessary for the Democrats to elect six to secure a majority in the senate, providing they were able at the same time to hold their own.

In Republican Strongholds.

Returns gave them the following in Republican strongholds:

Two in Colorado, where John F. Shafroth (Dem.) for the fall term and C. S. Thomas (Dem.) for the short term, will be selected by a Democratic legislature. One in Montana, where Republicans and Progressives conceded the election of T. J. Walsh (Dem.). One in Kansas, where W. R. Stubbs (Rep.) conceded the election of his opponent, Wm. H. Thompson (Dem.). One in Delaware, a Democratic legislature assuring the return of a Democrat to succeed Richardson (Rep.) retired. One in New Jersey, where Wm. Hughes (Dem.) will succees Briggs (Rep.).

The uncertainty as to West Virginia, indicated in earlier reports, seemed apparently the only obstacle to a Democratic majority.

Definite returns are still lacking from Oregon, Wyoming, Tennessee, New Hampshire, Illinois, Iowa and South Dakota. Late figures from Nevada indicate that Pittman (Dem.) is leading and probably is elected.

Joe Cannon Is Defeated.

Later returns did not diminish the heavily Democratic majority in the house of representatives, but they did play see-saw with "Uncle Joe" Cannon and finally left him defeated by a majority of 600.

The personnel of the new senate will show many of the veterans, with a large infusion of new blood. Among the prominent senators holding over are Root, Lodge, La Follette, Gallinger, Penrose, Clapp, Culberson, Kern, O'Gorman, Raynor, Shively and Hoke Smith.

Others re-elected or likely to come back include Senators Bacon, Tillman, Borah, Nelson, Simmons, Martin, Bankhead, Davis and Owens.

Wilson Is Calm.

Princeton.—Govenor Wilson sat with a party of friends around a brilliantly illuminated dinner table as the election returns began to come in earlier than was anticipated.

The first results the governor got were favorable and his comment was: "That's very encouraging."

Responding later to a telegram from Democratic National Chairman McCoombs, asserting that Governor Wilson unquestionably was elected, the Democratic candidate sent a dispatch as follows:

"I deply appreciate your telegram and wish to extend to you and the members of the campaign committee my warm congratulations on the part you have played in the organization and conduct of a campaign fought out upon essential issues.

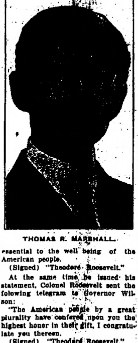
"A great cause has triumphed. Every Democrat, every true progressive, of whatever alliance, must now lend his full force and enthusiasm to the fulfillment of the people's hope, the establishment of the people's right so that justice and progress may go hand in hand."

Colonel Wires Wilson.

Oyster Bay. — Shortly before midnight Tuesday Colonel Roosevelt made the following statement:

"The American people, by a great plurality, have decided in favor of Mr. Wilson and the Democratic party. Like all good citizens, I accept the result with entire good humor and contentment. As for the Progressive cause, I can only repeat what I have already so many times said: the fate of the leader for the time being is of little consequence, but the cause itself must in the end triumph, for its triumph is essential to the well being of the American people.

(Signed) "Theodore Roosevelt."



THOMAS R. MARSHALL.

At the same time he issued his statement, Colonel Roosevelt sent the folowing telegram to Governor Wilson:

"The American people by a great plurality have confered upon you the highest honor in their gift, I congratulate you thereon.

(Signed) "Theodore Roosevelt."

Iowa Claimed for Wilson.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 6.—Latest available returns indicate a Wilson victory in Iowa by less than 10,000 votes. Geo. W. Clarke, governor, and nine of the 11 congressmen are considered to be Republican, and the Iowa legislature, which elects a senator, is thought to be Republican. E. G. Dunn, Democrat, basing his claim on reports gathered by Democratic state headquarters, declared he had been elected governor of Iowa over Clarke, Republican, by 5,000 plurality.

GOV. EBERHART RE-ELECTED

Roosevelt Carries Minnesota by Close Margin—Knute Nelson Wins Easily.

St. Paul.—Theodore Roosevelt is in the lead in Minnesota.

After having been first in the Wilson column, then doubtful, then in the Wilson column again, the state again switched to Roosevelt.

Out of an approximate total of 3,000 precincts in the state, 1,880 precincts complete at midnight gave Roosevelt a lead of a little over 7,000 vote. Should he maintain this lead he will carry the state by about 15,000.

Mr. Brown Chief Justice.

Calvin S. Brown, associate justice of the supreme court, has been elected chief justice by a strong majority and the other winners for place on the bench are Associate Justices George L. Bunn of St. Paul and Andrew Holt of Minneapolis. Judge Oscar Hallam of the Ramsey district bench appears to be defeated.

It was thought that Justice Holt had been defeated, but later returns gave him a lead of 10,000 in Hennepin while the returns from the country wiped out the balance against him that the early returns indicated. Justice Brown has a lead of nearly 15,000. The third, or losing, place is still in doubt, with Bunn in the lead. Returns from 1,280 precincts gave Brown 58,278, Stanton 44,000, Stewart 30,583, Holt 62,454, Bunn 58,498, Hallam 58,231.

The Vote on Governor.

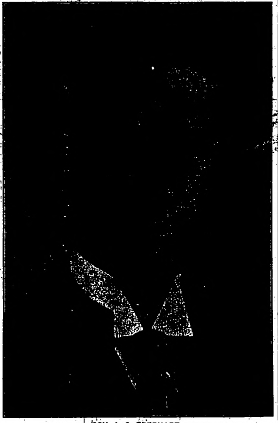
With over half of the 3,962 precincts in the state reporting, Governor Eberhart was credited with a total of 98,319, Ringdal 76,048, and Collins, 20,884. Governor Eberhart's lead over his principal rival was 22,276.

THE STATE WINNERS.

Governor.
Adolph O. Eberhart, Rep.
United States Senator.
Knute Nelson, Rep.
Congressman at Large.
James Manahan, Rep.
Attorney General.
Lyndon Smith, Rep.
Secretary of State.
Julius Schmahl, Rep.
State Treasurer.
Walter J. Smith, Rep.
Railway and Warehouse Commissioners.
C. E. Elmquist and Ira B. Mills, Reps.
Lieutenant Governor.
J. A. A. Burnquist, Rep.

CONGRESSIONAL WINNERS.

First District—Sidney Anderson, Rep.
Second District—W. S. Hammond, Dem.
Third District—C. R. Davis, Rep.
Fourth District—F. C. Stevens, Rep.
Fifth District—George R. Smith, Rep.
Sixth District—C. A. Linbergh, Rep.
Seventh District—A. J. Volstead, Rep.
Eighth District—Clarence B. Miller, Rep.
Ninth District—Halvor Steenerson, Rep.



GOV. A. O. EBERHART.

Senator Nelson Indorsed.

Senator Nelson is overwhelmingly indorsed. His majority will be fully 65,000. The 1,495 precincts in the state received so far give the senior senator 102,165 and D. W. Lawler, his Democratic opponent, 66,114.

James Manahan, for congressman-at-large, is also a big winner. His majority will be in the 60,000 class and may be even greater. He now has 81,307 votes to his credit, with 40,677 for Buell, his Democratic opponent.

J. A. A. Burnquist, the Republican candidate for lieutenant governor, is now nearly 40,000 to the good. At midnight his vote was 73,242. Winn Powers, his Democratic rival, was credited with 47,468 votes. This was on the basis of returns from 1,199 precincts.

Judge Ira B. Mills of the railroad and warehouse commission may have the honor of leading the Republican ticket in the vote cast, though he is hard pressed by Secretary of State Schmahl. The third party candidates handicapped them but little.

In Congressional Districts.

In the different congressional districts in Minnesota the winners have attained their places easily.

In the First, Sidney Anderson is an easy winner over his Democratic opponent, Clinton Robinson. In the Second, W. S. Hammond, Democrat, wins by a handsome majority over F. F. Ellsworth, author of the resolution which made a third party ticket in Minnesota possible. In the Third, C. R. Davis wins by about 5,000 majority over his Democratic opponent, F. L. Glotzbach.

The Victory of F. C. Stevens.

The victory of F. C. Stevens in the Fourth district was one of the unexpected results. Mr. Stevens was facing a bitter fight and the Democrats had named a strong man. The complete defeat of Hugh T. Halbert is the Ramsey county answer to the third party ticket, placed in the field after the primary nominations were made.

In Hennepin county, the victory of George R. Smith was expected but its completeness was more than had been anticipated in view of the three cornered fight made against him.

In the Sixth District, C. A. Lindberg is an easy winner over his Democratic opponent. Dr. Gilkison and A. J. Volstead was elected without opposition in the Seventh.

Clarence B. Miller, Republican, was an easy winner over John Jenswold in the Eighth, or Duluth district, while Halvor Halvorson wins by a reduced majority in the Ninth.

On the Republican state ticket, Knute Nelson and James Manahan, candidates for United States senator and congressman at large, respectively, win by the largest majorities.

It was not possible to completely estimate their majorities but it is in the neighborhood of from 70,000 to 80,000.

GOPHER NEWS NOTES.

Minnesota Events of the Week in Condensed Form.

Stewartville.—For 72 hours Miss Susan Ripley has been in a state of coma as the result of being thrown from an automobile.

Red Wing.—Francis M. Kock, aged 27 years, a jeweler, died from blood poisoning caused by opening a slight eruption on his cheek.

Owatonna.—The real estate firm of Anderson & Blythe, the largest in southern Minnesota, has dissolved, R. A. Anderson retiring from the firm.

Albert Lea.—Albert Lea Council No. 1590, Knights of Columbus, initiated a class of sixty-eight. The local council now has about 150 members.

Pipestone.—A mission is being held at St. Leo's Catholic church here this week. The Redemptionist Fathers of Denver have the mission in charge.

Owatonna.—Tetanus developed in two cases in Owatonna, the attack proving fatal in the case of Miss Agnes Goudie, who stepped on a rusty nail.

St. Cloud.—Lyman A. Root, the 3-year-old boy who was mysteriously injured last week, died at the local hospital. Death resulted from a telescoping of a portion of the bowels.

Pipestone.—Mark Haney, Willie Donaldson and Gilbert Schwartz, all of Pipestone, were the Pipestone county winners in the state corn contest for boys, according to the announcement that has just been made here.

St. Paul.—Frank Kargesin, sixty-six years old, 1109 East Third street, was run down by a Milwaukee train near the union station in St. Paul. Both legs were cut off. He died on the way to the hospital. In his pockets were found a steamship ticket, a baggage check and $310.

Carlton.—Olson Olson received a message from Fort William, Ont., informing him that his son, Henry M. Olson, was accidentally shot and killed while hunting there Monday. The body is being brought home accompanied by his hunting companions. Olson was 24 years old and an architect.

Pipestone.—Pipestone is to have the most complete and up-to-date creamery in the state, the contract for the erection of the structure having just been let to the Boushard Construction company of Minneapolis, who agree to have the building complete and ready for occupancy by Jan. 15. The new building will be fireproof and cost $35,000.

Mankato.—The October term of the federal court opened Tuesday, with Judge Charles A. Willard of Minneapolis presiding. The most important criminal case is that of William Johnson of Waterville, charged with having in his possession 2,000 bogus gold coins, made in representation of Spanish 25-peseta pieces. There are only a few civil cases on the calendar.

St. Cloud.—The attendance at the normal school in this city will have to be reduced to 500, according to a recent order issued by the state normal board. The attendance a few weeks ago was 581. Letters have been sent to the county superintendents and school officials calling their attention to the order and requesting that they see that no more applications for admission are made.

Brainerd, Minn.—The funeral services of Major Charles A. Ruffee has just been held here. Prominently identified with the pioneer days of the Northwest, Major Ruffee was an Indian scout, Indian fighter, carried the mail between Bismarck and Abercrombie, and was later Indian agent at the White Earth reservation. He took a prominent part in the early days of Crow Wing county history. He was 74 years of age and a member of the St. Cloud lodge of Masons. He leaves a brother and sister in Pennsylvania.

St. Cloud.—Charged with having threatened the life of Superintendent Frank L. Randall of the state reformatory here, Austin J. Kassa is in custody at the county jail and will be examined as to his sanity. Kassa about eleven years ago was an inmate at the state reformatory. He was then transferred to Fergus Falls on the grounds of insanity and it is claimed made his escape from there. Kassa is alleged to have written numerous letters to Mr. Randall, practically all of them threatening and containing statements of revenge.

Minneapolis.—According to H. V. Mercer, attorney for Mrs. J. P. Quirk, no settlement has yet been made in the Akeley will dispute. Mr. Mercer said that Mr. and Mrs. Quirk and their attorneys recently held a conference at Denver with Mrs. Clara Rood Royce Akeley and her attorneys, at which time a tentative agreement was considered. "The agreement has not yet been signed by either party," Mr. Mercer said, "and the case as yet is not settled. No contracts or other agreement have been signed by either Mrs. Quirk or Mrs. Akeley."

Minneapolis. — Eugene V. Debs, who is the socialist candidate for president, preached the doctrines of his party to more than 3,000 persons at the Auditorium. A large crowd that was unable to gain admittance to the Auditorium was addressed in the annex. Mr. Debs declared that there are in reality but two political parties, those representing the capitalist classes and the Socialist party, representing the working people. He drew no line between the Republicans [illegible]

Survey 2,000,000 Acres.

Helena, Mont., Nov. 6.—Government surveying parties in the mountainous regions of Montana have been obliged to suspend operations earlier than usual this year, owing to the deep early snows. The first of the parties to be driven from the field by snow is that in charge of George E. Carter and Donald MacCrea, which came in from the Belt mountains. The eight remaining parties will be in by Nov. 10. Providing weather conditions permit, the crews will be put in the field by April first next year.

Fair a Success.

St. Paul, Nov. 6.—According to the report of the Minnesota State Agricultural society, the Minnesota state fair of 1912 realized from all sources $306,361.29, or $37,511.22 more than was realized last year. Disbursements amounted to $290,956.79. The balance entered October 1 on the books of the society amounted to $14,404.50. The amount realized from the fair was enough, according to the statement, to pay the expenses of the fair and apply $60,000 on last year's deficit. The attendance reached 372,805.

New Coal Plant Operated.

Fort William, Ont., Nov. 6.—Creating a new era in the history of Fort William's lake harbor front, the steamer Haney was piloted up the McKellar river, and for the first time the new $10,000,000 Canadian Pacific railroad coal plant was put into operation. The river is the smaller of the three that form the local harbor, and this is the first time a big freighter has been navigated farther than its mouth, at the Kam river turning basin.

Butter Output Increases.

St. Paul.—The Minnesota state dairy and food commission is now compiling figures on the production of butter in the state, and finds that the increase for 1911 is heavy. It is expected that the compilation will show an increase much greater than that of 1910. Stearns county, which was credited with a butter production of over 3,000,000 pounds in 1910, shows a production of over 4,000,000 pounds for 1911. In 1910 the farmers of Stearns county received $824,271 for their butter fat.

Freight Handlers Quit.

Brandon, Man., Nov. 5.—About 60 C. P. R. freight handlers and clerks, representing the entire staff of the local C. P. R. freight sheds and offices and several from the superintendent's office, have gone on a strike. The men demand recognition of the union. The freight houses are deserted, with freight piling up and only a handful of men to do the work. The situation appears serious. Many local merchants are making complaints already that the strike is affecting them seriously.

$1,000,000 for Club Home.

Los Angeles, Cal., Nov. 6.—Mrs. Mathews S. Robertson, president of the organization committee of Los Angeles Woman's Athletic club, and its other members have accepted the plans for the million dollar clubhouse which it proposes to build on Hill street, opposite Central park. The contract was signed and according to Mrs. Robertson immediate invitations for membership will be issued and stock placed on sale. The most prominent society women in Los Angeles are back of the movement.

OUT OF THE ORDINARY

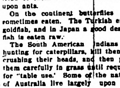
Climbing the Pennine Alps

Travelers who find delight in mountain climbing get their fill of that rather dangerous sport in the Pennine Alps. Our illustration shows a party negotiating a precipitous cliff in those Italian mountains, the photograph being taken at one of those critical moments when a mis-step or a falling boulder means almost certain disaster.

PROPOSALS IN THE ALPS

In remote Alpine hamlets and villages, especially in the Bernese Oberland, there still exist ancient and pretty customs of proposing marriage by the language of flowers. If a maid accepts a bouquet of edelweiss from a man, she at the same time accepts him as her fiance, the idea being that the man has risked his life to obtain the flowers for the woman he loves. Another method which exists in the Canton of Glarus is for the young man to place a flower-pot containing a single rose and a note on the window-sill of the girl's room when she is absent from home, and wait—perhaps days—for a reply. If the maid takes the rose the young man boldly enters the house to arrange matters with her parents, but if the rose is allowed to fade away the proposal is rejected without a single word having been exchanged between the couple. Sometimes a fickle girl will keep a young man waiting a day or two for an answer.

TYPICAL WELL IN PERSIA



Water is a precious commodity in most parts of Persia, and the wells usually are protected by a dome of sand and mud, like the one seen in the illustration. The women carry the water from the wells in jugs borne on their heads.

WHAT SOME PEOPLES EAT

After all, food is purely a matter of taste. The Eskimos delight in mice in tallow. Then the Chinese consider that alligators, mice, and rats form most excellent foodstuffs. A certain tribe of Indians in California thrive upon ants.

On the continent butterflies are sometimes eaten. The Turkish enjoy goldfish, and in Japan a good deal of fish is eaten raw.

The South American Indians go hunting for caterpillars, kill them by crushing their heads, and then pack them carefully in grass until required for "table use.' Some of the natives of Australia live largely upon the seeds of different species of grass. They also eat certain roots and bulbs and the gum obtained from trees.

Another Australian delicacy is the flesh of snakes, and a favorite dish, called tuinamba, is composed of pupa cases.

STOLEN DEEDS HID IN TREE

Three years ago the home of Pleas Buckner, a farmer, living near Nuburn, Ark., was burglarized, and from a trunk was taken a cigar box containing $73 and several deeds to farm lands. Nothing was ever heard of the stolen valuables till recently when men cutting wood for a sorghum mill near the Buckner home, cut into a hollow log, and there discovered the box with the deeds intact. The money was gone.

FOOTPRINT IS HIS NEMESIS

His footprint on the dusty cover of a Bible sent William Hargreaves to the Texas state penitentiary for two years. He robbed the store of W. W. Pruitt of Roanoke last March. Mr. Pruitt discovered the footprint, which corresponded with the shoe of Hargraves, who had bought a new pair at the [illegible]ore.

RELIC OF THE DAYS OF '49.

Campers near the summit of the Sierra Nevadas, of Placerville, Cal., discovered a relic of "the days of old, the days of gold, the days of '49." It is a yoke for oxen and was lying near the long-ago abandoned emigrant trail. Over this trail came thousands of persons from the eastern states and foreign shores. Along the almost obliterated trail are still to be seen remnants of prairie schooners, here and there a rough hewed tombstone, each in itself a chapter in the life of some pioneer. The yoke has stamped on it, a date, "1850," and several initials which the elements have made indecipherable. The yoke was made of oak and has withstood the rains and snows of sixty-two winters remarkably well.

GOATS TO PROTECT SHEEP

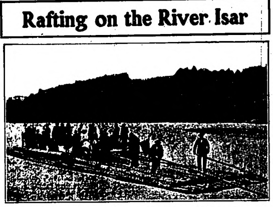
In order to frustrate an attack on his flock of sheep by a catamount, or panther, David Glover of near Haneyville has purchased two Angora goats. The pugnacity of these goats is such that on animal of prey dare attempt to despoil a flock.

The sheep raisers of that wild section have suffered severe losses to their flocks of late years since the big increase in black bears and catamount, and now with a real panther in the neighborhood it became necessary to do something desperate. Mr. Glover hit upon the Angora goat idea, and it seems to have settled the problem. The goats are masters of all they survey, all right, even the men folk fighting shy of getting too close to the sturdy creatures.

WANTS CITY TO BUY TEETH

Michael Brennan of Cleveland has served notice on Mayor Baker that the city will be asked to settle a bill of $58 for a set of teeth, in a suit to be brought by Brennan. He claims that in a scuffle with highwaymen the teeth were rudely knocked from his mouth and broken.

Rafting on the River Isar



Rafting has become a novel pleasure with the population as well as the numerous visitors to the Bavarian capital. The rafts, which are by no means specially built for passenger transportation but are of the simplest kind, usually start from the village of Toelz in the Isar valley, which is an old renowned rafting place. It is reached by train from Munich in about two hours. It takes the rafts—in spite of the rapid current of the Isar river—about six or seven hours to get from Toelz to Munich, which is due to the many windings and turnings of the river. The fare for these trips is very moderate, and as a result the rafts are usually crowded with people. There are no modern luxuries for the passengers, who have to stand or sit on rough boards, but nevertheless good humor and merriment prevail. Each raft has its restaurant, which means several kegs of beer, some baskets of bread, butter, sausages, radishes, and the like. There is also an orchestra on board of each raft composed of two or three musicians playing the fiddle, clarinet, and accordion. The valley of the Isar river is renowned for its natural charms, and there is indeed no better way to view the beauties of the scenery—with the chain of the Bavarian Alps in the background—than to take part in one of these rafting trips.

MOVING STONE OF TANDIL

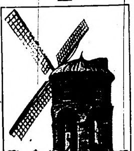
One morning every true Argentinian was shocked by the news of the fall of "La Piedra Movediza de Tandil"—the Moving Stone of Tandil. No one knows how many centuries this huge rock, which the Argentines proudly proclaimed as one of the Seven Wonders of the World, had stood among the granite hills of Tandil, perfectly poised on its narrow fulcrum less than eight inches square.

The Tandil quarries are situated about 250 miles south of Buenos Aires, and every summer tourists have been occustmed to make the pilgrimage from the capital to view the national phenomenon and carve their names on its ancient sides. Standing in a certain position, a child could cause the great stone to rock up and down fully four inches. Visitors never tired of throwing under it, as it swung upwards, pieces of glass and small stones, which would be crushed to powder on the downward away.

Tradition has it that the tyrant Rosa, a name of ill omen in Argentine history, in a savage mood some 30 years ago, tried to dislodge the Moving Stone, using 40 yoke of oxen to accomplish his purpose. Whether the story is true or not, the old sentinel continued to maintain his watch over the surrounding fertile plains, apparently undisturbed by either the friendlines or the hostility of mankind. The elements likewise were foiled in their warfare, though once a bolt of lightning ripped off a piece weighing about three tons.

What finally caused the downfall of the giant bowlder is a mystery. Many and varied were the theories advanced by the groups around the cafe tables, and the fall of the stone became the basis of many a heated argument. All the papers contained eulogies of the fallen monarch, and the whole nation mourned the passing of this famous feature of Argentine scenery.

OLD INIGO JONES' WINDMILL



At Chesterton, in Warwickshire, England, stands this remarkable old windmill, handsome enough to deserve preservation. It was designed by the famous architect, Inigo Jones, in 1632, and is substantially built of stone, the superstructure supported on six semicircular arches.

AUSTRIAN BUREAUCRAT BUSY

No sum is too insignificant to escape the attention of the Austrian bureaucrat. In the Weiner Zeitung there appeared a long official notice from the high court of justice calling upon the legitimate representatives of the late Count Franz Palffy, who died on November 14, 1852, to withdraw a deposit from the treasury of the civil court of justice which had lain there for more than 30 years within the period of one year, six weeks and three days.

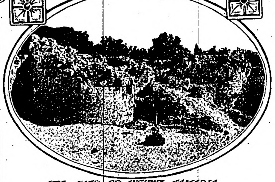
The sum in question is one heller—one-tenth of a penny.

ALLOWS BRIDE TO CHEW GUM

As Simon Hine and Rose Nicholas of Milton, Pa., were applying for a marriage license at the recorder's office, Hine warned the girl that when he married her she would have to stop chewing gum. She grew angry and, escorting Hine into the corridor of the court house, gave him a sound lecture, whereupon they returned to the recorder's office, Hine stating he would marry her, even if she chewed tobacco.

The CITY OF THE GOOD SAMARITAN

COLONNADE THAT ENCIRCLED THE BROW OF THE HILL



The GATE OF ANCIENT SAMARIA

AND he bought the hill Samaria of Shemer for two talents of silver and built on the hill and called the name of the city which he built, after the name of Shemer, owner of the hill, Samaria." So speaks the Hebrew chronicler of Omri, captain of the host, who began to reign over the little principality of Israel about the end of the tenth century B. C. His better-known successor Ahab, confirmed the new capital and built there a house to Baal of the Syrians. Samaria had this great advantage over the capital of Judah, that it lay on the main north and south road of Syria. If this situation caused it to be visited rather too often by passing invaders, it brought a more active commerce than Jerusalem ever enjoyed, and, when the Romans came to control Palestine, obtained for it, under the new name, Sebasteia, administrative superiority, and enrichment with the usual public architecture by which the remoter provincial chief places were externally Hellenised. But Sebasteia never attained to the second or third rank of Roman provincial cities, just as, before Roman times, Samaria had failed to become one of the great cities of Syria. The poverty of Palestine has always condemned even its chief settlements to comparatively mean estate. Harborless, rocky, thinly clad, possessing but one stream which is worthy the name of a river, and that sunk so deep below the general level as to be a curse rather than a blessing, the "Promised Land" could only have allured a people long condemned to the awful aridity of Sinai. Excavations in Palestine have always illustrated its poverty, and if it were not for the religious associations of its sites, they would probably never have attracted the spade of the western archaeologist at all. Compared with the products of excavation in any of the surrounding lands, in North Syria, Asia Minor, Cyprus, Crete, Egypt, or Mesopotamia, those found hitherto in Palestine are so rustic that if the "treasure" of either the first or second temple in Jerusalem were ever to come to light, one would expect it to fall far short of the traditional estimate of either its intrinsic or its artistic value. We commend this consideration to the ardent searchers in the Hill of Ophel, should they be permitted to resume their interrupted burrowings—though there is little enough chance that either they or anyone else will ever be in a position to reduce the Judean values of pious tradition to the hard facts of a sale at auction!

It is not likely, however, that Dr. Reisner has undertaken, on behalf of Harvard University, to excavate in Palestine under any illusions of this kind. Having long dug in Egypt, on the rich sites of a great civilization, he is now clearing Samaria for the good and sufficient reason that new light on the history of the Hebrew monarchies (whose importance bears no relation whatever to their scale) is to be expected most confidently from the sites of their capitals. Samaria is a favorable spot for such scientific investigation; for although it can claim nothing like the antiquity of Jerusalem, its site is not, as is the latter's, overbuilt with a modern city, which has disturbed its stratification with intrusive foundations, appropriated its stones, and rendered many parts inaccessible. Modern Samaria lies on a small portion only of the hill which Omri bought, and the rest is occupied by gardens, orchards and fields. The extant remains are, of course, for the most part, those, not of Ahab's Samaria, but of Herod's Sebasteia; but below these, at various points, Greek and pre-Greek strata have been found going down to virgin rock. So far as the excavations have proceeded up to now, they confirm the inference, which would naturally be drawn from the Biblical chronicle, that the hill Samaria was a vacant site before Omri's time. Dr. Reisner has found ruins of a considerable structure of good masonry bedded on the rock itself, and preserved in places to the height of several feet, and this he identifies with the Palace of Omri and Ahab. Within its area occurred the four-score ink-written potsherds—so-called ostraka—about which a good deal has been heard. They are not, as it turns out, documents which convey any historical information, but just labels or tallies of wine and oil stores, which mention no king's name, and contain no indication of their date except so far as this may be inferred from their handwriting. The script is Hebrew of an early sort, hardly distinguishable from Phoenician, and nearly related to the epigraphic character used for the Siloam Inscription in the age of Hezekiah. Even if they are no part of the archives of Omri or Ahab (as they were once reported to be), and even if the building, in which they were found, is not the palace of those kings (its severely undecorated and unfurnished character raises a doubt), they constitute a find of very great interest to Semitic scholars.

Very little else of the pre-captivity time seems to have rewarded Dr. Reisner, but it is not safe to say this certainly until he has said it himself. He is a seasoned digger, not at all given to advertising his successes. uBt of one thing we can be sure—whatever there was in the ground which he has dug over, he will have found. No one engaged in the digging trade has a sounder method than he or devotes himself more whole-heartedly to putting his method into practice. In the meantime, the photographs of the American colony at Jerusalem, which are published herewith, can show us the remains of Roman Sebasteia, which overlay Samaria—for instance, the ruined colonnade of monolithic pillars which ran round the crest of the hill from the gate to the Forum; the broad stairway which led down from the summit to the altar of Roma Dea; and the Basilica. The singular interest of the place, however, is lost by Herod's time, and unless Dr. Reisner can promise more light on Ahab and Omri, we hope, for our part, that he will transfer his energy and experience to some other site. If underground Jerusalem cannot be adequately explored, a Philistine or a Phoenician city would probably repay excavation more than any of the Hebrew cities.

SPIDER A FRIEND OF MANKIND

Really Undeserving of the Enmity That Is Felt Toward Him by the Average Housewife.

Aside from snakes, there is probably no living thing which can look to mankind for friendship with so little hope as the spider, yet when the spider is fairly brought to trial it is rather hard to prove anything against him except his appearance and a few cobwebs. Apart from furnishing an example of industry and patience from which we might well profit, the spider feeds exclusively upon freshly killed insects, all of them being of the kind denounced by sanitary authorities, the house fly being its favorite quarry. As the actual destruction of a few hundred house flies means that several hundred thousand that would otherwise have spent gay lives transmitting typhoid and other diseases will not come into existence, and as almost any spider should be able to account for as many as three hundred in the course of a summer, to say nothing of stray mosquitoes and black gnats, we surely owe him something more than a flap with a slipper when we happen to catch him out of his hole. A spider can bite, of course, but he seldom does except in self-defense, and even then the bite is not worse than would have been received from any one of the several hundred mosquitoes he has probably dined upon, or will, if let alone. In the light of present scientific knowledge, the story of the spider and the fly that was invited into the pretty parlor does not cause such a surge of sympathy for the fly as it once did.—Harper's Weekly.

Futility of a Visit to Lang.

They were telling stories of the late Andrew Lang in one of the London clubs the other night.

One man told a story of a dinner invitation, given by Mr. Lang. He was staying in Marlowes Road, Earl's Court, a street away at the end of that long Cromwell road, which seems to go on forever. The guest was not very sure how to get to Marlowes Road, and Lang very kindly explained.

"Walk right along Cromwell Road," he said, "till you drop dead, and my house is just opposite!"

Use For Old Lighthouses

South Jerseymen have discovered a way of making practical use of an old lighthouse, so that if you have any old lighthouses in your possession here is a hint which may be of value in turning the same to profitable account. The circular building is the base of the second lighthouse erected on Cape May Point, and it is now doing excellent service as a stable. Visitors to the present lighthouse, if they are of an explorative turn of mind, will see this strange structure, and if not informed as to its history will marvel that a stable should be built in such a shape, with walls four feet thick, of solid brick. The explanation is that when the second lighthouse was replaced by the present structure the older one was ordered to be torn down, but the base was left, and has been since used for a stable. The foundations of the first lighthouse may occasionally be seen on the sand not far away, although these stones are usually covered with the water.

London's Best Dressed Men.

Apropos of the statement of M. Le Bargy, the well-known French actor and the best dressed man in Paris, that he cannot dress on less than $6,000 a year, inquiries have been made as to the best dressed man in London. The men that wear the best clothes in London (said a leading tailor), according to a newspaper of that city, are no longer our gilded youths—these, as a matter of fact, nowadays attach much more importance to the color of their shirts, collars and ties than to their clothes—but stock exchange men foreign diplomats and—hotel clerks. A visit to any of our leading hotels will soon convince one that the clerks not only wear clothes of the best materials, but also of the most perfect fit.

American Production of Salt.

This country produced more than 31,000,000 barrels of salt last year, more than enough for the domestic demand. American salt manufacture mand. American salt manufacturers have begun seeking foreign trade.

English Husband's Fate.

Under the married women property act a husband in England has no jurisdiction over his wife's property and income. Under the income tax he is responsible for her taxes. If the taxes are not paid, the husband, not the wife, is imprisoned. Mrs. Mark Wilkes recently refused to pay her income tax—$185—and her husband was locked up. He will spend the rest of his life in prison unless his wife pays, or the law is changed. When at liberty he is a teacher in the suburb of Clapton.

LIFE WORTH LIVING HERE

People of Australia Rejoice in Wonderful Climate and Love Their Beautiful Country.

Melbourne.—There is little to distinguish the country town in Australia from the small town in the western part of America. The streets are straight, the buildings are both of stone and of wood, but the roofs are chiefly of iron. Nothing could be more ugly than these roofs at first appear to the traveler, but as the eye becomes accustomed to them they seem to fit in with the landscape. Sometimes, in the sunlight, they appear like burnished silver, and on a moonlit night, looking down on the roofs of an Australian town, you might think that everything was covered with a light fall of snow.

Naturally life in Australia is a little prosaic. It is a country without traditions. There are no historic associations. The centers of art and literature are far removed. Even the news of the world comes to you vaguely—in scraps. But life goes with a swing out there. The Australians look forward, not backward, and particularly they demand of the present its enjoyment. They rejoice in their wonderful climate, they love their beautiful country, and the life of each day seems very good to them. There is something infectious about this spirit. Enter into it and you may be sure of a welcome that will warm your heart. Every house is open to you; every passer-by has ready a word of welcome.

If you ride through an Australian town you will see very little evidence of poverty or misery. The little bungalows stand in their own gardens at the sides of the shaded streets. Now and then you come to a more pretentious house belonging, perhaps, to a wealthy squatter, who has another home in the bush and a property measured by hundreds of square miles. If you hitch your horse to the rail outside the gate and go in you will find your host a simple, unassuming man, living in a quiet way.

He will talk to you about his sheep and the wages he has to pay to his shearers; of his cattle, and and how, at enormous expense, he is moving them about the country to escape the drought. He will tell you thrilling stories of the bush fires that often devastate the country, and he will discuss the entries for the next great race meeting at Melbourne or Sydney. It would probably never occur to him to give a dinner party in that large dining room or a garden party in those well kept grounds. His wife and daughters, no doubt, pay occasional visits to the big cities to enjoy social festivities. If his wife joins you as you sit on the veranda she will talk to you of the servant problem, ever present in the minds of Australian women.

REJECTED; MAN STEALS GIRL

Another Tries To, but Is Foiled by Neighbors Who Hear Her Scream.

Two rejected suitors are being sought by detectives from the Chicago avenue station today.

One of the attempts at kidnaping was successful. The other victim struggled free from her captors only to be injured by a bullet from a revolver.

The missing girl is Mary Joldige, 1117 Larrabee street. She is sixteen years old. The other is Josie Tarano. She is seventeen years old and lives at 822 Townsend street.

The police learned of the Joldige kidnaping when the brother of the girl, Tony, ran into the street with a revolver shouting that a man named Frank Canile had stolen his sister. According to the story told by the brother, three men threatened the girl's life if she did not accompany them.

Miss Tarano was returning to her home when seven men attempted to drag her into a carriage. Her screams attracted neighbors and the men fled.

ORIGINAL CONFIDENCE MAN

Individual of New York Whose Reliance in Humanity Was Not Misplaced.

New York.—A story is told of old New York and of how the expression "confidence man" meant a man in whom one could not place confidence at all. It is said that some time ago a very well dressed man with a courteous address was wont to walk up and down the principal streets of the city.

Whenever he met a stranger who looked hopeful to him he would approach the man and with the most delightfully frank manner he would ask:

"My dear sir, have you confidence enough in me, an entire stranger to you, to lend me $5 for an hour or two?"

And it is said that the man made an extremely good living by this very simple means.

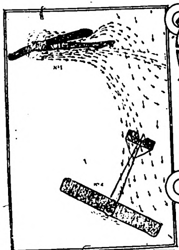
SEEK SAFETY FOR AIR SPEEDERS

HARRIET QUIMBY, AEROPLANE VICTIM

WRECK OF McCURDY'S MACHINE

RALPH JOHNSTONE, KILLED IN AEROPLANE ACCIDENT



DOWNWARD REACTING AIR CURRENTS CAUSED BY NO 1 DRIFTING NO 2

THE ever-growing number of human lives sacrificed to the advancement of aviation gives us ample reason for pause and serious thought. The toll so far paid is rapidly nearing a total of two hundred since the death of Lieutenant Selfridge, of the United States army, in September, 1908. Naturally, some of these fatal accidents were to be expected after flying became a money-making spectacle in some directions. The professional aviator felt obliged to make his flights thrilling in the eyes of the spectator, and to that end he has done things of a venturesome nature for which he has paid dearly more than once.

We are not concerned with this phase of the art. Foolhardiness is no real part of the effort to advance human flight, even though attendant mishaps may teach useful lessons. What is of serious concern is the loss of life of those earnestly devoted to the furtherance of the science and the adaptation of the flying machine to the needs of the army and the navy in time of war. These officer students have gone into the work with that spirit of professional devotion which is of the utmost value to the promotion of helpful knowledge, and they have generally avoided those hair-raising performances which are valuable only as an asset for the showman.

These calm-minded devotees—the term enthusiasts might be misleading—have earnestly striven to make the most out of the instruments placed in their hands, but in doing this they have made more than one fatal stumble despite their caution. The use of the aeroplane in recent military maneuvers has exacted its doleful price, and it is time that due thought was given some of these many accidents. Strange as it may seem, the recent mishaps which have been most suggestively illuminating have been those that were generally not fatal in their consequences, although some have exacted the lives of the participants.

On March 13 at Johannisthal, just outside of Berlin, a flying machine driven by Schade and an aeroplane handled by Rettinger came together while in the air a short distance above the ground. The machines were instantly smashed and sent crashing to the earth. Neither of the aviators was injured, but a passenger was hurt. Unquestionably, this collision was brought about by the mutual effect of the disturbed air between the two machines. The next mishap of a kindred character occurred at Douai, France, on June 19, but with disastrous results. Captain Dubois and Lieutenant Meignan, both of the army, were operating aeroplanes during a dense fog, and drove into each other while going at high speed. Lieutenant Meignan was killed almost instantly, and Captain Dubois died in the hospital a few hours later. The machines were splintered by the collision. Here we have a counterpart of conditions which have so often caused trouble upon the water, but conditions which may be even more frequent aloft under atmospheric circumstances of common occurrence. Of course, the gravity of a collision in the air is unfortunately increased by the necessarily high speed at which the flying machine must advance in order to sustain itself in flight.

On June 20, at Aix-les-Bains, Mlle. Helene Dutrieu, while aloft, fell upon two ascending monoplanes, and all three machines dropped to the ground in a heap. The two nether aviators were pretty seriously bruised, but Mlle. Dutrieu was uninjured, fortunately falling upon the underlying machines and thus having the force of her drop greatly lessened. Undoubtedly, Mlle. Dutrieu hit a "hole in the air," and her monoplane started earthward before she could check or control its descent by a gliding volplane. The question is, What caused that hole in the air? Did the movement of the two ascending aeroplanes create the disturbance which narrowly escaped causing a serious catastrophe? This has been answered by subsequent accidents.

Two French army officers, Lieutenants Briez and Burlez, on July 6 started for Belfort, on the eastern frontier, leaving the aeronautic station at Villa Coublay, just outside of Paris. Lieutenant Briez had the start of his associate, and was already about six hundred feet up, when Lieutenant Burlez overtook him, passing at greater speed something like a hundred feet above. Lieutenant Burlez's machine created, so it is said, a downward moving "hole in the air," and this struck Lieutenant Briez's monoplane in such a manner as to destroy its equilibrium. Lieutenant Briez and his machine were dashed to the earth, the aviator having both legs broken and being otherwise seriously but not fatally injured. In this case the innocent cause of the accident was the movement of the aeroplane passing above at a height of a hundred feet, while Mlle. Dutrieu's drop was probably brought about by the maneuvering of the two monoplanes beneath her. These accidents have brought us face to face with new problems in the art of mechanical flight—they show us that we have much to learn about the air in which we are seeking to vie with the bird.

The man in the street has a mistaken notion of what these air holes really are; he imagines that they are areas of partial vacuum which fail to give the flying machine proper support. The hazard they present is reasonably pictured all the greater because there is no visible sign of their presence—the aircraft just suddenly starts to drop and may fall several hundred feet before the movement can be corrected, if corrected at all. If successful, the nicest judgment is required on the part of the aviator lest he suddenly bring pressure to bear upon his planes in excess of their reserve of strength. Collapse of this sort has happened with dire results upon a number of occasions. But, notwithstanding these physical evidences of something wrong, still, in the stricter sense of the word, the term air hole is a misnomer, and a cavity as such does not really exist.

Did you ever watch the surface agitation of a boiling pot? Well, that is substantially a duplication of just what is going on in the air about us. The earth acts like a great reflector of the sun's heat and starts the air boiling below here where we are and sends it upward in great columns of rising atmosphere like the movement of the boiling water in the pot. This is what the meteorologist calls "convectional disturbances" of the atmosphere, and he tells us that this state of things would not annoy the aviator if the venturesome airman would only keep aloft at a height of from four to five miles—a matter of from 21,000 to 26,000 feet in round numbers! Georges Legagneux has recently reached the amazing height of 18,766 feet.

We are all familiar with the old saying, "What goes up must come down." In the agitated belt of air the upward rising column of warm air is replaced by a descending column of cooler air. The downward moving column is what really constitutes the so-called "holes" of the aeronaut's parlance. The layman scarcely appreciates the conditions that are bringing about this convection or boiling motion. When the sun strikes the earth the air is heated and rises; in the shadow of a cloud the air is cooler and descending. This see-sawing is of greater or lesser magnitude, depending upon the directness of the sun's rays and the temperature of the air when shaded.

The evenness of the aviator's flight or the uniformity of his line of advance—whichever you choose to call it—is controlled by the constancy of the pressure which the air exerts on the under or lifting side of the planes as his machine is driven forward by its motor. The net result is a sustaining or lifting moment, as the engineer expresses it. If the approaching air, instead of moving horizontally or upward in opposition to the surface of the planes, should be falling, then the support of the flying machine is suddenly diminished to that extent, and the aeroplane drops. Again, if the aviator is traveling against a stratum of wind of a definite speed and then purposely descends, reaching an air belt of lower speed or altered direction, these changes may reduce the force of the air striking the surfaces of his planes, and this drop in pressure may cause his machine to fall speedily earthward. This is another proof, of course, of the imaginary vacant places in the air.

We must bear in mind that the problem of the flying machine is quite distinct from that of the balloon. The balloon floats because it is either lighter than the air it displaces—when it rises—or remains at a fixed altitude because there is a perfect balance between its weight and that of the air which it thrusts aside. It remains aloft whether drifting with the wind or being driven by a motor. The heavier-than-air flying machine, on the other hand, is sustained in flight only so long as its movement forward arouses sufficient opposition on the part of the air to lift or to sustain it. When the propellers cease to revolve the aeroplane starts earthward, and disaster can be avoided only by volplaning or performing a sweeping spiral descent. A maneuver of this sort is nothing more nor less than a modified drop. The safety of the aeroplane, therefore, when in midair, depends upon the nice balancing of the machine and the proper equalizing of pressure upon the planes. Eddies in the air or any other disturbance which will bring the aeroplane into conflicting atmospheric belts or zones will imperil the stability of the machine and the life of the aviator unless he be ever watchful, and there are some of these conditions against which he cannot sufficiently guard.

The flying machine, in going ahead, hits the air a succession of rapid blows, and by this causes an area of compression which is equal in the force of its reaction to the weight of the flying machine. The fact of it is, this compression actually affects a volume of air equal in weight to the air craft it sustains, and as a cubic foot of atmospheric air weighs only .08 of a pound at the freezing point, a little figuring will show how wide is the area upon which the aviator must draw for his support.

What happens then when the flying machine has moved onward and the atmosphere tries to resume its normal state? The reaction is like the release of a spring, and the air acquires a vibratory motion—greatest in a vertical direction—akin to the prolonged bobbings of a partly water-soaked log after being hit a blow. But this is not all.

We are living at the bottom of an ocean of air, and we are living in that region of the atmosphere where it is densest. The natural tendency for the atmosphere is to fall when not made lighter by heat and caused to rise. An aeroplane shooting through this lower belt is substantially knocking out the foundations from beneath the atmospheric columns reaching many thousands of feet heavenward, and we have in the air a virtual duplication of our bobbing log many, many times repeated at every stage of the onward movement of the flying machine and the successive reactions of the compressed air which has momentarily sustained that mechanical flight. Isn't it clear, then, that an aviator when passing above or below another aviator is either stumbling into air holes thus created or producing a similar condition to menace his nearby fellow? The airman advancing at the greater speed will produce the wider area of disturbance and, within any prescribed limit, the more dangerous reaction.

The flying machine when aloft is in a state of decidedly delicate equilibrium, otherwise the mere flexing of wing tips would be incapable of correcting its horizontal position. Any change of pressure at the extremity of its wings is equivalent to adding or reducing the weight at the one or the other tip, and an upsetting movement is started. It is quite probable that even though one aeroplane may be a full hundred feet above or below another, still the greater speed of the overtaking machine may cause a sufficient downward movement on the part of the air to overweight suddenly one wing of the other machine. This is certainly what happened in the case of Lieutenant Briez, Mlle. Dutrieu and a number of others.

The task set the investigators is that of finding how wide is the region of agitation created by a flying machine in flight, and, with this knowledge, to prescribe the proper distances which aviators must observe when approaching one another.

Fortunately, the flying machine is now studied in the laboratory, and recent progress in experimental aerodynamics is doing much toward clearing the way for safe advance in the near future, but the public must be patient and it must realize that flying is full of hazards at best, and we are really scarcely much more than upon the threshhold of this wonderful science.

EGYPT TO BE A KINGDOM?

General Belief in That Country That Ancient Glory Is to Be Partially Restored.

There is a general conviction in Egypt that the country is to be declared a kingdom, that the present khedive will be its first king, and that England is only waiting the conclusion of the Turkish-Italian war to make the necessary announcemnt to which France has already given assent. It is said that the project has immeasurably gratified the national pride of Egypt and that nothing could be so well designed to end the disaffection with which the country is now saturated. Evidently Bellamy spoke the words of truth and soberness when he said that titles, decorations, and honors were greater human incentives than money. For such a change would make no practical difference to the state of Egypt. It would be a decoration, nothing more. The English protectorate, that is to say control, would be unchanged. In fact it might even be strengthened, since a part of the story is to the effect that England will pay to Turkey the sum of $100,000,000 for the relinquishment of her suzerainty powers, such as they are. The story may have no foundation, but if it should be true let us hasten to make a suggestion for the further stimulation of the Egyptian national pride. If the title of khedive is to be abolished why not replace it by that of Pharaoh instead of king, and establish the national capital at Memphis or Luxor?

Early Training.

"I understand that you once sang in a glee club."

"Yes," replied the great politician. "And I want to tell you when a man with a voice like mine can hold a position in a glee club it shows that he is some officeholder."

PROMINENT PEOPLE

HEAD OF WOMEN'S FEDERATED CLUBS

Mrs. Pennybacker, a picture of whom is herewith presented, was recently elected president of the Federation of Women's Clubs. It is said to be her idea that women, whose activities are directed to affairs outside their home circles, consist of three classes: First, those who work for their daily bread; second, those who are moved to action by the economic conditions surrounding working women and political abuses which affect the general public and strike particularly hard at women and children; third, those who are interesting themselves in public affairs as a means of broadening their mental horizons and acquiring a more liberal knowledge of the ways of the world.

In the first class there are in the United States six million women. Six million women are working for their bread and shelter. Their activities are, with few exceptions, compulsory. They work because hard practical necessity compels them.

It is almost impossible to estimate the number of women in the second class. They are in every city and village. From the richest woman in the metropolis who is using her wealth to alleviate the hardships of overburdened girls to the poor woman in the small hamlet who insists that the village constable shall keep children out of the one pool room in the place are found these workers for the betterment of conditions.

The third class form the majority of the club women. There are about eight hundred thousand club members in the United States. Approximately one-third of these work for their living or are engaged in unpaid public service. Two-thirds are students of public affairs for educational reasons.

SIR GEORGE ALARMED BY AMERICA'S GAIN

Anglo-American amity means world supremacy or these two nations, according to the opinion expressed by Sir George Reid, high commissioner for Australia at the British capital, in an interview given out the other day. With a rupture of the friendship between the United States and Great Britain—and he sees no indication of unpleasantness—other powers might seek to change the balance of power, the commissioner said.

Sir George and Lady Reid have just finished a tour of the United States that extended over several weeks. Of course, he is duly impressed with the remarkable growth of American industries and American fortunes. But, do you know, Sir George actually thought at one time that the bally American foundation wasn't solid. He says so himself. Listen:

"To one who lives as far from the United States as I do your tremendous strides and development appear so rapid that it is hard to believe they are built on a solid foundation. One feels that the bubble must burst some day. But my visit has convinced me that you have builded solidly, and that impression of which I spoke has been entirely dissipated."

Sir George also gave an interesting original expression of opinion about the little unpleasantness between the American colonies and England in 1776.

"I wish to emphasize," he declared, "that there never was a war between the people of Great Britain and the people of the United States. At the time of the war with the American colonies it was not the people of England who brought about the strife. The people had really no voice in the matter. The king was influenced by bad advisers, and the people really had no say in the matter."

DR. PAGE MADE BISHOP OF NEW MEXICO

Rev. Herman Page, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church, East 50th street and Madison avenue, Chicago, has been chosen bishop of New Mexico by the Episcopal house of bishops.

The announcement of Dr. Page's election came as a surprise to the members of his parish. None of the members had heard of the possibility of such action being taken. Some were inclined to express doubt as to whether Dr. Page would accept the appointment.

Only one other promotion was made by the house of bishops, that being the election of George Biller Jr., formerly of New Jersey, to the bishopric of North Dakota. The house of bishops was in session for two days.

Dr. Page has been rector of St. Paul's church for twelve years. He came to Chicago from St. John's Episcopal church at Fall River, Mass.

The newly appointed bishop was graduated from Harvard with a degree of bachelor of arts in 1888. In 1891 he received the degree of bachelor of divinity from the Episcopal Theological seminary at Cambridge, Mass. In 1906 he was awarded the honorary degree of doctor of divinity by the University of Pittsburgh.

Dr. Page had been rector of St John's church in Fall River for seven years when he was called to Chicago to occupy the pulpit of St. Paul's one of the largest Episcopalian congregations in Chicago.

Dr. Page is forty-three years old, married, and has one son, now a student at Harvard.

JILTS A PRINCE TO WED AN AMERICAN

The engagement of Miss Katherine Britton, who, it is reported, jilted a prince to wed E. H. Harriman's son, Averill, is expected to be announced shortly. Young Harriman will inherit much of the millions left by his father, and Miss Britton, as the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Britton, will come into a large fortune.

Miss Britton spent the summer in Europe and at Narragansett Pier. She won fame in social circles at the national capital last winter by appearing at a dance with a golden snake twined about her corsage. The effect was so lifelike that it startled the guests until the wearer assured them it was made of jewels. As a devotee of aviation, she has also gained some prominence, having made several flights on the speedway with famous aviators.

At the time of Miss Britton's debut, several years ago, she was a member of the exclusive coterie of debutantes known as the "Big Six." Her associates of that year were Miss Laura Merriam, Miss Gladys Hinckley, Miss Eudora Clover, Miss Marguerite Draper and Miss Sophie Johnston.

With Miss Merriam, Miss Britton helped to organize the Monday Afternoon Skating club and the Dancing Fifty at the Playhouse club at Washington. She has also taken part in various society dramatics at the Playhouse and in Mrs. Barney Hemmick's affairs. She was particularly effective in the pantomime given by Mrs. Hemmick last spring. Attired in the colonial costume owned by her great-great-grandmother, she led one division of the minuet at the Southern Relief ball, and won great admiration.

In her mode of dressing Miss Britton has been noted for her originality. She was the first to wear the new Robespierre collar, and she defies convention by wearing a gay black and white cap while driving her automobile. Her engagement has been rumored before.

EASY TO FILL THAT ORDER

Floorwalker Hardly Had to Think to Make Satisfactory Answer to the Inquiry.

"Silk stockings must be very cheap in America. Nowhere in the world do women's slim and supple ankles gleam women's slim and supple ankles gleam in lustrous silk as they do here."

The speaker was Robert Loraine, the English actor. He continued:

"A married man told me the other day that, going into one of your department stores, he said to a floorwalker:

"'I'm looking for something pretty in silk stockings.'

"The floorwalker smiled, and with a gesture embraced the long rows of counters with their charming saleswomen.

"'That remark,' he said, 'describes, I believe, practically every one of our young ladies.'"

A CLERGYMAN'S TESTIMONY.

The Rev. Edmund Heslop of Wigton, Pa., suffered from Dropsy for a year. His limbs and feet were swollen and puffed. He had heart fluttering, was dizzy and exhausted at the least exertion. Hands and feet were cold and he had such a dragging sensation across the loins that it was difficult to move. After using 5 boxes of Dodds Kidney Pills the swelling disappeared and he felt himself again. He says he has been benefited and blessed by the use of Dodds Kidney Pills. Several months later he wrote: I have not changed my faith in your remedy since the above statement was authorized. Correspond with Rev. E. Heslop about this wonderful remedy.

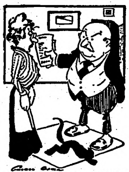
HIS FATE.



Husband (holding up a lot of bills)—Here's the devil to pay.

Too Much of a Good Thing.

"I was very happy," said the professor, "when, after years of wooing, she finally said 'Yes.'"

"But why did you break the engagement so soon after?" asked his friend.

"Man, it was she that dissolved it."

"Really?" said the friend. "How did that happen?"

"It was due to my accursed absent-mindedness. When, a few days later, I called at her home, I again asked her to marry me."—Youth's Companion.

Clever Idea of Collector.

Here is a rare specimen of business humor received the other day by a London firm. It ran:

"Our cashier fell unconscious at his desk this morning. Up to this time, 4 p. m., we have been unable to get a word out of him except your names. May we say to him, with a view to his immediate recovery, that we have your check, as we think that is what he has on his mind?"

"PROUD AND GLAD"

Because Mother Looked So Well After Quitting Coffee.

An Ohio woman was almost distracted with coffee dyspepsia and heart trouble.

Like thousands of others, the drug—caffeine—in coffee was slowly but steadily undermining her nervous system and interfering with natural digestion of food. (Tea is just as injurious as coffee because it contains caffeine, the poisonous drug found in coffee.)

"For 20 years," she writes, "I have used coffee. Have always been sickly—had heart trouble and dyspepsia, with ulcers in stomach and mouth so bad, sometimes, I was almost distracted and could hardly eat a thing for a week.

"I could not sleep for nervousness, and when I would lie down at night I'd [illegible] coffee and my heart would trouble me. It was like poison to me. I was thin—only weighed 125 lbs., when I quit coffee and began to use Postum.

"From the first day that belching and burning in my stomach stopped, I could sleep as soundly as anyone and, after the first month, whenever I met any friends they would ask me what I was doing to be so fleshy and looking so well.

"Sometimes, before I could answer quick enough, one of the children or my husband would say, 'Why, that is what Postum is doing for her'—they were all so proud and glad.

"When I recommend it to anyone I always tell them to follow directions in making Postum, as it is not good to taste if weak, but fine when it has the flavor and rich brown color." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE DULUTH HERALD

BEATS THE CENSUS THREE TO ONE

During the past ten years the population of Duluth increased 48 per cent., St. Paul 32 per cent., and Minneapolis 49 per cent. In the Same Period the Circulation of The Duluth Herald

INCREASED 150 PER CENT.

This marvelous expansion—so much greater than that of the surrounding territory—is due solely to the merits of The Herald.

The Herald has never used any kind of premium, contest, or price reduction to gain subscribers but prints each day the very best NEWSPAPER in the Northwest. Its editorial page is thoroughly independent and its news columns cover every feature of the world's daily history.

Saturday, November 9, 1912.

The possibility that Woodrow Wilson could carry Minnesota is a striking bit of history to those of us who have voted the republican ticket in Minnesota since there was a Minnesota and a republican ticket.

Governor Eberhart can thank St. Paul and Minneapolis for saving the day for him. Ramsey county gave him 14,200 to 10,578 for Ringdal and 3,969 for Collins. Minneapolis gave Eberhart 17,414, and Collins 4,469.

Of Mr. Taft, whose first term is now made his last, public thought thought will be kindly. He has not understood—that's all. Not even at the end of his term, when he faced a bitter fight for renomination and re-election, did he understand what was in the minds of the people. He has relied too much on outside counsel. He has thought too little for himself. And when he has thought his thought has been fruitless because he did not under-understand. Giving him full credit for good intent, the people who have been compelled to rebuke him by retirement will wish him well all his days.—Duluth Herald.

The great organization known as the republican party, first brought into existence in 1854 and scoring its first victory in 1860 in the election of Lincoln, is dead, died of ptomaine poison and official gangrene. President Taft is the chief mourner and will go down to the earth with thousands of followers who have fed at the public crib for the last half century. The procession will be a long one and one long to be remembered as the last gathering of official plunderers whose end has sadly come. "A Dios," Taft and his followers, many of whom are good fellows but must go with the herd. It is but little more than half a century since another great party gave up its existence at the demand of the people and so always will be the penalty for bad government. The atonement is sure, and good government will again prevail, at least until the new managers have learned all the tricks of the rejected and faithless public servants.—Cass Lake Times.

For the Neglected Majority

For years The Herald has been calling attention to the fact that a majority of the country's boys and girls are compelled to leave school before they begin the seventh grade; that almost none of these unfortunate children carry with them into the world, where they must ultimately begin the struggle for existence, any practical equipment for it, and that the fault is with a public school system organized to prepare collage matriculants—a system which sacrifices the ninety-and-nine for the benefit of the one who can hope to get the benefit of his public school course by completing a college course after the public school is through with him.

It is good to note, therefore, the beginnings of public effort for the benefit of this disinherited and neglected majority.

Wisconsin has made a begining toward vocational training, toward practical education that will give those who leave school early at least the rudiments of something that will help them in the battle of life.

And now Illinois is considering a move that is more advanced still. A bill has been agreed upon by the educational committees of the Commercial club of Chicago, the Chicago Association of Commerce and the Hamilton club to be presented to the legislature of that state this winter, which will, if it is enacted into law, go far to meet the real educational need of that state.

The plan is to authorize urban and rural schools to establish vocational training schools for children who have left school at an early age. They will be able to take this vocational training while working at least part time.

This is a step, but it is only a step. The process will not be complete until the regular public school courses not only prepare pupils for college and the professions, but prepare them as well for the shop, the field, and the factory. Up to a certain point the courses would be identical, probably; but when the child reached an age where choice of future occupation was possible, he would be directed into a course that would fit him for the chosen field. Moreover, the schools must learn to pass upon the special fitness of children. It is absurd to lug along through high school and college a lad who is specially fitted for some skilled craft; it would be absurd to crowd through a mechanical course a boy who is plainly intended for scholarly or artistic pursuits.

It is wrong to put children forth from the public schools with their real education yet to be gained, and often at bitter cost. It is wrong to squeeze all children through the same mold, crushing out the special faculties that might, if developed, prove of great benefit to the individual and to the world.

The Illinois measure leaves existing school systems intact. Separate management for the vocational school system is provided. There are to be vocational school boards consisting of the local superintendent of schools and equal representation from each of three classes—skilled workingmen or commercial or agricultural employes, employers of labor, and persons experienced in educational work. The vocational schools are to be supported by a separate tax. The communities are to bear half the expense and the state is to stand the other half.

This is an interesting experiment, and it would be encouraging to see a similar move made in Minnesota at the coming session of the legislature.—Duluth Herald.

The Election

The village election gave the following vote:

For president—Wilson 23, Taft 22, Debs 22, Roosevelt 14.

For governor—Eberhart 23, Ringdal 20, Morgan 21, Lobeck 6, Collins 3.

For Congressman—Steenerson 43, Brattland 34.

For Representative — O'Neil 40, Pladsen 26, Ritchie 6, Liden 3.

For Auditor—Fasel 51, Becken 28.

For treasurer—Trovaton 49, Nelson 30.

For register of deeds—Anderson 48, Nels K. Nelson 32.

For Sheriff—LaBree 52, Long 28.

For judge of probate—Michelet 35, Richardson 33.

For county attorney—Naplin 33, Stenton 31, Bishop 19.

For county Surveyor—Martz 61, Quist 22.

For clerk of court—Ives 26, Christianson 36, Ohm 11.

For Superintendent of schools—Netteland 74, including 16 women's votes; Mostue 23.

For coroner—Halvorson 45, Vistaunet 31.

For commissioner—Kittelson 41, Ed Aubol 39.

The county election was closely contested, the socialists coming altogether too near to winning out to make things at all comfortable for the candidates; but the entire republican ticket was elected with the exception of J. M. Bishop for county attorney.

A. H. Fasel for county auditor, N. J. Anderson for register of deeds, Wm. Michelet for judge of probate, and Andrew Trovaten for treasurer, had practically no opposition.

For sheriff, W. J. LaBree had over 1000 majority, polling the largest republican vote of any candidate.

Clerk of Court Ives, County Surveyor Martz and Superintendent Mostue won out by about 150 votes.

E. M. Stanton for county attorney was the only democrat elected.

For county commissioner Ed A. Aubol and Eric Kittleson had a close fight, but Aubol won out with about 50 votes to spare, his large vote in North saving the day for him.

For president or the United States Pennington county voters preferred Roosevelt, and for governor of Minnesota Eberhart.

We have not the complete returns at hand, being short two precincts, but next week we hope to be able to give our readers a complete and correct tabulation of the vote of the county.

Sometimes the man who did the most boasting before election is the hardest to find after election.

Artificial Frauds

To please the eye is better than to please any other sense. For many years the grocers have taken tightly packed boxes of strawberries when received from pickers, emptied them out, repacked them loosely, placing the largest berries on top, and making five boxes out of four, get more money for them than they could for the tightly packed boxes. Not content with that, they are now coloring berries with coal tar dye to make them a brilliant red. Several convictions have been had recently on that score. After all, the only people immune from arrest for impurities are makers of beer such as the golden grain belt beer. Alex Thompson, agent, Crookston. adv

DECRIES THE PERPETUAL GRIN.

Writer Takes Issue with Man Who Says "Keep a-Smiling."

A favorite motto with many people in these latter days, when the wholesome gospel of cheerfulness is being preached so extensively, is, "Keep a-smiling." It is a very good motto within limitations. In so far as its adoption as a rule of conduct prevents the wearing of a lugubrious countenance when no overwhelming grief or calamity is being endured or is impending, in so far as it overcomes the tendency to look on the dark side and anticipate evil, in so far as it enables one to look for the best in all situations and to keep up his courage when troubles threaten—in all these respects it is a maxim worthy of commendation.

But it should not be interpreted too liberally; its spirit rather than its letter should be observed. Its spirit means a persistent hopefulness, a refusal to be cast down by discouraging or unfavorable circumstances, a sturdy defiance of adverse fate. Its literal observance may include these things, but it means also a perpetual grin, and a perpetual grin leads to thoughts of crime on the part of beholders. No one becomes so irritating or has such a maddening effect upon sensitive associates as the man or woman who wears the "smile that never comes off."—Indianapolis Star.

RABBITS ARE HARD FIGHTERS.

The Charge of Cowardice a Slander—Defeat of a Ferret.

Tell a man that he hasn't the pluck of a rabbit and if he doesn't disprove it by hitting you he is certain at any rate to be extremely annoyed.

Yet the taunt is a libel on the rabbit. A doe rabbit will fight like fury in defense of her young. She will charge like a battering ram and use those long sharp incissors of hers to capital purpose.

An old buck rabbit is not to be lightly tackled by weasel, stoat or even ferret. On the sanded floor of a small public house near Chestnut a ferret of long experience was matched with an old lop-eared buck, the property of the landlord.

The ferret made straight for the rabbit's throat, but the latter was in the air before master ferret could reach him, and leaping clean over the ferret's head let out with those powerful hind legs of his a kick which hurled the ferret bodily against the wainscot. Twice the ferret returned to the attack and twice he missed his grip and went hurtling through the air.

The third repulse was enough for him. He knew he was beaten and could not be persuaded to stand up for a fourth round. — Pearson's Weekly.

For Your Health.

Conquer your moods; don't let your moods conquer you. People who give way to moods never amount to much, because they are never masters of themselves. They never know in the morning whether they are going to do a good day's work or not, whether they are going to be a cheering or a depressing influence on the people around them. If they feel like being good-tempered, they will be; if they feel like "snapping" at everybody, they will snap.

People who suffer from "moods" should be careful about their habits. They should be regular about meals sleep, exercise and work. The condition of the health has much to do with moods, and there is nothing that contributes so much to health as absolute regularity.

TOOK THEIR MATES ON TRIAL.

One-Year Marriages Once a Common Thing in Scotland.

They who talk glibly of short-term marriages and affinities do not know that in Scotland a one-year marriage, termed a handfasting, was once legal and fairly common. It was abandoned on account of its injustice to the woman.

Scott, in "The Monastery," mentions this one-year marriage, making Sir Julian Avenal say:

"We take our wives, like our horses, upon trial. When we are handfasted, as we term it, we are man and wife for a year and a day; that space gone by, each may choose another mate, or at their pleasure, may call the priest to marry them for life."

There was no disgrace attached to handfasting. It was, indeed, more often practiced among the great than the lowly. But the poor girl whose trial husband rejected her at the year's end rarely found it possible to secure a permanent mate.

Preferred the Insomnia.

A story is told of the late bishop of London, Dr. Creighton, and Lord Rosebery. Lord Rosebery complained to the bishop of want of sleep, to which the bishop replied that he never suffered from insomnia. The earl observed that he wished he knew the remedy. The bishop's formula was very simple. If he felt drowsy he started to write a sermon and in a few moments he was wide awake. On the other hand if he wanted to sleep all he had to do was to start to read a sermon. Then sleep came in a few seconds. Lord Rosebery replied that it was his practice to choose the lesser evil, and he preferred want of sleep to reading sermons.

Spring Pastimes.

When I peruse the seedman's book,
That handy guide,
And at the tempting pictures look,
Then I decide
To purchase hoe and spade and rake
And gleefully a garden make.

But when the poultry book I read,
See Wyandottes
And Plymouth Rocks of stately breed
In handsome lots,
I feel I really cannot sleep
Till I begin to chickens keep.
—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Shore Lots.

Citteman—Oh, these are the shore lots you advertised? Well, there doesn't seem to be much to them.

Boomley—Say, you want to come up and have a look at them when the tide's out!—New York Life.

The Hen's Joke.

Said the barnyard goose, "Mrs. Hen, please tell
Why you laid an egg in the old dry well."
Said the wise old hen, "If you really must know,
I thought it time for me to 'lay low.'"
—Detroit Free Press.

The Measure of a Woman's Wit.

There are three ways by which a woman's brain
Can well be measured. One is by the fit
Of boot or shoe. A size that gives her pain
Proves her deficient in the thing called wit.

A waist so girded that its span appears
A wasplike structure shows her stupid quite,
But when her head must put on sundry tiers
To wear her hat—all sense has taken flight.
—L. S. Waterhouse in New York Life.

The Real Advantage.

John Bright used to tell how a barber who was cutting his hair once said to him: "You 'ave a large 'ead, sir. It is a good thing to 'ave a large 'ead, for a large 'ead means a large brain, and a large brain is the most useful thing a man can 'ave, as it nourishes the roots of the 'air."—Sacred Heart Review.

The Harder Part.

"It is hard to teach an old dog new tricks," quoted the wise guy.

"Yes, it's hard to find the new tricks," added the simple mug.—Philadelphia Record.

Lingering Superstitions.

"Will a lucky gentlewoman give an unlucky one a tiny mascot to bring luck?" runs an advertisement in an English paper. Here was a poor soul—for if there is a creature on the face of the earth whose fate calls for pity it is a gentlewoman who is down—keeping in her poverty some of that superstition or faith, whatever it may be called, which is the only thing that keeps misfortune from crushing the sufferer. If only she could get the right charm she might induce fate to look kindly on her! People call this a practical age, but evidences of superstition continue to appear. A lawsuit not long ago revealed the fact that an astrologer kept a motorcar and had a fine house, etc., all of which came out of the proceeds of a zodiacal magazine.

As Exemplified.

Having given his order twenty minutes before and seeing no indications that his dinner was ready, the man with the sparse whiskers beckoned to a waiter.

"My friend," he said, "perhaps I have made a mistake. Is this a pay as you enter restaurant?"

"No, sir," responded the young man in the white apron, yawning. "This is a dinner cooked while you wait restaurant."

Thereupon he resumed his dreamy, contemplative attitude, and the man with the sparse whiskers waited some more.—Chicago Tribune.

A Reply to Gladstone.

"Gladstone had no great scientific knowledge," said an English writer, "and at a dinner, when Faraday described an important new scientific discovery, the premier showed indifference.

"'After all,' he said, hiding a yawn behind his hand, 'what use will it ever be?'

"'Why,' said Faraday, 'there's every probability, sir, that some day you'll be able to tax it.'"

A Turn Down.

Swaggsy—Beg pardon, mister; I'm a stranger in dese parts. Farmer Harrow—Well, I dunno of anybody that wants to git acquainted with ye.—Boston Transcript.

A Queer Question.

Small Harold (at the zoo)—What is that funny looking bird, papa? Papa—That is a bald eagle, Harold. Small Harold—How long does an eagle have to be married before he gets bald, papa?—Chicago News.

Usually Has To.

"Say, paw, what is a genius?"

"A genius is a man who can do his own washing, sewing and cooking, my boy."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Weak men never yield at the proper time.—Latin.

Then She Got Furious.

She—Here we've been married just one month, and now you no longer love me. He—But, my dear— She—Don't try to explain. I'm not blind. You made a mistake. You ought to have married some silly, stupid woman. He—But, dearest, I've done my best.

Very Decollete.

"Poor chap! Everything he earns goes on his wife's back."

"Well, if you'd seen her at the opera you wouldn't think he earned much."—Bohemian.

All That's Necessary.

"Do Mr. and Mrs. Henpeck live happily?"

"Mrs. Henpeck does."—Houston Post.

All Cameras Point to Africa.

no it. Sure enough, before I expected it he gave a lurch and landed plumb on top of his sister.

Neither of them awoke.

I reckon women know in their sleep what's going on with their children, for, now that the storm was over and everything was still as the tomb, the mother sat up in bed, glanced at her children, got up and put them in their proper places. Then she went back to bed herself and was asleep in a moment.

"Well," I said to myself, "if that's what a clear conscience will furnish I'm going to have a clear conscience." I went back to my room resolved never to enter any man's house again but my own, at least not for plunder. I went to bed and slept like a top for twenty-four hours.

I kept my resolution, found honorable employment and prospered. But I didn't forget the family that converted me. The mother was a widow, and, having a hard time to get on, I made her acquaintance and married her.

But none of my family know that I had been a burglar or how I came to know them.

Too Fast.

"The first day he went out with his new auto he got pulled."

"For going fast?"

"No; quite the opposite."

"I don't see"—

"For stopping fast. He had to hire a farmer to haul him home."—Boston Post.

Coldly Described.

"So you don't envy any of the world's men of genius?"

"No," answered Mr. Cumrox. "I admire them, but I don't envy 'em. A genius is a man who gets a monument after he's dead instead of three square meals a day while he's living."—Washington Star.

DAKOTA BUSINESS COLLEGE

Every person needs a business training. It costs no more at this great Business, Banking and Shorthand college, under exact office conditions, than at a small, questionable one. The results are, however, very different. 250 D. B. C. pupils went to excellent positions in banks and offices this year—had calls for over 500. All Fargo banks and 685 others employ D. B. C. pupils as cashiers, tellers, bookkeepers or stenographers. No other school offers such endorsement.

Our $60 course prepares for business or for position as clerk or bookkeeper. Our new $85 course in Commerce and Banking (endorsed by Bankers' Association), supplies cashiers and tellers for the Northwestern banks, and bookkeepers and credit men for the larger concerns. The shorthand course (under two expert reporters), trains court reporters and high grade stenographers. The stenographers for the U. S. District Court, N. D. Supreme Court, Third Judicial District and the Cass Co. Court are D. B. C. graduates. Do other schools offer this PROOF of superior training?

The D. B. C. has built a magnificent new building (350,000 cubic feet of space), is seated with roll top desks, has 100 typewriters, adding machines, billers, money changers, etc. Our pupils deal with each other and with elegantly equipped offices, using aluminum money. Our courses are fascinating and practical—pupils like them. The Northwest has "No other school like the D. B. C." Next term begins soon. For booklet, write

The seventy-eighth year of its existence finds the Toledo Blade more popular than at any period during its long and successful career. It is read each week by more than a million people. The Blade's field is national and it goes into every state and territory in the United States, thereby giving it an unquestionable right of claiming to be the greatest weekly newspaper published in America.

The Weekly Blade is distinctly a family newspaper. The one object of its publishers has always been to make it fit for the American home, for the fireside, and of interest to every member of the family. To fulfill this purpose it is kept clean and wholesome. The news of the world is handled in a comprehensive manner, and the various departments of The Blade are edited with painstaking care. The Household page is a delight to the women and children; current affairs are treated editorially without prejudice; the serial stories are selected with the idea of pleasing the greatest number of fiction lovers; the Question Bureau is a scrap book of information; the Farmstead columns are conducted with the purpose of giving the patrons a medium for the exchange of ideas and information on farm topics. No department is neglected, but every feature is taken care of with the idea of making The Blade worth many times the price of subscription—one dollar a year.

The village council has employed an attorney to obtain an injunction restraining the county auditor from placing any further amounts on the lists for the village for a long standing ditch assessment. At the time the River Falls ditch, now No. 16, was established, the village was assessed $570.00 for its construction, which assessment the village authorities have always held to have been illegal and have consistenty refused to pay. Last year County Auditor Fasel placed $140.00 on the tax list against the village, and the board has determined to take the matter into the courts and have the question of the legality of the imposition settled for once and for all.

LOMBARD PIANOS ARE THE BEST IN THE WORLD !!

Mrs. Helen M. Slaker, 244 Grand Ave., Aurora, Ill., says: "I cannot find words in the English language to express my appreciation to you for having sold me such a beautiful instrument. I really think it is the most beautiful case I ever saw, and the tone is simply grand. I shall be glad to give you any testimonial, as I think the Lombard should take the lead."

Rev. Geo. Doubleday, Pres. Corpus Christi College, Galesburg, Ill., says: "We are using the Lombard in our College work at Corpus Christi, and it is a pleasure to recommend it. It is a beautiful instrument with a deep, sweet, rich tone."

J. W. Purviance, Editor McNairy County Independent, Selmer, Tenn., says: "The instrument (Lombard Piano) fills our most sanguine expectations. It is not only a rare beauty in its outward finish, but the tone is round, full, rich and sweet. Your firm has proven to be prompt and reliable in its dealings with me."

J. Ernest Paxson, Editor Press, Parkersburg, Pa., says: "I must say that the Lombard sent me is a beautiful instrument, and a credit to a standard firm. We are more than satisfied."

R. S. Knapp, President Federal Charter Co., Washington, D. C., says: "We now realize after a careful and comprehensive trial of the Lombard by many musical artists of Washington, that it stands second to none, regardless of price or make. Every one who has tried this instrument is enthusiastic in its praise."

These are samples of hundreds of enthusiastic letters received in every mail.

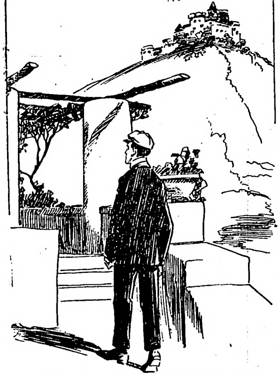
CHAPTER I.

What's in a Name?

To possess two distinctly alien red corpuscles in one's blood, metaphorically if not in fact, two characters or individualities under one epidermis, is, in most cases, a peculiar disadvantage. One hears of scoundrels and saints striving to consume one another in one body, angels and harpies; but ofttimes, quite the contrary to being a curse, these two warring temperaments become a man's ultimate blessing, as in the case of George P. A. Jones, of Mortimer & Jones, the great metropolitan Oriental rug and carpet company, all of which has a dignified, sonorous sound. George was divided within himself. This he would not have confessed even into the trusted if battered ear of the Egyptian Sphynx. There was, however, no demon-angel sparring for points in George's soul. The difficulty might be set forth in this manner: On one side stood inherent common sense, on the other, a boundless, roseate imagination which was likewise inherent—a kind of quixote imagination of suitable modern pattern. This alter ego terrified him whenever it raised its strangely beautiful head and shouldered aside his guardian-angel (for that's what common sense is, argue to what end you will) and pleaded in that luminous rhetoric under the spell of which our old friend Sancho often fell asleep.

P. A., as they called him behind the counters, was but twenty-eight, and if he was vice-president in his late father's shoes he didn't wabble round in them to any great extent. In a crowd he was not noticeable; he didn't stand head and shoulders above his fellow-men, nor would he have been mistaken by near-sighted persons, the myopes, for the Vatican's Apollo in the flesh. He was of medium height, beardless, slender, but tough and wiry and enduring. You may see his prototype on the streets a dozen times a day, and you may also pass him without turning round for a second view. Young men like P. A. must be intimately known to be admired; you did not throw your arm across his neck, first-off. His hair was brown and closely clipped about a head that would have gained the attention of the phrenologist, if not that of the casual passer-by. His bumps, in the phrascology of that science, were good ones. For the rest, he observed the world through a pair of kindly, shy, blue eyes.



He Haunted the Romantic Quarters of the Globe; He Was Romantic.

Young girls, myopic through ignorance or silliness, seeing nothing beyond what the eyes see, seldom gave him a second inspection; for he did not know how to make himself attractive, and was mortally afraid of the opposite, or opposing sex. He could bullyrag a sheik out of his camels' saddle-bags, but petticoats and lace parasols and small Oxfords had the same effect upon him that the prodding stick of a small boy has upon a retiring turtle. But many a worldly-wise woman, drawing out with tact and kindness the truly beautiful thoughts of this young man's soul, sadly demanded of fate why a sweet, clean boy like this one had not been sent to her in her youth. You see, the worldly-wise woman knows that it is invariably the lay-figure and not Prince Charming that a woman marries; and that matrimony is blind-man's-buff in grown-ups.

Many of us lay the blame upon our parents. We shift the burden of wondering why we have this fault and lack that grace to the shoulders of our immediate forbears. We go to the office each morning denying that we have any responsibility; we let the boss do the worrying. But George never went prospecting in his soul for any such dross philosophy. He was grateful for having had so beautiful a mother; proud of having had so honest a sire; and if either of them had endued him with false weights he did his best to even up the balance.

The mother had been as romantic as any heroine out of Mrs. Radcliff's novels, while the father had owned to as much romance as one generally finds in a thorough business man, which is practically none at all. The very name itself is a bulwark against the intrusions of romance. One can not lift the imagination to the prospect of picturing a Jones in ruffles and highboots, pinking a varlet in the midriff. It smells of sugar-barrels and cotton-bales, of steamships and railroads, of stolid routine in the office and of placid concern over the daily news under the evening lamp.

Mrs. Jones, lovely, lettered yet not worldly, had dreamed of her boy, bayed and decorated, marrying the most distinguished woman in all Europe, whoever she might be. Mr. Jones had had no dreams at all, and had put the boy to work in the shipping department a little while after the college threshold had been crossed, outward bound. The mother, while sweet and gentle, had a will, iron under velvet, and when she held out for Percival Algernon and a decent knowledge of modern languages, the old man agreed if, on the other hand, the boy's first name should be George and that he should learn the business from the cellar up. There were several tilts over the matter, but at length a truce was declared. It was agreed that the boy himself ought to have a word to say upon a subject which concerned him more vitally than any one else. So, at the age of fifteen, when he was starting off for preparatory school, he was advised to choose for himself. He was an obedient son, adoring his mother and idolizing his father. He wrote himself down as George Percival Algernon Jones, promised to become a linguist and to learn the rug business from the cellar up. On the face of it, it looked like a big job; it all depended upon the boy!

The first day at school his misery began. He had signed himself as George P. A. Jones, no small diplomacy for a lad; but the two initials, standing up like dismantled pines in the midst of uninteresting landscape, roused the curiosity of his schoolmates. Boys are boys the world over, and possess a finesse in cruelty that only Indians can match; and it did not take them long to unearth the fatal secret. For three years he was Percy Algy, and not only the boys laughed, but the pretty girls sniggered. Many a time he had returned to his dormitory decorated (not in accord with the fond hopes of his mother) with a swollen ear, or a ruddy proboscis, or a green-brown eye. There was a limit, and when they stepped over that, why, he proceeded to the best of his ability to solve the difficulty with his fists. George was no milksop; but Percival Algernon would have been the Old Man of the Sea on broader shoulders than his. He dimly realized that had he been named George Henry William Jones his sun would have been many diameters larger. There was a splendid quality of pluck under his apparent timidity, and he stuck doggedly to it. He never wrote home and complained. What was good enough for his mother was good enough for him.

It seemed just an ordinary matter of routine for him to pick up French and German verbs. He was far from being brilliant, but he was sensitive and his memory was sound. Since his mother's ambition was to see him an accomplished linguist, he applied himself to the task as if everything in the world depended upon it, just as he knew that when the time came he would apply himself as thoroughly to the question of rugs and carpets.

Under all this filial loyalty ran the pure strain of golden romance, side by side with the lesser metal of practicality. When he began to read the masters he preferred their romances to their novels. He even wrote poetry in secret, and when his mother discovered the fact she cried over the sentimental verses. The father had to be told. He laughed and declared that the boy would some day develop into a good writer of advertisements. This quiet laughter, unburdened as it was with ridicule, was enough to set George's muse a-winging, and she never came back.

After leaving college he was given a modest letter of credit and told to go where he pleased for a whole year. George started out at once in quest of the Holy Grail, and there are more roads to that than there are to Rome. One may be reasonably sure of getting into Rome, whereas the Holy Grail (diversified, variable, innumerable) is always the exact sum of a bunch of hay hanging before old Dobbin's nose. Nevertheless, George galloped his fancies with loose rein. He haunted romance, burrowed and plowed for it; and never his spade clanged musically against the hidden treasure, never a forlorn beauty in distress, not so much as chapter one of the Golden Book offered its dazzling first page. George lost some confidence.

Two or three times a woman looked into the young man's mind, and in his guilelessness they effected sundry holes in his letter of credit, but left his soul singularly untouched. The red corpuscle, his father's gift, though it lay dormant, subconsciously erected barriers. He was innocent, but he was no fool. That one year taught him the lesson, rather cheaply, too. If there was any romance in life, it came uninvited, and if courted and sought was as quick on the wing as that erstwhile poesy must.

The year passed, and while he had not wholly given up the quest, the practical George agreed with the romantic Percival to shelve it indefinitely. He returned to New York with thirty-two pounds sterling out of the original thousand, a fact that rejuvenated his paternal parent by some ten years.

"Jane, that boy is all right. Percival Algernon could not kill a boy like that."

"Do you mean to infer that it ever could?" Sometimes a qualm wrinkled her conscience. Her mother's heart told her that her son ought not to be shy and bashful, that it was not in the nature of his blood to suspect ridicule where there was none. Perhaps she had handicapped him with those names; but it was too late now to admit of this, and useless, since it would not have remedied the evil.

Jones hemmed and hawed for a space. "No," he answered; "but I was afraid he might try to live up to it; and no Percival Algernon who lived up to it could put his nose down to a Shah Abbas and tell how many knots it had to the square inch. I'll start him in on the job tomorrow."

Whereupon the mother sat back dreamily. Now, where was the girl worthy of her boy? Monumental question, besetting every mother, from Eve down, Eve, whose trials in this direction must have been heartrending!

George left the cellar in due time, and after that he went up the ladder in bounds, on his own merit, mind you, for his father never stirred a hand to boost him. He took the interest in rugs that turns a buyer into a collector; it became a fascinating pleasure rather than a business. He became invaluable to the house, and acquired some fame as a judge and an appraiser. When the chief-buyer retired George was given the position, with an itinerary that carried him half way round the planet once a year, to Greece, Turkey, Persia, Arabia, and India, the lands of the genii and the bottles, of arabesques, of temples and tombs, of many-colored turbans and flowing robes and distracting tongues. He walked and always in a kind of mental enchantment.

The suave and elusive Oriental, with his sharp practices, found his match in this pleasant young man, who knew the history of the very wools and cottons and silks woven in a rug or carpet. So George prospered, became known in strange places, by strange peoples; and saw romance, light of foot and eager of eye, pass and repass; learned that romance did not essentially mean falling in love or rescuing maidens from burning houses and wrecks; that, on the contrary, true romance was kaleidoscopic, having more brilliant facets than a diamond; and that the man who begins with nothing and ends with something is more wonderful than any excursion recounted by Sinbad or any tale by Scheherazade. But he still hoped that the iridescent goddess would some day touch his shoulder and lead him into that maze of romance so peculiar to his own fancy.

And then into this little world of business and pleasure came death and death again, leaving him alone and with a twisted heart. Riches mattered little, and the sounding title of vice-president still less. It was with a distinct shock that he realized the mother and the father had been with him so long that he had forgotten to make other friends. From one thing to another he turned in hope to soothe the smart, to heal the wound; and after a time he drifted, as all shy, intelligent and imaginative men drift who are friendless, into the silent and intimate comradeship of inanimate things, such as jewels, ivories, old metals, rare woods and ancient embroideries, and perhaps more comforting than all these, good books.

The proper tale of how the aforesaid iridescent goddess jostled (for it scarce may be said that she led) him into a romance lacking neither comedy nor tragedy, now begins with a trifling bit of retrospection. One of those women who were not good and who looked into the clear pool of the boy's mind saw the harmless longing there, and made note, hoping to find profit by her knowledge when the pertinent day arrived. She was a woman so pleasing, so handsome, so adroit, that many a man, older and wiser than George, found her mesh too strong for him. Her plan matured, suddenly and brilliantly, as projects of men and women of her class and caliber without variation do.

Late one December afternoon (to be precise, 1909), George sat on the tea-veranda of the Hotel Semiramis in Cairo. A book lay idly upon his knees. It was one of those yarns in which something was happening every other minute. As adventures go, George had never had a real one in all his twenty-eight years, and he believed that fate had treated him rather shabbily. He didn't quite appreciate her reserve. No matter how late he wandered through the mysterious bazaars, either here in Egypt or over yonder in India, nothing ever befell more exciting than an argument with a carriage-driver. He never carried small-arms, for he would not have known how to use them. The only deadly things in his hands were bass-rods and tennis-racquets. No, nothing ever happened to him; yet he never met a man in a ship's smoke-room who hadn't run the gamut of thrilling experiences. As George wasn't a liar himself, he believed all he saw and most of what he heard.

Well, here he was, eight-and-twenty, a pocket full of money, a heart full of life, and as hopeless an outlook, so far as romance and adventure were concerned, as an old maid in a New England village.

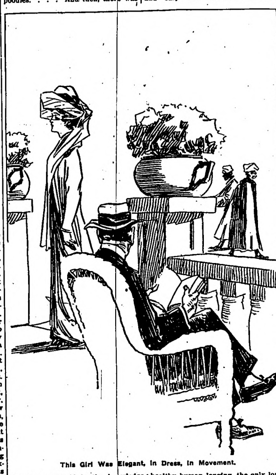
"George, you old fool, what's the use?" he thought. "What's the use of a desire that never goes in a straight line, but always round and round in a circle?"

He thrust aside his grievance and surrendered to the never-ending wonder of the Egyptian sunset; the Nile feluccas, riding upon perfect reflections; the date-palms, black and motionless against the translucent blue of the sky; the amethystine prisms of the Pyramids, and the deepening gold of the desert's brim. He loved the Orient, always so new, always so strange, yet ever so old and familiar.

A carriage stopped in front, and his gaze naturally shifted. There is ceaseless attraction in speculating about new-comers in a hotel, what they are, what they do, where they come from, and where they are going. A fine elderly man of fifty got out. In the square set of his shoulders, the flowing white mustache and imperial, there was a suggestion of militarism. He was immediately followed by a young woman of twenty, certainly not over that age. George sighed wistfully. He envied those polo-players and gentleman-riders and bridge-experts who were stopping at the hotel. It wouldn't be an hour after dinner before some one of them found out who she was and spoke to her in that easy style which he concluded must be a gift rather than an accomplishment. You mustn't suppose for a minute that George wasn't well-born and well-bred, simply because his name was Jones. Many a Fitz-Hugh Maurice or Hugh Fitz-Maurice might have been— But, no matter. He knew instinctively, then, what elegance was when he saw it, and this girl was elegant, in dress, in movement. He rather liked the pallor of her skin, which hinted that she wasn't one of those athletic girls who bounced in and out of the dining-room, talking loudly and smoking cigarettes and playing bridge for sixpenny points. She was tall. He was sure that her eyes were on the level with his own. The grey veil that drooped from the rim of her simple Leghorn hat to the tip of her nose obscured her eyes, so he could not know that they were large and brown and indefinably sad. They spoke not of a weariness of travel, but of a weariness of the world, more precisely, of the people who inhabited it.

She and her companion passed on into the hotel, and if George's eyes veered again toward the desert over which the stealthy purples of night were creeping, the impulse was mechanical; he saw nothing. In truth, he was desperately lonesome, and he knew, moreover, that he had no business to be. He was young; he could at a pinch tell a joke as well as the next man; and if he had never had what he called an adventure, he had seen many strange and wonderful things and could describe them with that mental afterglow which still lingers over the sunset of our first expressions in poetry. But there was always that hydra-headed monster, for ever getting about his feet, numbing his voice, paralyzing his hands, and never he lopped off a head that another did not instantly grow in its place. Even the sword of Perseus could not have saved him, since one has to get away from an object in order to cut it down.

Had he really ever tried to overcome this monster? Had he not waited for the propitious moment (which you and I know never comes) to throw off this species from Hades? It is all very well, when you are old and dried up, to turn to ivories and metals and precious stones; but when a fellow's young! You can't shake hands with an ivory replica of the Taj Mahal, nor exchange pleasantries with a Mandarin's ring, nor yet confide joys and ills into a casket of rare emeralds; indeed, they do but emphasize one's loneliness. If only he had had a dog; but one can not carry a dog half way round the world and back, at least not with comfort. What with all these new-fangled quarantine laws, duties, and fussy ships' officers who wouldn't let you keep the animal in your state-room, traveling with a four-footed friend was almost an impossibility. To be sure, women with poodles. . . . And then, there was the bitter of acid in the knowledge that no one ever came up to him and slapped him on the shoulder with a—"Hol-lo, Georgie, old sport; what's the good word?" for the simple fact that his shoulder was always bristling with spikes, born of the fear that some one was making fun of him.



This Girl Was Elegant, In Dress, In Movement.

Perchance his mother's spirit, hovering over him this evening, might have been inclined to tears. For they do say that the ghosts of the dear ones are thus employed when we are near to committing some folly, or to exploring some forgotten chamber of Pandora's box, or worse still, when that lady intends emptying the whole contents down upon our unfortunate heads. If so be, they were futile tears; Percival Algernon had accomplished its deadly purpose.

Pandora? Well, then, for the benefit of the children. She was a lady who was an intimate friend of the mythological gods. They liked her appearance so well that they one day gave her a box, casket, chest, or whatever it was, to guard. By some marvelous method, known only of gods, they had got together all the trials and tribulations of mankind (and some of the joys) and locked them up in this casket. It was the Golden Age, as you may surmise. You recall Eve and the apple? Well, Pandora was a forecast of Eve; she couldn't keep her eyes off the latch, and at length her hands—Fatal curiosity! Whirr! And everything has been at sixes and at sevens since that time. Pandora is eternally recurring, now here, now there; she is a blonde sometimes, and again she is a brunette; and you may take it from George and me that there is always something left in the casket.

George closed the book and consulted his sailing-list. In a short time he would leave for Port Said, thence to Naples, Christmas there, and home in January. Business had been ripping. He would be jolly glad to get home again, to renew his comradeship with his treasures. And, by Jove! there was one man who slapped him on the shoulder, and he was no less a person than the genial president of the firm, his father's partner, at present his own. If the old chap had had a daughter now. . . . And here one comes at last to the bottom of the sack. He had only one definite longing, a healthy human longing, the only longing worth while in all this deep, wide, round old top; to love a woman and by her be loved.

At exactly half after six the gentleman with the reversible cuffs arrived; and George missed his boat.

Bound to Exert Influence

Effects of the Passion of Sympathy, No Matter on What Object It Is Lavished.

It is by the passion of sympathy that we enter into the concerns of others; that we are moved as they are moved, and are never suffered to be indifferent spectators of almost anything which men can do or suffer. For sympathy must be considered as a sort of substitution, by which we are put into the place of another man, and affected in a good measure as he is affected; so that this passion may either partake of the nature of those which regard self-preservation, and turning upon pain may be a source of the sublime; or it may turn upon ideas of pleasure, and then, whatever has been said of the social affections, whether they regard society in general, or only some particular modes of it, may be applicable here.

It is by this principle chiefly that poetry, painting and other affecting arts transfuse their passion from one breast to another, and are often capable of grafting a delight on wretchedness, misery and death itself. It is a common observation that objects in the reality which would shock, are, in tragical and such like representations, the source of a very high species of pleasure. This, taken as a fact, has been the cause of much reasoning. This satisfaction has been commonly attributed, first, to the comfort we receive in considering that so melancholy a story is no more than a fiction; and next, the contemplation of our own freedom from evils we see represented. I am afraid it is a practice much too common, in inquiries of this nature, to attribute the cause of feelings which merely arise from the mechanical structures of our bodies, or from the natural from or constitution of our minds, to certain conclusions of the reasoning faculty on the objects presented to us; for I have some reason to apprehend that the influence of reason in producing our passions is nothing near so extensive as is commonly believed.—Edmund Burke.

First Encyclopedia.

The most ancient attempt at what is called in these days an "encyclopedia" was Pliny's "Natural History." This old work, a very high authority throughout the Middle Ages, is really a remarkable production and well deserves the fame that for so many ages belonged to it. Pliny, who died in 79 A. D., was not a naturalist, a physician or an artist, and did not pretend to be the wisest man of his time, yet such was his interest in knowledge that he devoted the leisure hours of a busy public life to compiling the work which did a vast amount of good in the world and paved the way for the comprehensive encyclopedias of the present time.

BABY'S HAPPINESS DEPENDS ON HEALTH

When your baby is cross and fretful instead of the happy, laughing little dear you are accustomed to, in all probability the digestion has become disarranged and the bowels need attention. Give it a mild laxative, dispel the irritability, and bring back the happy content of babyhood.

The mother should make sure that the laxative used contains no opiate or narcotic drug. A mild, pleasant-tasting, harmless laxative like Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin is ideal for children because of its natural composition and gentle action. A small dose of Syrup Pepsin at bedtime will bring easy, certain relief next morning, and with no distressful griping or other discomfort. You can get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drug store. Your name and address on a postal to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 203 West St., Monticello, Ill., will bring a free trial bottle by return mail. Adv.

Puts Job in Second Place.

A Humboldt rancher returned from a year's trip through the east to find that a one-time neighbor of his, a man noted for his perfect patience, had been having a siege of bad luck. Upon hearing the news he immediately sought out the neighbor to condole with him.

"Well, John," he said, after greetings had been exchanged. "I hear you lost all of your timber through the forest fires."

The other man nodded.

"And they say that the river cut off your best bottom land; that your hogs all died of cholera; that your wife and children had been sick, and that they have now foreclosed the mortgage on your other place.

John nodded again. "Yes, it's all true," he said, looking about him at what had once been his prosperous farm, "all true. Why, sometimes I get almost discouraged."—Ladies' Home Journal.

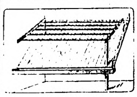
CLEAN ROOST FOR CHICKENS

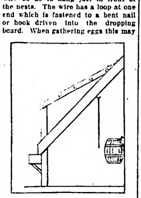
Slope of Dropping Board Sufficient to Prevent Hens From Walking on Its Surface.

(By GEORGE B. FRASER, Edmonton, Alberta.)

The illustrations represent a chicken roost of my own design, which I find to be both cleanly and economical. The dropping board requires a slope of 45 degrees or more, if the height of the henhouse will permit, and it is raised high enough to permit the use of all the floor space for scratching purposes. The trough at the bottom catches the droppings, and the slide door at one end enables these to be scraped out with a hoe or shovel into a box on the floor. I use a hoe to clean the dropping board and afterwards throw a shovelful or two of dry earth over its surface. The roosts should not have so great a slope as the board beneath, so as to enable one to use a hoe for cleaning off the board. The slope of the dropping board not only causes the droppings to collect in the trough beneath, but prevents the hens from walking on its surface. The space behind I utilize for nests. After trying various kinds, I find ordinary nail kegs the best. These should be filled two-thirds full of straw, and a wire loop inserted at the top. They may then be hung in a row, and touching each other to keep them steady, to nails driven into the wall behind. In this way they can be easily lifted off the nails to be cleaned. I chose kegs for nests as the hens are unable to eat their eggs in them and they are about the right size to accommodate one hen at a time. My henhouse has a very large window right opposite the hen roost, so in order to darken the nests I fasten a strip of old linoleum on a wire so as to hang just in front of the nests. The wire has a loop at one end which is fastened to a bent nail or hook driven into the dropping board. When gathering eggs this may be unhooked and the curtain allowed to drop out of the way. Anyone who has never tried using a dropping board, or has used the ordinary flat kind, will find this a decided improvement as far as cleanliness and economy of space is concerned.



Front View.



Side View.

A Good Egg Food.

Cowpeas are not only relished by hens, but it is excellent egg food for them. One successful poultryman gives his experience: The peas, after maturing, were harvested and stored in dry lofts, and thrown to the fowls in scratching pens, where they were scratched over and searched for during the day. After a few days the egg supply was visibly increased and within a few weeks almost doubled that from an equal number of hens kept in separate quarters and fed on other grains. The hens seemed to like the small branches and leaves, and would eat every particle except the hard, stiff stems. The general health of the flock was excellent, and not a single hen showed the least symptom of ailment during the winter season. Considering the ease with which cowpeas may be raised, it seems that everyone should give them a test as food for the poultry.

Breeding Stock.

If a breeder keeps within the lines of his own breeding year after year, he soon has a stock adapted to his system. If he goes out regularly for new blood he is constantly introducing blood of stock adapted to other conditions and increasing the probabilities of loss in his flock. This ought to be of particular interest to those whose fear of inbreeding and desire for change leads them to swap roosters every spring.

Hens Must Have Enough.

We must furnish our hens with grain, green stuff and meat. Moreover, the quantity must be about right of each. If they are not given enough they will have to use it all for body-building and heat production, and will have nothing left over to make eggs with. If we feed too much of some kinds the surplus will go to fat, and the hens will get too lazy to lay.

Ventilation for the Chickens.

Unless there is fresh air to reach all parts of the body, the hen will not do well. Unless there is good ventilation to carry off the moisture of respiration the house is bound to be damp.

DONT'S IN POULTRY SHIPPING

Most Profitable to Use Clean, Fresh Boxes With Care and Neatness in Packing Fowls.

There are a number of "Don'ts" that should be observed by shippers of market poultry: Don't ship bony, skinny stock. Don't ship half-picked, flesh-torn poultry. Don't ship to every strange house that solicits your consignment. First look them up; investigate the references. Don't ship dressed stock in any old box that may be handy.

It pays to use clean, fresh boxes, using care and neatness in packing. Frequently the buyer is present when the box is opened, and a sale spoiled because of the packing. Don't pack poultry after dressing until all the animal heat is out. Don't let some little market fluster cause you to change houses.

Get a good, solid house and stick to it. That keeps the commission man interested in retaining your trade, and oftentimes he will pull you out of a hole caused by a glut. Don't fail to carefully inspect your shipment before closing the box.

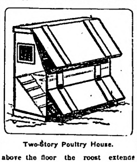
Put in the memorandum on your own billhead, showing the amount and other data. Keep a duplicate yourself, thereby saving much annoyance and frequent loss.

TWO-STORY POULTRY HOUSE

Old Piano Box May Be Transformed Into Comfortable Building for Winter Use.

I recently visited a successful poultry raiser who was using a two-story piano-box house. It was not covered with roofing paper and there was only a dollar or two expense involved in transforming it into the present house. The breeder told me that he kept seven hens and a cockerel in one of these houses last winter and it proved very satisfactory, the hens laying well, writes Dwight Bronson of Chicago in the Farm and Home.

At about one-third of the height, the upper floor was laid. Six inches above the floor the roost extends from one end to the other. At one end of the floor at the back there is a 10x15 inch opening (long way opposite length of box) and a 10-inch slanting board extending to the lower floor. The chickens use this slatted slanting board in ascending or descending from their upstairs sleeping room. The next box is at one end of the upper floor, and there is a dust box on the lower floor.



Two-Story Poultry House.

An opening 12 inches square covered with muslin for ventilation, is cut in one end. There are two hinged doors in front, and in warm weather both are kept wide open. The position of the doors shown in the illustration is the way they are propped open during a rain or light snow.

It is remarkable how poultry will thrive when housed in these small, yet well-ventilated houses. The owner says his birds come through the winter without so much as having a spike frozen. In their upstairs sleeping room huddled together in a few feet of space, which they would warm by natural heat, it can be truthfully said they are "snug as bugs in a rug."

What Hens Like.

If we open the crop of a hen that has been allowed to eat what she pleases, we shall find that she has provided herself with three kinds of food—grain, green stuff and meat. The last named is usually in the form of bugs and worms.

Poultry Profits.

A small flock of healthy hens, given the best of care and attention, will give a yearly profit of $1 per hen after paying for the food consumed.

Get Turkeys Ready.

Prepare the turkeys for the Thanksgiving market. Feed generously the young growing stock that is to be marketed.

POULTRY NOTES

A small pen for the market birds will hasten fattening.

Feed, care and hen sense decide what the profits shall be.

It is not too soon to put houses and coops in shape for winter.

The dull, listless bird cannot be removed from the flock too soon.

A little iron tonic in the drinking water is good during moulting.

In the fall and spring eggs should be marketed at least once a week.

"Clean the nest and not the egg," is the advice of a successful eastern egg farmer.

After dumping and burning the nesting material whitewash the inside of the nest box.

The early moulters are the early layers. It is a good plan to mark them for breeders.

Any good stock dip also makes a good disinfectant to kill disease germs in poultry quarters.

More disease outbreaks in the flock can be traced to unclean conditions than poultrymen generally think.

When the clean, fresh eggs are gathered, they should be put in a clean, dry, cool place until marketed.

Getting rid of all birds as soon as they are two years old will lessen the chances of disease in the flock.

To hasten feathering after the molt, give a tablespoonful of sulphur in a mash to every ten hens twice a week.

IN THE HIMALAYAS

Preaching the Gospel to People of the Hill Country.

Rev. William Greet Tells of Work He and His Wife Accomplished Amongst Tehri and Hindi Men.

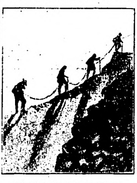
Another report of adventure, toil, and conquest comes from the Tehri Border Village mission among the Himalaya mountains, where Rev. William Greet and his wife are carrying the gospel message to the people of the hill country.

"The past season's touring," writes Mr. Greet, "totaled up more than that of any previous season, and included reaching into some new country. One of my first trips away from our family camp, after the writing of our last letter, was to see poor old Prema at Nauta. There he sat by the little water-mill, blind and very helpless, trying to care for the people's flour. In the judgment of some who have lately seen him, he seems a believer.

"We returned to our home in January for a few weeks and then went out again to stay till April. This time we pushed forward at once to Devasari, a neighborhood of many villages which last season we were prevented from reaching. We pitched our camp on the edge of a pine wood and close to a small ravine, on the other side of which lay a long line of villages. Close by our tent was the temple to which, on special occasions, the people gathered from all sides.

"My memory goes back many years to some remarkable results from the very first visits to simple villagers in the plains who accepted Christ at once and stood faithful till death, but generally where people are laid hold of, it is after continued presentation of the truth. A most encouraging thing during our touring in the hills this past springtime was the extent to which the truth of the Gospel was admitted by a man who has served us for years, but had always passively resisted all we said. He sat with me at the close of a hot journey up a long gorge to a village, where we found only one man, a lad and a child at home. We conversed under the shade of an apricot tree, concerning the Way of Life and other ways, and at the close our man, who has nearly always boasted of the superiority of his own religion, said to the village man, 'We shall have to come to it! This religion will win its way everywhere and all will at some time have to yield, willingly or unwillingly.'

"As I write part of this letter here on the roadside, half a dozen fakirs or sadhus sit down with me to listen to the singing of a bhajan which tells of the One who can take away sin. They have been to the Ganges source away in the snows professedly to be rid of their sin. Some Sirmoori charcoal men come in the other direction and they, too, sit down to listen. Neither of these groups are Tehri men, so I sing to them in Hindu. Presently come others come, Tehri men to whom I read the Lord's words about the house on a rock and that on the sand. One man wishes to buy a Gospel, but has no coppers with him, so he consents to pay for a book with his stick, which answers very well for a walking stick for me.



Climbing Himalaya Mountain.

"After presenting many various arguments in trying to convince the people of the truths of our eternal Gospel we drop back again to the proof they can have in their own heart at this very time in their own village, if they will really give themselves up in prayer to him who was revealed to take away sin. After talking with us the people find themselves, perhaps the same day, in the midst of, say, the slaughter of goats throughout the village for the keeping up of some special festival, or a great dance before their gods right on into the night. Who knows where the Message has really found access?"

PICKS UP FIERY CIGARETTE

Bird Carries Burning Stub to Nest, and the School Hall Is Burned.

Valparaiso, Ind.—A smoldering cigarette picked up and carried by a sparrow to the belfry of Main hall on the University of Valparaiso campus the other day set fire to the structure and almost resulted in its destruction. It was only through strenuous efforts on the part of the fire company and the students that the building, an old landmark, was saved.

The belfry is used by a large number of sparrows as a place to build their nests. One of the students threw a lighted cigarette on the campus and an inquisitive bird searching for something with which to line her nest, picked it up and flew to the tower. A few minutes later students passing the building saw several of the nests ablaze and the birds were flying and screaming.

The fire company was summoned, but by the time it arrived the tower had caught fire from the nests, and, fanned by a stiff breeze, the flames threatened the entire structure. On account of the height of the tower, the fight against the flames was a hard one, but re-enforced by a number of students, the fire company finally was successful.

DREADED ATAXIA

What Active Treatment With Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Accomplished in a Recent Case.

Mr. Francis M. Poole, a harness maker, of Garvin, Lyon Co., Minn., says: "My illness started in 1902, with sharp pains all through my limbs. At first I thought it was rheumatism but the pains kept getting more and more severe and I grew steadily worse. Later a numbness came over my feet. It gradually extended up my legs to my spine and waist. By this time I had lost all control of my legs. Next my bladder and bowels were affected and I lost all control of them. At this stage of the disease I was perfectly helpless and from November, 1905, to April, 1906, I was confined to the bed. My memory was so affected that I thought I would lose my mind. I looked just like a dead person. My lips and finger nails were blue. I suffered with terrible sharp, shooting pains and could get relief only from the use of morphine.

"I was treated by five St. Paul doctors. All of them pronounced my case locomotor ataxia. One said I could not live a year and another told my wife all he could do for me was to give medicine to relieve the pain. I was discouraged and, when my brother-in-law urged me to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, I did so willingly for he had read of their curing a case similar to mine. I started to take the pills in March, 1906, while I was still confined to bed. I took several boxes when I felt a slight change for the better and had a healthier look. I was finally able to go to the country but kept on with the treatment. The bluish color left my lips and my eyes became brighter. I took the pills a long time and the next spring in May I could walk around. In June I went to work although still weak. I kept on gaining and am now working without the return of a symptom of my former trouble and without losing a days' work. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People absolutely cured me and I want all fellow sufferers to know of my wonderful recovery."

Those who are interested in the treatment which cured this case should have our booklet, "Diseases of the Nervous System," which will be sent to every nervous sufferer upon request.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists, or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50 by the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y. Adv.

DANDRUFF COVERED SCALP

3002 Cass St., St. Louis, Mo.—"For five years I suffered with itching of my body and scalp. My trouble began with a rash on my lower limbs which was very annoying, and my scalp was literally covered with dandruff. My hair used to come out by the handfuls and the itching of my body and scalp was terrible. I had used almost all the skin remedies on the market with no results, when I wrote for a little Cuticura Soap and Ointment and it gave me instant relief. Within one month's use of the Cuticura Soap and Ointment I was entirely cured. I cannot discover one strand of my hair coming out and I have not lost a minute of sleep since using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, which entirely cured me of itching of my body and scalp in its worst form. I also find the Cuticura Soap a benefit in shaving." (Signed) Charles Judlin, Dec. 8, 1911.

PLAY PIRATE; NEARLY DROWN

RAYMOND SIMONEAN AND JOHN KUFORD NARROWLY ESCAPE.

Boat Is Tipped While They Are Rowing to Their Island Lair.

Minneapolis.—Raymond Simonean, aged eleven, and John Kuford, aged 10, are in a precarious condition as a result of a boyish escapade on the Mississippi river when they, with three other lads, figured in a "rocking the boat" experience.

The Simonean and Kuford boys, in company with Irving Kurke, Clarence Larson and Walter Fosler, two other boys living on the north side, had chosen "playing pirate" as the subject of the afternoon's fun, and, going to the foot of Thirty-second avenue, embarked in a small boat which had been termed by "the gang" the "pirate ship." They were to row to the middle of the river where, on an island, the rest of the boys had prepared a campfire and roasted potatoes to be enjoyed by the "pirates" late in the day.

Midway between shore and land Kurke arose in the boat and remarked that he was going to tip it and drown his followers. He began to rock the boat and before his frightened companions could make him stop, it had turned turtle, throwing the five into the river. Three of the boys, Larson, Fosler and Kurke were rescued by a man known to residents of the North Side as "Bill, the Boomman." The three lads were landed safely and their rescuer started back to get the other two who were struggling in the cold water.

The Simonean and Kuford lads were pulled on "Bill's" boat as they were about to go under for the third time. They were taken to their homes where Dr. Theodore Tenurson revived them after half an hour's work. The boys declared that hereafter their "pirate playing" stunts would be confined to the land variety.

NOTED ATTORNEY DIES.

Falls in Surviving Paralytic Stroke.

Austin.—Lafayette French, a well-known attorney of southern Minnesota, died here from the effects of a paralytic stroke which he suffered last Monday evening.

Mr. French was born Nov. 19, 1848, on a farm near Loraine township, Ohio. When he was but 5 years of age, his father died and his mother died seven years later, leaving the lad practically alone. He came directly to Austin and entered the employ of Page & Wheeler, a law firm. On Sept. 28, 1871, he was admitted to practice. Mr. French married Mary Vine Richards, daughter of William Richards, who survives her husband. To them were born three children, Maurine French, Varco of Fairview, Mont.; Lafayette French, Jr., and Inez, who is at home.

Mr. French was county attorney in 1871, and was mayor of this city in '85, '86 and '87, and president of the Minnesota State Bar association in 1909. He had practiced in United States district courts and appeared before the United States supreme court at Washington in the famous Emmons station case ten years ago.

He was a Mason, Knight Templar, a member of the B. P. O. E., A. O. U. W., M. W. A. and Court of Honor. His reputation as a criminal lawyer was not confined to this state.

ACCIDENT VICTIM

In State of Coma 72 Hours and May Not Recover.

Rochester, Minn.—For seventy-two hours Miss [illegible] Ripley, daughter of a prominent Rochester family, has lain in a state of coma at Stewartville as the result of being thrown out of an automobile and fears are entertained that she may never recover.

Miss Ripley with a party of young friends left Rochester Sunday afternoon for an auto ride, going to Stewartville. On the road, a culvert was reached, and as the car passed over it Miss Ripley was hurled from the rear seat over the back of the car, into the road, striking on her head. She was rendered unconscious, from which condition she has not revived.

Station Men Strike.

Albert Lea.—A strike occurred at the union station in this city when the office force, including the day and night ticket agents, refused to continue their duties under the new agent, Mr. Ellis. The trouble has been brewing for some time.

$20,000 Jewel Robbery.

St. Paul.—Mrs. Reuben Warner who is the mother of Reuben Warner of Lindeke, Warner & Son, was robbed of diamonds valued at $20,000 last Monday. Mrs. Warner missed the valuables, which were kept in a jewel box in her bedroom, when she was about to retire Monday night. The last time she saw the jewels was Monday afternoon. The police of St. Paul and Minneapolis have been working on the case all week, but say they have no clue to the robbers. They have kept the robbery a secret.

Final Expense Accounts Show Big Cut.

St. Paul.—Final campaign expense accounts of candidate for city, county, state and national offices, filed as the law requires, show individual expenditures ranging from 4 cents to more than $2,000, but on the whole show that the 1912 campaign has cost thousands less than the campaign of 1910, before the corrupt practices act was in force.

The smallest expenditure recorded in the reports is that of Judge Nathan Kingsley, candidate for re-election to the bench in the tenth district, whose total campaign expense was 4 cents. That was the cost of mailing his expense account in a big envelope to Julius Schmahl, secretary of state. This largest expense was that of Julius Schmahl and his committee, the total being $2,075.60.

The largest expense account in Hennepin county shown by the accounts filed was Al. P. Erickson, county auditor, is that of Harry P. Swenson, democratic candidate for county attorney, who, with his committee, spent $858.51. The next was the expense of his opponent, James Robertson, who spent $855.28. The smallest was by Miss Mae Snow, candidate for school director, who spent 10 cents for carfare and 2 cents for a stamp in addition to her filling fee.

The accounts show that in both state and municipal campaigns all the candidates were far under the legal limit, the Hennepin county total being about one-third of the $86,224 limit. This is shown by the filing of expense statements of forty-two of the 159 candidates who filed in the county.

The republican state central committee account showed an expenditure of $2,731.11, with outstanding debts of about $4,000, as against an expenditure of $20,000 two years ago. The limit is now $10,000. Even this expenditure will leave a deficit to be made up, for the receipts were but $2,502, according to the report.

The democratic committee received $3,141 and spent $2,600.30. The fund was contributed by more than 300 persons in small amounts.

The progressive party has not completed its account, but the account of P. V. Collins, candidate for governor, showed a personal expenditure of $898 since Oct. 12. He gave as things promised, "Fulfillment of progressive platform contract with the people—all the people." Under the listing of "purpose" he entered, "Patriotism and development of Minnesota and Mankind." Under "value" he entered "One hundred cents on the dollar."

Lyndon A. Smith, attorney general, and his committee spent $2,276; Governor Eberhart, $955, and P. M. Ringdal and committee, $567.88.

IS KILLED IN "BLIND."

Grover C. Zeglin, Son of Minneapolis Man, Shot.

Minneapolis. — Grover C. Zeglin, 25 years old, son of R. Zeglin, 3621 Park avenue, and proprietor of a summer hotel at Coney Island, near Waconia, Minn., was accidentally shot by a friend while duck hunting at the island, according to reports received at his parents' home.

According to an eye witness, F. W. Bender, a brother-in-law of the dead man, Zeglin, with four others, guests of his for the duck shooting season, were in a blind. Zeglin shot a duck and sprang up to see where it landed when a man whom Mr. Bender said was Adolph Smith, whose address he did not know, and who was directly behind Zeglin, fired at some of the ducks. The charge hit Zeglin in the back of the head, instantly killing him. His body was taken to Waconia, and will be brought to Minneapolis.

Clover Yield Is Heavy.

Caledonia, Minn.—One of the biggest yields of clover seed that has been threshed in this section was on the farm of Charles Mann. It averaged eight bushels an acre. Farmers have begun to specialize in the raising of clover seed and will reap a big harvest this year. One farmer brought in a load and received a check for $1,000. Farmers of Houston county have the largest crop of potatoes ever raised in the county. More than 200,000 bushels are being held by farmers, due to inability to get refrigerator cars.

Insurance Head Resigns.

Minneapolis, Nov. 2.—Leonard K. Thompson, president of the Northwestern National Life Insurance company since its reorganization seven years ago, has resigned. John T. Baster, until now vice president and counsel, takes his place.

Duck Hunter Severely Wounded.

Bemidji, Minn., Nov. 4—In an effort to regain a falling shotgun, Edward Revoir, returning in a wagon with a party of duck hunters from Rice Lake, discharged the weapon, the contents tearing his left hand into shreds and peppering his face.

Fall of Four Flights Fatal.

Minot.—William S. Chambers, the man who fell from the fourth floor of a hotel here, is dead from his injuries.

Former Twin City Man Killed.

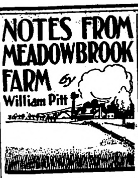
Steele. — Word has just been received here that G. P. Remick, formerly of St. Paul and Austin, Minn., and Stewartville, Wis., but for the last 10 years a resident of Steele, was killed by a Milwaukee train at Andover, S. D., while changing cars. Mr. Remick was 74.

$25,000 Fire at Tracy.

Tracy. — More than a half block of the business section was destroyed by fire here. The loss is $25,000.

NOTES FROM MEADOWBROOK FARM

By William Pitt



Stock like cowpeas.

Pack all fruit carefully.

Take good care of heifers.

Manure the garden in the fall.

Put the machinery under cover.

"The prop of the dairy"—a well filled silo.

Give the weanling colts all the oats they will eat.

The hen that fattens readily is usually not a good layer.

An ounce of salt to a pound of butter is about the right average.

Gather your vegetables before heavy frosts and store in suitable places.

Cuts, lacerations and bruises are treated in the cow the same as in man.

Sweet-clover is one of the most valuable crops for improving run-down soils.

After the haying and harvesting are completed, change the sheep from the regular pasture.

The ewe flock should be run through the mill and culled just as the wheat is before sowing.

Dusty feeding places are very injurious, and lack of sunshine for early pigs is detrimental.

Somehow the poultry yard seems to be the very last place that reforms in stock breeding take place.

The ideal time for picking apples is a matter that must be settled to a large degree by the individual.

A liberal banking of sheds on the north side will prove a boon to the cows when the cold weather comes.

At this season of the year with the coming of the fall rains, a dry shelter should be provided for the sheep.

The value of livestock on the farm for turning low-priced products into good money has never been thoroughly understood.

Fall plowing usually produces a better corn crop than spring plowing, the ground being mellowed by the frost and rain.

It is said by observers that a hog roots in the ground for alkali which it finds in the soil and which aids him in digestion.

Let the hogs husk their own corn. Corn and soy beans, corn and rape, or corn and pumpkins, will produce pork for $3 per cwt. or less.

Fall is a better time to manure the garden or potato patch than spring. The richness has time to soak into the soil during the winter.

Don't leave any rotten fruit lying around in the orchard for the insect pests to harbor in this winter and hatch their young out next spring.

One lesson that short hay crops have taught us is that a crop of hay can be raised along the roadside where weeds had their home before.

The dairyman who is trying, with dry feed, to compete with the man with a silo, might as well make up his mind to get a silo next summer.

Rub the cow's udder with a damp cloth before milking. We would discharge a milker whom we caught wetting the teats with milk drawn into the hand.

Fruit picking must be done carefully, as all bruised fruit quickly decays. Do not leave any decayed fruit on the trees or lying around on the ground.

Cattle uniformly of the same color and general conformation make a much better appearance in the pasture fields or in the farm yard than those of great variety of colors and general appearance.

Have a finger nail torn out by the roots and you will get some idea how it hurts to dehorn a cow. The best way, the only way to that job right, is to take the little horns off by the use of a little caustic potash.

It is a great mistake for a city man who knows nothing of orchard work to expect to make a living by growing fruit even if he should buy an orchard in good bearing unless he has a deep love for the work and an aptitude for learning the business.

It is always best to give slop or drink of any kind to hogs before they have had their feed of grain. When cold weather sets in it is better yet if the slop can be warmed. Ice cold slop does not do hogs much good in very cold weather.

Some farmers have so much to do that manure lies around their yards from year to year, just naturally rotting down where it does harm instead of good. What is the use of mapping out so much to do that often that which is most profitable has to be left undone?

A bone cutter is essential.

Protect young fruit trees.

Sell all the superfluous cockerels.

Good fences help make good neighbors.

Englishmen eat, on an average, 95 eggs a year.

Study individual tastes in the cows, and feed accordingly.

Australia raises nearly 10,000,000 acres of wheat a year.

To most farmers the old cow looks better than she used to.

Better three good cows any time than a half dozen scrubs.

High feeding, unless the horse is used every day is a positive injury.

Keep the sire in service just as long as improvement follows his use.

A little green corn in the stalk occasionally will be relished by the hogs.

Regularity in milking hours means more milk in the pail with the same feed.

The fall-plowed land should not be worked, but should be left rough over winter.

The onion crop in Texas was so large this year that it barely paid expenses.

Better than saving the largest potatoes is to save the seed from the most productive hills.

The yellow condition of the alfalfa indicates that it has not received sufficient nitrogen.

If your garden is too wet at times remember that fall is a good time to put in the drains.

If alfalfa or clover will not thrive in your climate or soil it is pretty certain cowpeas will.

Hairy or winter vetch may be sown in the fall, and will be a very useful early spring forage.

Give the wethers extra grain and send them to market before the pasture is dried and short.

If the pigs are thrifty and doing well that is good evidence that they are being pretty well fed.

If you are tired of making milk on high-priced mill feed why not try alfalfa, clover or cowpeas next year?

Save the wood ashes during the coming winter and you will have the best kind of fertilizer for the orchard.

Many a new and valuable implement is left out all winter more through carelessness than anything else.

Close housing and bad ventilation in the cow stable are favorable conditions for starting tuberculosis in a herd.

Good breeding and good feeding are so closely related that they must go together, one is useless without the other.

If sheep are in a good thrifty condition at the start two months of good feeding will properly fatten for market.

Why not lay by the returns from the next few dozen eggs and buy a bone cutter? It will pay for itself in one winter's time.

A horse may be sound in every particular but if he has not a level head he is never a pleasant horse and rarely a valuable one.

A spool of copper wire will come in handy for repairing all sorts of small breaks. Even common baling wire finds hundreds of uses.

With beef prices soaring, the temptation to sell dairy heifer calves for veal is strong, but the foresighted dairyman does not think of giving in to it.

Apples have been found to keep better if well colored and ripened, though not overripe. Picking should not be delayed till this fruit commences to fall.

Ensilage cannot be destroyed by fire and is the best feed produced on the farm for the cow in milk. The dairyman who does not build a silo is wasting part of his profits.

Fodder that is somewhat green when cut should be left very lightly tied in the shock for a day or two in order that it may cure out before being tied and bound tightly together.

A good salve for all kinds of sores on man or beast, sore neck on horses or shoulders is made by taking equal parts of lard and bees-wax, melt and add half as much turpentine to the mixture.

No breed of farm stock is so highly developed that it can be kept at a high standard without careful selection and culling. The fact that stock has attained a high plane is evidence of selection that must be continued.

Don't overdo the job of feeding cull or drop apples to the hogs by making them a regular or entire ration, as such fruit soon will "put an edge" on their teeth, causing them to be so sore that the animals will refuse to eat corn.

The animal that is just warm enough and quiet enough to be comfortable and healthy uses much less food in maintaining the animal body than one that is exercised violently and is kept cold. It takes food to maintain muscular activity and food must also be used as fuel to keep the animal warm.

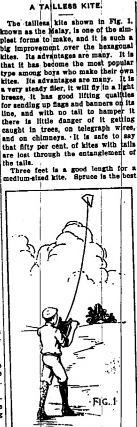
·DETAILS·OF·TAILLESS·KITE·&·STRING·REEL·

A TAILLESS KITE.

The tailless kite shown in Fig. 1, known as the Malay, is one of the simplest forms to make, and it is such a big improvement over the hexagonal kites. Its advantages are many. It is that it has become the most popular type among boys who make their own kites. Its advantages are many. It is a very steady flier, it will fly in a light breeze, it has good lifting qualities for sending up flags and banners on its line, and with no tail to hamper it there is little danger of it getting caught in trees, on telegraph wires, and on chimneys. It is safe to say that fifty per cent. of kites with tails are lost through the entanglement of the tails.

Three feet is a good length for a medium-sized kite. Spruce is the best material for the sticks, but any soft straight-grained wood will serve the purpose. Cut the two sticks of equal length, and make them thin and wide, rather than narrow and thick, as shown in Fig. 6.



·FIG.·1

Fig. 3 shows the bow stick with the bow-string attached. Cut a notch in the stick near each end to hold the ends of the bow-string, as shown in Fig. 4. The proper bend for the bow stick is 1-10 of the length of the stick, plus ½ of that measurement, which will be a trifle more than 1-7 of the length of the stick, as marked upon Fig. 3.

The center of the length of the bow stick must also be its center of balance, and this must be determined and any necessary correction made before fastening the bow stick to the vertical stick. Test the bow stick by balancing it at its center upon the back of your knife blade.

Secure the bow stick to the vertical stick with brads and thread at a distance from the top of the vertical stick equal to 1-10 of its length, as shown in Fig. 5. The ends of the sticks may be notched to receive the framing string, but you will get better results if you drive a carpet tack into each end and tie the string to these (Fig. 7). With the string tied securely there will be no chance for the sticks to twist out of position.

A light-weight wrapping paper, or a heavy tissue-paper should be used for covering the kite framework. The strong, light weight, brown paper, now so generally used for wrapping-paper makes an excellent covering. Lap the edges of the paper, and paste in the same way in which you would put on the covering of any kite, but instead of stretching it tight allow it to have a little fullness. As you will see by Fig. 2, the paper goes on the outer face of the bow stick.

Attach the belly-band at the intersection of the sticks and at the lower end of the vertical stick, as shown in Fig. 2, and make it of the proper length so when held to one side it will reach to the point A (Fig. 5). Tie the kite string securely at this point.

The Malay kite is a strong puller, so it is important to procure a tough twine with which to fly it. Fig. 8 shows a good form of string reel that is easily made. Cut the two upright pieces about 6 inches long, and bevel off the ends (Fig. 9), then make the two holes for the crosspieces, boring them through the two pieces at one time to get them opposite one another. Use old chair rounds, flag-staffs, dowel-sticks, or sticks whittled to about ½ inch in diameter, for the crosspieces. The uprights should be fastened about 4 inches apart. Drive nails through the edge of each upright into the crosspieces to hold the reel together. The projecting ends of the crosspieces form the handles of the reel. One is held in each hand and the reel is turned with sort of a hand over hand movement. Such a reel as this can be operated more handily and more rapidly than the common variety of reels.

(Copyright, 1912, by A. Neely Hall.)

Fatal Irresolution.

Irresolution is a worse vice than rashness. He that shoots best may sometimes miss the mark; but he that shoots not at all can never hit it. Irresolution loosens all the joints of a state; like an ague it shakes not this nor that limb, but all the body is at once in a fit. The irresolute man is lifted from one place to another; so hatcheth nothing, but addles all his actions.—Feltham.

Many Varieties of Shells

There Are 50,000 of Them in the Smithsonian Institution Collection.

Shell life is probably the oldest form of animal life upon the globe. Its study is an interesting one, and even people who are not of a scientific turn of mind find pleasure in looking on the exquisite coloring and delicate beauty of the many varieties of shells and on their wonderful mechanism.

There is nothing which more delights children than to wander along the seashore and gather the little shells which have been washed on the beach by the restless waves. And then, too, when some large specimen is found, with what eagerness the finder, whether young or old, will apply it to his or her ear and hear from within its murmurings, whereby, in the words of the poet, it expresses "mysterious union with its native sea."

In the Smithsonian institution at Washington there is a collection of 50,000 shells, many of them of a large size, others strangely formed, and some of the iridescent colors which rival the hues of sunset.

In examining these there come to mind many fables and traditions about shells. There is the conch shell, which was made into a horn and blown by old Triton and the attendants of Neptune. Then there is the nautilus, of which Pope says:

> Learn of the little nautilus to sail,
> Spread the thin oar and catch the driving gale.

Many years ago a Dutch naturalist went to the Indian seas to study shells. When he came back he told the story that the nautilus sailed in troops over the sea, and were able, when they wished, to fill themselves with water and sink to the bottom.

This, it has been found, is not true. The nautilus commonly inhabits the bottom of the sea, where it creeps about by means of a large muscular disk with which the head is furnished, and it rarely rises to the surface or is seen floating there. The interior of the shell is divided into chambers, connected by a little tube, which affords air. The shell has most exquisite coloring, from pearly white to varied motley.—San Francisco Call Conquering Grief.

The world endures its grief and sorrow with stern and stoical temper. It soon gets over the first severe shock of great catastrophes, even those costing many lives. It is charged with growing callous to bruises. But that charge, it seems to us, somes a little wide of the mark.

What if the world did not quickly recover from its sorrows? What if people gave in under the weight of every grief that came crushing down upon them? They would soon have no strength to endure, no power to resist; they would become mentally and spiritually emaciated. This recuperative force we display is not indifference, not unfeeling; it is a sort of heroism, a philosophy that makes man stronger than his most powerful adversary, makes him equal to the crisis, no matter what it may be.

But in a superficial sense, take the train of disasters that go stalking before us and imagine our giving away before any single one, whether it be devastating flood, earthquake or the Titanic tragedy at sea, and what a lugubrious race we would soon become to stay and overweep at the tomb of our sorrows.—Omaha Bee.

Keeping the Lunch Dry.

Brewer Corcoran, author of "The Bantam," was recently in the south quail shooting, and engaged Joe, an attractive pickaninny, with elemental conceptions of honesty, to carry the guns and lunch basket. Crossing a bridge made of an old tree trunk, Joe slipped and fell screaming into the creek. When he scrambled ashore fears were expressed by the hungry sportsmen for the condition of the food. "Did that lunch get wet?" queried one of the party. "No, suh!" "Are you sure?" "Deed Ah is." "How did yo' keep it dry?" The boy looked up at the man and grinned "Ah done et it back yonder."

WELL TO AVOID VASE

PROPER ARRANGEMENT OF THE SHORT-STEMMED FLOWER.

Many Other Methods of Decoration May Be Adopted to Produce Best Results—Massing Always Gives Excellent Effect.

The short-stemmed flowers are sure to be badly arranged when used by the woman whose one thought of flower holders is a vase.

Never put the short-stemmed flower in a vase, save a tiny one, that may be used one at each corner of the central bowl, to hold rather stiff prim bunches of the flowers massed for a centerpiece.

A low glass berry bowl, or even a shallow finger bowl, if the amount of flowers be limited, permits charming arrangements of the short-stemmed flower. Use maidenhair fern or geranium or ivy leaves for greenery with most of the flowers. Nasturtiums always look best with their own leaves, and the rosa rugosa foliage is so decorative in a low dish that very few of the pink or red blossoms need be mingled with it.

If the supply of flowers be scant, insert in the bowl one or more of the Japanese flower holders that keep the flowers upright and loose looking. The coiled rubber holders that may be easily bent into any shape are more convenient.

Short-stemmed flowers should be massed to give a strong color effect. They may be mixed with several tints of the same flower, as pink and violet in sweet peas, or the different shades of nasturtiums, but look better if in a single kind of tone.

Some good effects in mixing short-stemmed flowers may be had with gypsophila or baby's breath. This is, especially dainty with sweet peas, California poppies or phlox. Forget-me-nots or heliotropes, with a border of sweet alyssum arranged in a round or oval glass dish are artistic. Pansies, roses and nasturtiums look best by themselves. Four o'clocks, if caught when they are open, may be prettily arranged for table decoration, if rather heavily massed.

Special attention has been paid to short-stemmed flowers in the new grouped vases in china, glass and silver. These are usually under three inches high and oblong, boat-like, or semicircular in shape. A new and graceful centerpiece for short-stemmed blossoms has a spreading base of gilt wire that branches into graceful stems, topped at irregular intervals with bell-shaped, quite shallow vases of clear glass. Stood on a round or oval mirror the reflection of these clustered vases full of sweet peas, pansies, nasturtiums is very good. Accompanying it are two end pieces, each with two bell-shaped vases on branching gilt standard.

Low china flower pots, four of one size, and a somewhat larger one for the center, are effective for short-stemmed flowers. They may be filled with wet sand or moss, and the blossoms arranged as if growing. Birch bark holders in baskets, canoes and other rustic forms adapt themselves to this type of decoration, and are popular for wild flowers or for use in bungalows.

Little Things That Help.

To clean a meat chopper, put a piece of bread through it after you have been chopping raisins, meat or anything that is hard to wash out of a chopper and you will have no difficulty in washing it afterward.

To make an ordinary candle serve as an all-night lamp, pack finely powdered salt around the wick as far up as the blackened part. In this way a mild, steady light may be obtained all night from even a small piece of candle.

To make corks fit in catsup bottles take ones that are a little large and boil them in clear water for 20 minutes. This decreases their size. Insert them in the mouths of the bottles while hot, as they expand in cooling, thus making perfectly tight stoppers.

Clam Broth.

Put 50 chopped clams with their liquor and one quart of water into a saucepan; simmer gently for two hours. Season with butter, salt and pepper; pour into hot tureen in which a few slices of well-browned toast have been placed. Beat up two eggs light, add one cupful milk, scalding hot, beat hard for a minute, and when soup is removed from fire stir egg and milk into it.

Swedish Cabbage Roll.

To one and one-half pounds hamburger steak add three pieces of fat pork, one onion ground up, and half as much cold-boiled rice. Season to taste. Parboil the tender leaves of one small cabbage and roll some of above in each leaf. Then put into a baking pan, spread with butter, and bake almost an hour. They are delicious.

Grape Ketchup.

Five pounds grapes, two and a half pounds of sugar, half pint vinegar, one tablespoon ground cloves, one tablespoon ground allspice, a little salt and pepper to taste. Put grapes into a kettle with one pint of water, mash and boil till pulp is dissolved, strain, add the other ingredients, and boil till thickened. Excellent with cold meats.

Scrambled Tomatoes.

Put a heaping teaspoonful of butter in an omelet pan. When hot turn in a mixture made of two cupfuls of ripe tomatoes, chopped; one cupful of fine bread crumbs; one tablespoonful of grated cheese, six minced mushrooms, with salt, pepper and a little sugar. Stir briskly until cooked and serve on toast.

Breast of Veal Broiled.

Three parts roast a portion of the breast of veal, take it up, score it across in even lines, fill these with salt and cayenne and a few powdered herbs. Broil the veal over a clear fire and turn it over from one side to the other till it is done enough. Serve on a hot dish.

SPANISH PREMIER BOLDLY MURDERED

JOSE CANALEJAS SHOT IN CROWDED MADRID SQUARE BY ANARCHIST.

SLAYER COMMITS SUICIDE

Many Arrests Are Made in Connection With the Attack—Confusion Results in Streets and Policemen Are Rushed to Scene.

Madrid, Nov. 13.—Jose Canalejas, premier of Spain, was assassinated here. Manuel Pardinas Zarrate, the assassin, shot him twice behind the right ear, and then committed suicide. It is said he was an anarchist. The premier was killed instantly.

The shooting occurred in front of the office of the ministry of the interior, fronting on the Puerto del Sol, or gate of the sun, a big square in the center of Madrid, the busiest spot in the city. Stepping up behind and slightly to the right of his victim, the assassin pointed a pistol blank at the premier's head and discharged it twice in rapid succession. Then he shot himself before the police had time to seize him.

Confusion Follows Shooting.

The big square at one side of which the premier was killed was packed, as usual, at the time of the shooting. Mad confusion followed the crack of the pistol. Policemen came running from every direction, drawing their revolvers or cutlasses. Dozens of civil guards, a kind of military police, poured out of the ministry of the interior, fixing their bayonets or slipping clips of cartridges into their rifles as they came. Among the authorities it was the evident impression that a general outbreak was scheduled to follow and an attempt to clear the square was begun immediately.

Trolley cars clanged furiously for the right of way through the crowds. Scores of loaded mules, which are continually passing through the square, tied together in tandems of five or six, took fright and bit and kicked murderously. The cafes which line the Puerto emptied struggling mobs of customers.

The pandemonium continued for many minutes before the police and civiles, reinforced by a detachment of cavalry, succeeded in scattering the crowd and restoring at least temporary order. The fallen premier's body was carried hurriedly into the ministry of the interior and a doctor had arrived within a few moments. The premier had died, however, almost instantly.

Many arrests were made following the assassination. Practically every well known anarchist in Madrid, as well as many republicans, were locked up within two or three hours. The police were anxious both to guard against a possible attempt at a general uprising by incarceration of its national leaders and to apprehend persons suspected of having inspired the murder of the premier.

The authorities expressed the opinion that Zarrate was incited to his act by inflammatory speeches made at a meeting Sunday in memory of Francisco Ferrera, shot at Barcelona immediately following the riots there two or three years ago, which nearly culminated in a revolution throughout the Catalan provinces.

Jose Canalejas y Mindos, prime minister of Spain, who was assassinated, was selected to form the Spanish cabinet in February, 1910. He was leader of the monarchical democratic party which came into power on the resignation of the liberal cabinet headed by Senor Moret y Prendergast.

CLOSER RELATIONS.

Sectional Spirit on Wane, Taft Tells Confederacy Daughters.

Washington, Nov. 13.—A greater opportunity to give the South a "feeling of ownership" in the government will be given the Woodrow Wilson administration than was accorded the present Republican regime, President Taft told the Daughters of the Confederacy at the opening session of their annual convention here.

The president declared that "Circumstances have rendered it more difficult for a Republican administration than for a Democratic one to give our southern brothers and sisters the feeling of close relationship and ownership in the government of the United States."

Activity of southerners in official life consequent to Democratic control of the government, he said, would give the South a feeling of partnership in the conduct of the country's affairs that would do much toward eliminating sectional feeling.

Snow Stops Work of Tugs.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich., Nov. 13.—A heavy snow storm setting in the northern section of Lake Huron hindered wrecking operations on the steamer Rosedale, which went ashore off Detour lighthouse in a fog Sunday night.

Norwegian Election Results.

Christiania, Nov. 13.—A general election for members of the storthing resulted in the return of 74 radicals, 24 rightists and liberals and 28 socialists.

LOGAN WALLER PAGE.

Mr. Page is an earnest worker in the cause of good roads, and was president of the joint conference of road makers and road users held recently in Atlantic City.

SOLDIERS CLASH IN A MELEE

BATTERIES B AND D, FOURTH FIELD ARTILLERY, BATTLE.

One Hundred Troopers Spread Terror Through Cheyenne, Wyoming, As a Result of Feud.

Cheyenne, Wyo., Nov. 12.—Flashing into riot at a challenge and a dare, nearly 100 members of Batteries B and D, Fourth field artillery, U. S. A., clashed in a melee in the streets here, spread terror through the town, and drew a guard from Fort Russell on a summons from Mayor Bresnahan who had already ordered the chief of police to swear in a hundred additional policemen and arrest both companies.

Lieutenants Quinn and McBride arrived in time to reinforce the hard-pressed police and arrested 50 soldiers. Privates E. Zilaneky and C. S. Martin were seriously injured.

A feud of long standing had existed between the two companies. In the presence of members of both companies, a trooper of Battery B boasted that he was a "better man" than any member of Battery D. The fight that started spread through the streets. Revolvers were drawn and fired by some of the troopers, the majority, however, using their weapons as clubs.

FIRES AT LABORERS.

Three Hunters Are Killed and Another Injured in the Woods of Northern Minnesota.

Virginia, Minn., Nov. 12.—Brief reports have been received here from the Sand Lake country that Joseph Kuski, aged 15, was shot and killed by Emil Jacobsen, while they were hunting. The scene of the tragedy is remote and nothing definite has been learned.

At Chisholm, a reckless hunter fired upon a gang of workmen. The workmen immediately fell to the ground until the hunter passed.

John W. Nelson of Mountain Iron was shot by Argo Hill while in the woods near Mountain Iron. He died a few hours later.

John Wiroirinla was shot in the face near Mountain Iron by an unknown hunter who escaped. It is not believed the injury is fatal.

August Marker, 14 years old, accidentally shot and killed himself in the Knife River Valley Sunday. His father was with him. Young Marker was standing on a stump looking for the approach of game and placed the butt end of the gun down on the stump. The jar discharged the gun into the lad's abdomen.

Minor Ball Leagues in Session.

Milwaukee, Wis., Nov. 12. — The eleventh annual meeting of the National Association of Professional Baseball leagues, comprising the minor leagues, was called to order in the Hotel Pfister by President M. H. Sexton. Representatives from nearly every club are present, and many important matters will be discussed and settled. The National Board of Arbitration of the National association will meet this evening to pass on more than a hundred cases.

Socialist Spent Only Two Cents.

Des Moines, Nov. 12.—S. D. Mercer of Lennox, Ia., it has become known, made the race for the Socialist ticket for congress from the Eighth district and came through the campaign with spending only two cents. This two cents went directly into the coffers of the government, as it was expended for a postage stamp to notify the secretary of state that Mercer was a candidate.

Republicans in Conference.

Des Moines, Ia., Nov. 12.—An important political conference touching the future of the Republican party was held here between Governor Herbert S. Hadley of Missouri and Senators Cummins and Kenyon. The conference was preliminary, it was said, to an effort which the Progressive Republicans are making to get control of the old Republican organization. Those Progressive Republicans who declined to side with Colonel Roosevelt say they should be the ones to reorganize the Republican party.

BULGARIAN-TURKISH ARMISTICE IS ON

PORTE'S REQUEST FOR EIGHT DAY RESPITE SAID TO HAVE BEEN GRANTED.

MEDIATION NOT NEEDED.

French Premier Says Allies Should Enjoy Fruits of Victories—Other War News.

London, Nov. 14.—A Constantinople dispatch to the Daily News says:

"The director of transportation has informed those making inquiries at the war office that the cessation of hostilities had already been arranged. Simultaneously, another official summoned the chief contractors for military supplies and informed them that hostilities would cease this evening and that the existing supply contracts would be cancelled and no further military supplies sent to the front."

The Porte on the advice of Russia, had previously instructed Nazim Pasha, the Turkish commander-in-chief, to apply to the Bulgarian commander for an eight days' armistice, with a view to opening direct negotiations for peace.

This decision seems to show that Turkey had little hope of being able to hold the Tchatalja lines against the Bulgarian advance.

The situation at the front, owing to the paucity of the news allowed to filter through from either side, is confusing. Clearly there has been heavy fighting, as on Nov. 12 Constantinople reported that numerous wounded were arriving from the front and the almost invariably accurate Vienna Reichspost correspondent has reported the capture of positions by the Bulgarians in the neighborhood of the Tchatalja lines. The same correspondent now says that the main attack on Tchatalja has been delayed two days by rain.

The powers at last have arrived at some kind of an agreement with respect to mediation. It is assumed, however, that now the porte has opened negotiations with Bulgaria European intervention will not be needed.

The diplomatic situation is easier, but the French premier, M. Poincare, in an important speech delivered at Paris last night, did not speak too hopefully, and proof that all danger is not past is seen in the ominous reports from Austria and Russia of unusual troop movements and mobilization in Russia's western provinces.

Porte's Move Confirmed.

Constantinople.—That the porte has entered into direct negotiations with Bulgaria for an armistice is confirmed. Nazim Pasha, the Turkish commander-in-chief, received instructions to open communication with the Bulgarian generals and he has sent an envoy to the Bulgarian's headquarters.

Greeks in Battle.

Athens.—It is announced that 35,000 Turks were engaged in the battle against the Greeks at Yenidje. They had 42 heavy guns. The Turkish losses numbered 2,000 killed, 500 made prisoners and 22 guns captured.

The Greek losses were 500 killed and wounded, including 15 officers.

Turks Burn Own Villages.

Athens.—An official dispatch from Arta says the conduct of the Turks in Epirus was like that of men anxious to destroy their possessions because they could not retain them. Not only the Bashi Bazonks, but the Turkish regulars engaged in the work of destruction in all the territory evacuated.

One detachment acting under the orders of the Janina chief of police, pillaged and burned 31 villages in the Janina district in the last few days. In the Malakassi district, 11 villages were destroyed and the inhabitants took refuge in caves in the mountains.

In the neighborhood of Janina alone there are 6,000 women and children dying of hunger. Eighteen hundred Christians have succeeded in reaching Greek villages, absolutely destitute.

In the villages of Gotista and Donanti large numbers of peasants have been massacred after being tortured.

Storm Sweeps Lake Huron.

Detroit, Nov. 14.—One of the worst storms in years raged on Lake Huron Wednesday. Reports from the vicinity of Alpena and Thunder Bay stated that a wind storm, accompanied by rain and snow reached a velocity of 50 miles an hour in that district and kept many boats in the harbors. No wrecks have been reported.

Deer Hunter Shot Through Hand.

Duluth, Nov. 14.—Louis Carlson of Frontenac, Goodhue county, was shot through the left hand by his own gun while hunting deer near Bovey.

Spanish Premier Entombed.

Madrid, Nov. 14.—The body of the Spanish premier, Jose Canalejas, was entombed in the Spanish pantheon with the highest national honors. The entire nation is in mourning and all civil life and business was suspended in Madrid until after the ceremony. King Alfonso, accompanied by Prince Charles of Bourbon-Sicilies and Prince Ferdinand of Bavaria, infantes of Spain, walked behind the hearse from the chamber of deputies to the pantheon, while 250,000 persons stood with uncovered heads.

POLICE PLANNED ROBBERIES

OFFICERS PROMOTED FOLLOWING ALLEGED CRIME.

Were Forced by Circumstances to Aid in the Arrest of Accomplices.

New York, Nov. 14.—Two New York policemen plotted robberies and carried them out so cleverly that instead of being suspected they were promoted to first grade detectives for their supposedly good work in connection with the crimes, according to Sing Sing evidence read into the police investigation records. The testimony startled members of the aldermanic committee.

Emory R. Buckner, counsel for the committee, read first the affidavit of Frank Paresi, who declared that two policemen known to him as "Al" and "Leo" conspired with him for the robbery of a house in Sixth street and of a woman patron of a bank.

In the latter case, which was the more sensational, it was alleged that the policeman told Paresi and his comrade of a woman accustomed to carry large sums to an East Side savings bank and that the officers participated in a plot to rob her. A bag containing $2,000 was snatched from the woman in a crowd at the bank door.

It happened that detectives near opened fire and the plain clothes officers were forced to draw their revolvers and also to participate in the arrest of the men with whom it is alleged they planned the robbery. Paresi alleged he was forced to plead guilty by threats that otherwise he would be mixed up in the $25,000 taxicab robbery which occurred about that time. Paresi also declared that after his arrest he was beaten and black jacked at police headquarters by detectives.

Mr. Buckner pointed out that neither of the two policemen concerned in the alleged robbery plot, whose names he gave as Luderio Gambrella and Angelo Cava, appeared at the trial of either Paresi or his comrades. Paresi's allegations were given to the district attorney at the time, but he refused to believe the story and it was not read at the trial.

CANAL RATES FIXED.

Foreign Merchant Vessels to Pay $1.20 Per Ton Actual Carrying Capacity.

Washington, Nov. 14.—Pres. Taft has issued a proclamation fixing the rates that the foreign shipping of the world shall pay for passage through the Panama canal. The proclamation made under authority of the canal act, passed by congress in August, established a merchant vessel rate of $1.20 per net ton of actual carrying capacity, with a reduction of 40 per cent on ships in ballast.

American coastwise shipping was exempted from toll payment by congress. It was this provision to which Great Britain objected.

S. D. LAW TESTED.

Supreme Court to Decide Whether Anti-Discrimination Statute Is Constitutional.

Washington, Nov. 14.—Arguments have been begun before the supreme court of the United States over the constitutionality of the South Dakota law making it a crime to sell, with intent to ruin competition, commodities in general use at a lower price to a regularly established dealer in one place than to one in another place within the state. It is the first time that an anti-discrimination law has come before the court and the outcome is being watched with unusual interest because of similar anti-trust legislation being urged upon congress.

Chicago Grain.

Chicago, Nov. 14.—Argentine reports of generally good weather today dragged wheat lower. In addition, Liverpool sent word of Russian cargoes being pressed for sale. There was also a further advance in consols. Opening prices were unchanged to ⅛c off. December started at 88⅛c to 88⅜c, a shade to ⅛@¼c down and declined to 88⅛c.

Corn sagged on account of expected lower temperature, helpful in curing new grain, December opened a sixteenth lower to a like amount up at 49⅞c to 50c, and descended to 49⅝@49¾c.

Mother Killed By Daughter.

Trenton, N. J., Nov. 14.—Mistaking her mother for a robber, Miss Gladys Myers shot and fatally injured her on a Pennsylvania railroad express train as it was speeding past Bristol, Pa., about twenty-five miles from Philadelphia. The train did not stop, but continued on here, where the injured woman was rushed to a hospital where she died. Miss Myers was so hysterical over the affair that she scarcely could tell a connected story. The police were disposed to accept her statement that she shot her mother in mistake for a robber.

CONGRESSMAN IN FAVOR OF SESSION

WILSON'S INTIMATION HE WOULD FAVOR OPINIONS CAUSES FREER EXPRESSION. THOUGHT.

CAUCUS LEADER SPEAKS.

Senator Martin of Virginia Declares Party Should Fulfill Pledges as Soon as Possible.

Washington, Nov. 14.—Owing largely to President-elect Wilson's intimation that he would be pleased to receive suggestions regarding the desirability of an extra session of congress there was much freer expression of opinion among senators and members of the house favorable to such a session than heretofore has been indulged in. Among those who advocated an early session was Senator Martin of Virginia, who is the caucus leader of the party in the senate.

Favors Extra Session.

"In my judgment congress should be convened as soon as practicable after the fourth day of March," Senator Martin said. "The Democratic party has been entrusted with power because of the several important reform measures which were passed by the Democratic house in the sixty-second congress, most of which measures were also passed by the senate, although the Democrats did not have a majority of that body and because of the promises and pledges made to the people of the country in the platform adopted by the Baltimore convention.

Believes Harmony Will Prevail.

"Sometimes, it is suggested," the senator added, "that the Democratic majority in the senate is so narrow and that there are such differences of opinion as are likely to prevent the passage of promised legislation. But I am sure that these suggestions are without any foundation. In fact I have not the slightest doubt about such harmony and co-operation among Democrats of the senate as will secure the passage through that body of all the legislation promised the people in the Baltimore platform."

Mr. Martin also expressed the opinion that it would be possible for the Democrats of the senate to legislate without the aid of the Progressive Republicans.

"We will, of course, be very glad to have them with us again whenever they can agree with us," he added, "but, having a clear majority of the senate, I shall expect the senate to legislate strictly in accordance with Democratic doctrines."

STEAMBOAT SINKS.

Accident Occurs in the Madawaska River, Ontario—Nine Lives Are Lost.

Ottawa, Ont., Nov. 14.—Two persons were drowned and seven others are missing, 24 hours after the sinking of an old side wheeler, the steamboat Mayflower, in the Madawaska river near Barry's Bay in County Renfrew. The Mayflower capsized, throwing 12 persons, including two crew men, into the water. Only three are known to have been rescued.

The bodies of Erin Partchler, captain of the Mayflower and Patrick O'Brien, a hotel proprietor of Cumbermere, Ont., were washed ashore.

The missing persons are all believed to be drowned. They were: C. P. Bothwell of Ottawa; J. C. Hudson, the Mayflower's owner, and Wm. Boehm of Cumbermere, Mrs. McWhirter of Stewart; Wm. M. Murphy of Rockingham; L. Delaney, of Barry's Bay, and Robert Pachelo of Yorkton, Sask.

Three commercial travelers, M. J. Harper, Gordon C. Peverley and J. S. Imlack, all of Ottawa, were found in an exhausted condition on an island three miles down the river during a snow storm last night.

GOMPERS OPPOSED.

Socialists Among Those Who Are Against Re-election of Labor President.

Rochester, N. Y., Nov. 14.—Members of the radical wing of the convention of the American Federation of Labor, which includes nearly 100 Socialists, assert that vigorous opposition will be made to the re-election of President Gompers, and that if he is re-elected it will be his last term. Socialists have been trying for years to win the federation over to their principles, but they have stumbled on the opposition of President Gompers to direct political action. The fight is likely to come up next week when the question of referring the election of officers to a referendum vote of the members is to be taken up.

"GUNMEN'S" CASE OUTLINED.

New York, Nov. 14.—The state has rested its case in the trial of the four gangsters, accused of murdering Herman Rosenthal. Counsel for the gunmen opened for the defense, asserting he would show that none of the four took part in the shooting or in any way were connected with the plot to kill Rosenthal. He said he would show the quartet were lured to the scene on a pretext and that the shooting in front of the Metropole hotel was done by "Bridgie" Webber, Harry Vallon and a mysterious stranger.

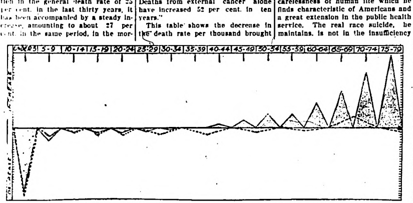
DEATH RATE of THOSE OVER FORTY INCREASING

SAVE THE BABIES!" is a cry that has been ringing through the land with increasing earnestness and with increasing attention, but what of the middle-aged American?

Everybody knows that in recent years the death rate in the United States has been reduced to a remarkable extent, and the knowledge has been received not only with altruistic gratification but with a sense of personal gain by all, regardless of their own time of life.

But now comes Elmer E. Rittenhouse with the facts and figures to show that the reduction in the death rate has been due chiefly to that very cry of "Save the babies!" and the fight on communicable diseases, and that it is confined to those in early life. While there has been a reduction in the general death rate of 25 per cent. in the last thirty years, it has been accompanied by a steady increase, amounting to about 27 per cent. in the same period, in the mortality of persons of forty years and over.



SHOWING THE DECREASE AND INCREASE IN DEATHS UNDER AND OVER FORTY.

"The average length of an American life," he says, "has increased about fifteen years during the past century, and yet the span of life is being shortened. During the last 30 years the general death rate has decreased approximately 25 per cent., and yet the chances of early death after passing the age of forty have steadily increased."

This, Mr. Rittenhouse finds, is due to the fact that while great progress has been made in checking communicable diseases, other diseases, which afflict middle age and later life, have gone on almost unheeded in this country. Among them are apoplexy, Bright's disease, heart disease, and arteriosclerosis. The intense life of Americans and intemperance in eating, drinking, and working have contributed to their prevalence. Above all, our carelessness in regard to life is blamed, and from this cause come increases in deaths from accident, suicide, and homicide.

"While we have every reason," says Mr. Rittenhouse, "to felicitate ourselves upon the wonderful result of the spread of life-saving intelligence, we must not overlook the fact that we have increased the average length of human life only by increasing the proportion of people living in the younger age periods, while the average duration of life of those who pass into middle and old age has been constantly shortened.

"With all its blessings modern civilization has introduced hazards, habits, and conditions of life which not only invite but which have increased in many ways physical, mental, and moral degeneracy. Insanity and idiocy are increasing. Diseases of vice, the most insidious enemy of this and future generations, are spreading rapidly, according to medical men. So far we have lacked the moral courage to openly recognize and fight this scourge. The alcohol and drug habits are constantly adding new victims to the degenerate list and to the death roll. Suicides are increasing, and now reach the enormous total of 15,000 annually. Lynchings and burnings at the stake continue, and are common only to our country. Attempts upon human life by individuals and mobs under trifling provocation, or none at all, are obviously increasing.

"In the United States the death rate above the age of forty has steadily increased, while it has remained stationary in England and Wales. The important organs of the body are wearing out too soon. The diseases of old age are reaching down into the younger age periods. The death rate from the degenerative diseases of the heart, blood vessels, and kidneys, including apoplexy, have increased more than 100 per cent. since 1880. In New Jersey the increase is 119 per cent., in Chicago 159 per cent., in New Orleans 169 per cent. These diseases claim over 350,000 lives annually. The doctors tell us that fully 60 per cent. of these deaths are preventable or postponable if the disease is discovered in time.

"All of our money, all of our energy, seem to be directed against diseases that can be communicated. Is not a life lost from Bright's disease as valuable as one lost by typhoid fever? The annual loss from pneumonia aggregates 135,000 lives, a large portion of which is due to weakened bodily resistance resulting from these degenerative affections. Cancer, a baffling disease of the degenerative class, to which our people in their present physical condition are highly susceptible, claims 75,000 lives annually and is increasing very fast. Deaths from external cancer alone have increased 52 per cent. in ten years."

This table shows the decrease in the death rate per thousand brought about by the successful campaign against the diseases of childhood and early life and the increase in those of later life:

DECREASE.	Per. Cent.
Under age 20	17.9
Age 20 to 30	11.8
Age 30 to 40	2.3
INCREASE.	Per Cent.
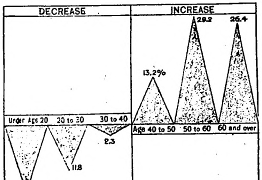
Age 40 to 50	13.2
Age 50 to 60	29.2
60 and over	26.4

"The change in the age constitution of the older groups," says Mr. Rittenhouse, "has been very slight and does not account for the increase. Nor is it safe to say that it is due to the early breaking-down of the weakened lives surviving from the attacks of communicable diseases in the younger age periods, for in England and Wales, where they have had virtually the same decrease in the mortality of the early ages as we have, there has been little or no increase above age forty.

"One thing is clear—the cause is local to our country. Evidently we have not adapted ourselves to the sudden increase in the life-strain due to our complex and intense modern existence. Whether or not it is due to the strenuous life or to excessive working, eating, drinking, playing, and intemperate habits generally, the important fact is that the excessive waste of human life from degenerative causes continues and no general campaign of education or other organized effort has been made to check it.



SHOWING PERCENTAGE OF DEATHS AT VARIOUS AGES.

"The remedy appears to be temperate, healthful habits of life, the upbuilding of bodily resistance to disease. But in the meantime, while we are being educated to apply this remedy, a sane and practical way to secure a measure of immediate relief is to urge upon our people the practice of going to their physicians at reasonable intervale, for health examinations to detect these preventable or postponable diseases in time to check them. Many of these afflictions develop without notice. The cost of discovering and of overcoming them in their incipiency would be trifling and would be the means of prolonging thousands of lives."

Mr. Rittenhouse believes that if the present thirst for knowledge of health and life conservation continues to increase it is not only possible but reasonably certain that during the next 30 years the present death rate of 15 per thousand in the 30 states that keep mortality statistics will be reduced to 10, but this cannot be accomplished without a change from the carelessness of human life which he finds characteristic of Americans and a great extension in the public health service. The real race suicide, he maintains, is not in the insufficiency of births, but in the needless loss of life through preventable diseases. Speaking of the decrease in the birth rate, he says:

"We are not only reducing the fertility of our race and also shortening the span of life, but we are permitting at least 650,000 lives to be destroyed annually which we could save by the application of simple and well-known precautions. If we would save these lives, they, together with their natural offspring, would solve the problem of maintaining an adequate surplus of births over deaths. What we need is not necessarily larger families, but more families. A larger number of small families is surely preferable to a smaller number of large families."

Princess's Books.

The princess royal of England, the only daughter of George V. is said to be the object of the same maternal solicitude as her brother, the prince of Wales. The princess, it is said, shows no interest in art as do most of the family, cares nothing for needlework, as do her cousins and her aunts, but she is fond of books and knows all the good authors, English and French. But her prudent mother only permits her to read those books after a careful scrutiny.

"The library of the princess," says a Paris paper, "unique of its kind, contains only masterpiecse, but in these masterpieces certain pages have been carefully blackened with ink following the fashion of the Russian censorship. The queen is not of the opinion of Ruskin; she does not believe that it is necessary to tell youngs girls everything."

Dickens and Defoe as Editors

Writing about the kind of literary talent that would be most valuable in editorial work today, we mentioned Voltaire, Macaulay and Swift. Among the suggestions that the mail has brought in, the most interesting are Dickens and Defoe. Defoe, however, with his marvelous impression of actuality, would be greater as a special writer than as an editorial critic. Dickens, if he could adapt himself to brief units, would in American journalism today be indeed a mighty power to reach and move the hearts of men. The same genius that went into his fiction has overflowed into some of his critical work, and always there is the great ability to entertain, mixed with a need of using that power for the betterment of life, which is exactly the combination that the ideal editor ought to have, particularly in America, but more in all countries as they become more democratic.—Collier's Weekly.

Warning to Dreamers.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in a recent address in New York, couched in a neat aphorism a warning that dreamers would do well to heed.

"We judge ourselves," said Mr. Rockefeller, "by the deeds which we dream we are capable of doing; but the world judges us only by the deeds we have already done."

Rise of Parana

The state of Parana, South America, which heretofore has not figured largely in the commerce of the world, is about to be heard from, says the Gazeta de Noticias, of Rio de Janeiro. Parana has begun to take great interest in the cultivation of wheat, discovery having been made that the elevation and climate are there as well as cheap lands and every encouragement is now given to immigration by the government, which welcomes European agriculturists and aids them by free distribution of seed wheat. Attention is also given to the cultivation of the banana, customers for which fruit are thus far only in Uruguay and the Argentine republic, to whom about $300,000 worth was sold last year. The yield will be larger this year and a large paper mill has been erected to use the fiber of the banana tree, which it is said makes a superior quality of paper.

Usual Combination.

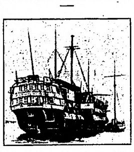
OUT OF THE ORDINARY

Stilts in the Hop Fields

The great hop fields of England have many picturesque sights, none more so than that here illustrated. The man on lofty stilts is stringing the cords for the hop vines, and it is claimed in this way one man can do as much as six in the old way of standing on step ladders. The stilt walker's feet are strapped into special overshoes fitted to the rests.

TRAFALGAR RELIC IS SAVED



After lying in the Hamoaze at Devonshire for over a century the two-decked line-of-battleship, Implacable, one of the trophies which Nelson won for the British navy, has been moved to Falmouth, where she is to be preserved as a national monument. The Implacable was originally the French battleship, Duguay Trouin. She was captured by the British in the wars of over a century ago, recaptured by the French, and again surrendered to the British at the battle of Trafalgar. Renamed the Implacable, she was for many years employed at Devonport as a training ship for boys. In 1908 the admiralty put her in the sale list, but before the sale she was withdrawn to preservo her. She has been restored at Devonport as nearly as possible to her original state.

JUST FOR NIGHT WORKERS

For the men and women who are forced to turn night into day in earning their livelihood a new hotel in New York has made arrangements to turn day into night. One floor of the hotel, the sixteenth, will be operated on an inverted schedule for the benefit of night workers. Persons who occupy rooms on the floor, which has already been dubbed the "Sleepy Sixteenth," will sleep in the daytime, have their breakfasts served in the afternoon, their luncheons in the evening and their dinners after midnight. No one sleeping on that floor will be awakened until nightfall except upon personal orders, and all the routine work of cleaning and bedmaking will commence in the evening.

In arranging the "Sleepy Sixteenth" the management of the hotel outfitted it particularly for the night workers, theatrical men and women, customs house inspectors, telephone and telegraph executives, newspaper men and train dispatchers. The floor will be a hotel within itself, with its own restaurant, elevator and telephone service and its own corps of clerks and servants. It will be a place to sleep in the daytime, and the watchword of the day employes on the floor will be "Hush!"

WHY THE MILK TURNS SOUR

Perhaps you have often wondered why it is that if you let milk stand for a short time, especially in warm weather, it will turn sour and become unfit to use in your tea or coffee; but if it is boiled and then sealed up in some sort of airtight can or jar, it will keep any length of time in any weather.

Many persons believe that a thunderstorm will turn milk sour, and if you ask them what the thunder—which is nothing but noise—can do to the milk, you will find that they have no idea, but they just know it is so. So there!

The reason that milk turns sour is that it contains a small microbe that makes an acid from the sugar in the milk. When the milk is boiled these microbes are killed, and the acid is never developed. Warm air, and even electricity in the air, is very favorable to the rapid growth of these microbes, which are really a sort of plant, and all plants flourish in warmth. The acid which is made by these microbes in the milk is called lactic acid, and if the milk is good and clean, it is none the worse for turning sour, although it is not just the thing to put in tea. For some persons sour milk is a much more wholesome drink than sweet milk, and is recommended by some doctors for the cure of certain diseases. There is a famous Chinese statesman who believes he will live to be a hundred and fifty because he drinks so much sour milk every day.

WILD HORSES IN COLORADO

James and Jess McCarthy, who are mining a copper claim above timber line on Mount Blanca, Colorado, report a herd of wild horses running loose on the sand dunes of the Uncomphagre range of mountains, southwest of Mount Blanca and Mosca pass.

The McCarthys declare the hoofs of these horses have spread out to accommodate the peculiar formation of the grounds over which they run until they have attained the circumference of dinner plates. Many other prospectors to the mountains have seen the horses, and a peculiar story is related concerning their presence on the dunes, which are very rare in vegetation.

It has been told, on good authority, that many years ago a party of government surveyors was sent to determine the scope and character of these dunes, and after many months a searching party was sent after the men. The only trace of their presence was a surveyor's instrument, which stood like a lonely sentinel in the sands.

ONLY 25,000,000 YEARS OLD

First Studio in the Congo

H W DAVIES
To H.M. The King of Belgium

An enterprising Englishman, H. W. Davies, has established what is, no doubt, the first photographic studio in the Belgian Congo, near Elizabethville. It is said to be much patronized by the local chiefs. The premises, though not perhaps quite as palatial as those of some photographers, are certainly picturesque.

QUEER ORIGINS OF WORDS

"O, dear!" is equivalent to O dio mio, "O, my God!"

"Dandelion!" is dent de leon (the lion's tooth), and "vinegar" was once vin aigre (sour wine).

Madame is "my lady," and sir has been extracted from the Latin "senior" through the French.

"Biscuit" keeps alive the Latin bis coctus (twice cooked) and a "verdict" is simply a vere dictum (true saying).

Kings in the earliest days were merely the "fathers of families," and the word is derived from the same source as "kin."

A "villain," before the stigma of disgrace was attached to him, was a laborer on the villa of a Roman country gentleman.

Pope is the same as "papa," and czar and kaiser are both "Caesar."

Queen at first meant "wife" or "mother," and a survival of its early signification exists in "quean" used now only in a bad sense.

"Hussy" was once a respectable housewife; a "knave" was simply a boy.

Quelquechose we have jumbled into "kickshaws," and our "gewgaws" represent the jouxjoux or playthings of former French children.

"Jimminy" is a reminiscence of the classical adjuration, O gemini, used by the Romans when they called up the twins, Castor and Pollux, to help them.

"Powwow" comes from the North American Indians.

The word boss comes from the low Dutch and means master.

Kidnap comes from the napping or stealing of a kid, gipsy for child.

Calaboose, a prison; picaroon, a pirate; palaver, to talk, are all Spanish.

"A rum chap" is simply a gipsy lad; it has no relation to the product of the still.

Pal is a brother, and "conk," for nose, comes from the spouting fountain, the concha of the Romans.

Demijohn comes from the Arabic damaghan, itself taken from the Persian glass making town of Demaghan.

The common slang word "mash" is from a beautiful gipsy word "mafada," which means "to charm by the eyes."

Why should a man be called a spoon? Why spoony when he is making love? Simply because he is a "loeffel," which also means spoon.

A tinker's dam has nothing to do with swearing. It is merely the dam or stoppage, made of flour and water, with which the tinker stops the gap he is mending until the tin or the pewter he is using has cooled.

HORSE OMNIBUS AS CURIO

In London, as in other cities, the automobile is displacing the horse to such an extent that horse-drawn vehicles are becoming very scarce. Not long ago a hansom cab was placed in the London museum at Kensington palace, and now, in anticipation of its becoming a forgotten curiosity, a horse omnibus of the "knife-board" pattern, dating from the seventies, has been placed in the same museum.

MAN HAD SEVEN SPLEENS

An autopsy performed by Dr. A. W. Foertmeyer on the body of Frank Heley, who died at the city hospital of Cincinnati, revealed that Heley had seven distinct spleens. In an ordinary body only one is found. The man's heart was found on the right side of the body instead of on the left.

ASKS KISS, ENDS HER LIFE

Miss Ada Welch of 2206 Olive street, St. Louis, accosted a stranger on the street in Pascogula, Miss., saying: "I have been mistreated by the world, and now before I die I want to feel for once in my life the touch of human kindness. Please kiss me." The man kissed her. Then she drank poison and died instantly.

NO SLEEPING-BAG FOR THEM

Laplanders Preferred the Snow and the Open Air, and So Had a Comfortable Night.

Sir Henry Lucy tells in the Cornhill Magazine a good story that he had from Nansen, the explorer. It amusingly illustrates the hardy health of the Laplanders.

Part of Nansen's equipment for his trip across Greenland consisted of two sleeping-bags made of undressed skins. On the first night of the journey Nansen and his two Norwegian companions got into one of the bags, pulled the mouth tight across their necks, and so slept in the snow with only their heads out.

Before retiring to rest, Nansen saw the three Laplanders he had engaged for the expedition cozily tucked into the other sleeping-bag. When he awoke in the morning, almost numb with cold, he observed that the bag in which he had tied up the Laplanders was empty, and that they were nowhere in sight. He was afraid they had deserted him, and scrambling out of the bag went in search of them. He found the three men fast asleep behind a hillock of snow that they had scraped together as a protection against the wind.

"Ah, master," they said, when asked to explain this extraordinary conduct, "we couldn't sleep in that thing. It was too hot, so we got out and have had a comfortable night here."

NO MEDICINE
But Change of Food Gave Final Relief.
Most diseases start in the alimentary canal—stomach and bowels.
A great deal of our stomach and bowel troubles come from eating too much starchy and greasy food.
The stomach does not digest any of the starchy food we eat—white bread, pastry, potatoes, oats, etc.—these things are digested in the small intestines, and if we eat too much, as most of us do, the organs that should digest this kind of food are overcome by excess of work, so that fermentation, indigestion, and a long train of ails result.
Too much fat also is hard to digest and this is changed into acids, sour stomach, belching gas, and a bloated, heavy feeling.
In these conditions a change from indigestible foods to Grape-Nuts will work wonders in not only relieving the distress but in building up a strong digestion, clear brain and steady nerves. A Wash. woman writes:
"About five years ago I suffered with bad stomach—dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation—caused, I know now, from overeating starchy and greasy food.
"I doctored for two years without any benefit. The doctor told me there was no cure for me. I could not eat anything without suffering severe pain in my back and sides, and I became discouraged.
"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts and I began to use it. In less than two weeks I began to feel better and inside of two months I was a well woman and have been ever since.
"I can eat anything I wish with pleasure. We eat Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast and are very fond of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

SYNOPSIS.

George Percival Algernon Jones, vice-president of the Metropolitan Oriental Rug company of New York, thirsting for romance, is in Cairo on a business trip.

CHAPTER II.

An Affable Rogue.

The carriage containing the gentleman with the reversible cuffs drew up at the side entrance. Instantly the Arab guides surged and eddied round him, but their clamor broke against a composure as effective as granite. The roar was almost directly succeeded by a low gurgle, as of little waves receding. The proposed victim had not spoken a word to the Arabs; it was not necessary. In some manner, subtle and indescribable, they recognized a brother. He carried a long, cylindrical bundle wrapped in heavy paper variously secured by windings of thick twine. His regard for this bundle was one of tender solicitude, for he tucked it under his arm, cumbersome though it was, and waved aside the carriage-porter, who was, however, permitted to carry in the kit-bag.

The manager appeared. When comes he not upon the scene? His quick, calculating eye was not wholly assured. The stranger's homespun was travel-worn and time-worn, and of a cut popular to the season gone the year before. No fat letter of credit here, was the not unreasonable conclusion reached by the manager. Still, with that caution acquired by years of experience, which had culminated in what is known as Swiss diplomacy, he brought into being the accustomed salutatory smile and inquired if the gentleman had written ahead for reservation, otherwise it would not be possible to accommodate him.

"I telegraphed," crisply.

"The name, if you please?"

"Ryanne, spelled R-y-a doublen-e. Have you ever been in County Clare?"

"No, sir." The manager added a question with the uplift of his eyebrows.

"Well," was the enlightening answer, "you pronounce it as they do there."

The manager scanned the little slip of paper in his hand. "Ah, yes; we have reserved a room for you, sir. The French style rather confused me."

This was not offered in irony, or sarcasm, or satire; mining in a Swiss brain for the saving grace of humor is about as remunerative as the extraction of gold from sea-water. Nevertheless, the Swiss has the talent of swiftly contracting from a confusion of ideas one point of illumination: there was a quality to the stranger's tone that decided him favorably. It was the voice of a man in the habit of being obeyed; and in these days it was the power of money alone that obtained obedience to any man. Beyond this, the same nebulous cogitation that had subdued the Arabs outside acted likewise upon him. Here was a brother.

"Mail?"

"I will see, sir." The manager summoned a porter. "Room 208."

The porter caught up the somewhat collapsed kit-bag, which had in all evidence received some rough usage in its time, and reached toward the roll. Mr. Ryanne interposed.

"I will see to that, my man," tersely.

"Yes, sir."

"Where is your guest-list?" demanded Mr. Ryanne of the manager.

"The head-porter's bureau, sir. I will see if you have any mail." The manager passed into his own bureau. It was rather difficult to tell whether this man was an American or an Englishman. His accent was western, but his manner was decidedly British. At any rate, that tone and carriage must be bastioned by good English sovereigns, or for once his judgment was at fault.

The porter dashed upstairs. Mr. Ryanne, his bundle still snug under his arm, sauntered over to the head-porter's bureau and ran his glance up and down the columns of visiting-cards. Once he nodded with approval, and again he smiled, having discovered that which sent a ripple across his sleeping sense of amusement. Major Callahan, room 206; Fortune Chedsoye, 205; George P. A. Jones, 210.

"Hm! the Major smells of County Antrim and the finest whisky in all the isle. Fortune Chedsoye; that is a pleasing name; tinkling brooks, the waving green grasses in the meadows, the kine in the water, the fleeting shadows under the oaks; a pastoral, a bucolic name. To claim Fortune for mine own; a happy thought."

As he uttered these poesy expressions aloud, in a voice low and not unpleasing, for all that it was bantering, the head-porter stared at him with mingling doubt and alarm; and as if to pronounce these emotions mutely for the benefit of the other, he permitted his eyes to open their widest.

"Tut, tut; that's all right, porter. I am cursed with the habit of speaking my inmost thoughts. Some persons are afflicted with insomnia; some fall asleep in church; I think orally. Beastly habit, eh?"

The porter then understood that he was dealing not with a species of mild lunacy, but with that kind of light-hearted cynicism upon which the world (as porters know it) had set its approving seal. In brief, he smiled faintly; and if he had any pleasantry to pass in turn, the approach of the manager, now clothed metaphorically in deferentialism, relegated it to the limbo of things thought but left unsaid.

"Here is a letter for you, Mr. Ryanne. Have you any more luggage?"

"No." Mr. Ryanne smiled. "Shall I pay for my room in advance?"

"Oh, no, sir!" Ten years ago the manager would have blushed at having been so misunderstood. "Your room is 208."

"Will you have a boy show me the way?"

"I shall myself attend to that. If the room is not what you wish it may be exchanged."

"The room is the one I telegraphed for. I am superstitious to a degree. On three boats I have had fine staterooms numbered 208. Twice the number of my hotel room has been the same. On the last voyage there were 208 passengers, and the captain had made 208 voyages on the Mediterranean."

"Quite a coincident."

"Ah, if roulette could be played with such a certainty."

Mr. Ryanne sighed, hitched up his bundle, which, being heavy, was beginning to wear upon his arm, and signified to the manager to lead the way.

As they vanished round the corner to the lift, the head-porter studied the guest-list. He had looked over it a dozen times that day, but this was the first instance of his being really interested in it. As his chin was freshly shaven he had no stubble to stroke to excite his mental processes; so he fell back, as we say, upon the consoling ends of his abundant mustache. Curious; but all these persons were occupying or about to occupy adjacent rooms. There was truly nothing mysterious about it, save that the stranger had picked out these very names as a target for his banter. Fortune Chedsoye; it was rather an unusual name; but as she had arrived only an hour or so before, he could not distinctly recall her features. And then, there was that word bucolic. He mentally turned it over and over as physically he was wont to do with post-cards left in his care to mail. He could make nothing of the word, except that it smacked of the East Indian plague.
